Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touaist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine" It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. With the Tourists, the San Juan Guide keeps fitting company, and the two publications are mailed free to all writing for one or both to T. J. ANDERSON, Topeka, Kansas.

To the surprise of every member of the electoral commission when Bradley, the presidents maker, arose to have his say in the Louisiana farce, he took from his pocket a written decision which had been prepared on the preceding night before he had heard a single argument pro or con on the case. Seeing that his remarkable course was a matter of amazement to the Democratic members at least, he tried to explain by saying that he was nervous and always put his opinions in writing and that in the present case he intended to make changes if convinced by the arguments of the counsel or members. It is needless to say he was not convinced. He had no intention of being convinced. The case was prejudged in Bradley's mind and all the law and logic in the universe could not have affected the result.—Wabash Courier.

Any of our readers going to Chicago, should not fail to stop at the Sands Hotel, within a short distance of the depot, and convenient to the business centre of the city. It is a two dollar a day house, but the accommodations are equal to those where twice that sum is asked. Col. Sands, the proprietor, is an energetic, enterprising gentleman, and his clerks are gentlemanly, able and even obliging, something unusual in that line.

Secretary Thompson has very novel notions about naval affairs. He is determined to retain nobody in the department except their services are specially provided for by law. This is a new idea in the naval service, and is additional proof that an Indiana old-school gentleman is emphatically the right man in the right place. The new Secretary may have a hard fight over his reforms, but they are bound to win in the long run. And Colonel Thompson is such a regular Holdfast of a man.

The New York Times, the great campaign paper, says: "This is not the solution of the South Carolina problem which we have desired." The troops were orded from South Carolina Tuesday, and now Hampton is Governor. Do the same in Louisiana and Nicholls will be the recognized Governor. But there was never much question about the rightful Governor of South Carolina. But who is Governor of Louisiana. That can never be known until they go behind the returns, and yet the commission must not inquire into that.

Hayes has sent his commission of four Republicans to one Democrat down to Louisiana to make a bargain. Mr. Evarts, in his letter of instructions to the four to one commission, says:

"It will be readily understood that the service desired of and intrusted to the commission does not involve any examination into or report upon the facts of the recent State election or of the canvass of the vote cast at that election."

No, they don't want to know anything about the facts of the election as it might disclose a state of things that would be unpleasant for Hayes.

Doctor Lockhart's Testimony.

From the Gainesville Southern.

In the trial of Marshal Hunter for the murder of John Evans, Gen. Mitchell put upon the stand a queer little disciple of Æsculapius, a Dr Lockhart of Polksville, who made the post mortem examination. About the third question asked the witness was, "Where did the pistol ball enter the deceased?" The doctor very promptly answered. "Just above the sterno-clavicular articulation." "Stop! Stop!" cried his Honor; "does anybody know this man?" Whereupon Dr. Green testified that he never knew Dr. Lockhart to drink; but Dr. Rogers said he thought that Dr. L. "might be drinking a little." Judge Rice thought he was "drunk a good deal," and ordered him to jail to get sober.

Scarcity of Money.

There is no doubt but the present condition of all kinds of business and industry is fearfully depressed, and it behooved every family to look carefully to their expenses. Spring is coming on when children are liable to Croup, Whooping Cough, etc. Coughs and Colds will prevail everywhere, and Consumption, with other throat and lung diseases, will carry off many.—These diseases should not be neglected. Doctor's bills are expensive, and we would advise our people to use Boschee's German Syrup. It never has failed One bottle at 75 cents will keep your whole family well during the winter. Two doses will relieve any case. Sold in all towns in the United States, and by your druggist F. E. Davenport.

THE LOUISIANA COMMISSION.

The commission appointed by the President to visit New Orleans and bring about a peaceful solution of the political troubles in Louisiana, commenced their labors on the 6th inst. Judge Charles B. Lawrence, of Illinois, was elected Chairman, and Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, of Connecticut, secretary. The commission first called upon Packard, at the State House, in New Orleans, and held an hour's interview. Packard made a statement of the organization of the Legislature with a Returning Board caucus in each house and the canvass by that body on the day named, in the way prescribed by the constitution, of the votes for Governor and Lieutenant Governor. He claimed that he was the legally elected Governor of Louisiana, and expressed himself satisfied that he could maintain himself in the position if recognized by the President, reinstated in possession of the court buildings, arsenals, etc., and accorded the moral support of the National Government. The commission subsequently called upon Nicholls, who claimed that his authority as Governor was undisputed everywhere in the State outside of the State House. In the evening the Commissioners, in an unofficial capacity, visited a large open-air mass meeting of the friends of Nicholls, at which speeches were delivered by prominent local white and colored orators, including the irrepressible Pinchback.

Joint committees of the Nicholls Legislature called upon the commission on the 8th, and made a detailed verbal statement of the status of affairs, giving the number of parishes and officials that had acknowledged allegiance to the Nicholls Government, etc. The members of the Packard Supreme Court next visited the commission, and laid before them an elaborate printed brief, showing their title to office under the constitution. Then there was a visit from a delegation of District Judges, who stated that the sentiment of their districts was in favor of Packard. These had no sooner withdrawn than the members of the Nicholls Supreme Court, by invitation, called upon the commission in a body and had an informal consultation.

The commission, on the 9th, received a delegation of New Orleans business men, headed by Mr. Black, President of the Cotton Exchange. The commission said to them that they had sought Louisiana but could not find it. They found two Governors, two Supreme Courts, and an alleged dual Government in all departments, but, in fact, by the acknowledgment of all parties, there was only one Legislature, though it met in two halls. The Commissioners suggested that if self-government was desired, and the withdrawal of the army, it could probably be secured in a day, should the public opinion of the State compel its Legislature to meet as one body. The delegation was not inclined to accept the suggestion, maintaining that Nicholls must be defended as Governor to the full extent. A delegation from the Union Club, a Republican association, was received and heard, and a committee from the Packard Legislature presented statistics, records and briefs.

The commission was kept busy on the 10th listening to the statements and arguments of the various committees that called upon them. First they received a delegation of colored men, who portrayed the hardships and struggles of their race, and the necessity for protection. A delegation next appeared headed by ex-Gov. Baker, who, with several others, presented statements and opinions. A similar volunteer committee followed, composed of old Union men of the State. Six gentlemen came next representing the judicial districts of the State, and gave their opinions concerning the allegiance in their several districts to the Packard Government, and the ability of Packard to maintain himself. The Mayor of the city and five members of the Council called and tendered the courtesies of the city. They also presented a statement of the financial condition of the city, the rates of taxation, etc. Other citizens called, singly and in groups, from different sections of the State, and gave information to the commission respecting the situation in their several localities, urging their opinions on the commission.

Wednesday, the 11th inst., was another busy day with the commission. The members of the State Board of Education called and explained the affairs of their department at length, after which the commission divided, and had interviews with Gov. Nicholls and Gov. Packard, spending considerable time with each. In the afternoon a delegation of thirteen colored men appeared with Mr. Pinchback at the head. Among them were three colored members of the Nicholls Legislature. They were all opposed to the Packard Government and in favor of the recognition of Nicholls, and presented their views of the case at some length.

A delegation of thirty planters, representing the Liberal-Conservative element of politics, called upon the commission on the 12th, and did what they could toward enlightening the members regarding the status of affairs in their respective sections. The commission afterward divided, some of them calling upon Packard, while the others conferred with Nicholls. The result of these conferences was not revealed to the public.

THE EAST.

Lynn, Mass., has been visited by a destructive conflagration, over $150,000 worth of property being swept away.

The Sixth National Bank, of New York, was entered by burglars last Sunday, and robbed of $2,500 in silver coin.... We learn from the New York papers that the settlement between the heirs of Cornelius Vanderbilt has again been brought up on account of William H. and Cornelius J. Vanderbilt. All the heirs, with the exception of Cornelius, had agreed to accept $1,000,000, and William H. had agreed to a settlement on this basis. Cornelius J., however, made a claim for $2,000,000, and his sister, Mrs. La Fitte, refused to make any settlement until Cornelius J. was satisfied. Meanwhile the will has been admitted to probate.... The operations of a mammoth silk ring in New York city are undergoing investigation with the result of establishing the existence of a combination of Custom House officials and importers who have been successful in dodging tariff duties on silk to the amount of from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 a year. By some means not yet fully developed, this combination of conspirators have been able to import and sell silks at prices below the cost of manufacture with the duty added, so that a house like that of A. T. Stewart & Co., although operating its own factories in France, is unable to import the goods of its own manufacture and compete with the prevailing market rates, but actually buys these identical fabrics, which have been sold in Europe and smuggled into New York.

The liquor-dealers of New York State find themselves in a bad box very unexpectedly, and great dismay and excitement are the result. It seems that the Board of Excise has exceeded its powers in granting licenses to retail dealers other than the keepers of hotels and taverns, and, a decision to this effect having been rendered by the Court of Appeals, the temperance folk are about to commence a general movement against the retailers who have thus incurred the penalty of the law for selling liquor without a license.

The Hamilton mills, at Paterson, N. J., have been destroyed by fire. Loss $100,000.

Reports from the West indicate that, though some grasshoppers are hatching, not so many [illegible] and farmers are not frightened. [illegible]

There is stored in Chicago elevators 2,100,000 bushels of wheat; 2,[illegible]387 bushels of corn; 745,902 bushels of oats; [illegible] bushels of rye, and 714,981 bushels of barley, making a total of 6,680,767 bushels, against 5,519,672 bushels at this period last year.

Twenty-five buildings in the business portion of Pomeroy, Meigs county, Ohio, were destroyed by fire last week. The loss is estimated at $100,000.

THE SOUTH.

The President's order for the withdrawal of the troops which had been stationed in the State House at Columbia, S. C., since December last, was carried into effect on Tuesday, the 10th inst. On the same day Chamberlain issued a proclamation addressed "To the Republicans of South Carolina," withdrawing from all further contest for the Governorship, expressing himself "unwilling to prolong a contest which can only bring suffering to those who engage in it." Chamberlain also surrendered to Hampton all the books, records, etc., of the executive office, thus yielding up everything, after which he gracefully stepped down and out, and Hampton quietly took possession.

Very extensive revenue frauds in the manufacture of tobacco in North Carolina have recently been discovered. Some thirty manufacturers in the county of Surrey, charged with participation in these fraudulent transactions, have been indicted. The frauds discovered are estimated by revenue agents to exceed one-third of the total amount of internal revenue taxes collected in that State.... Rather late in the day, the Grand Jury of Cecil county, Md., where the notorious Bennett-May duel was fought some months ago, have been instructed to indict all the parties, principal and otherwise, engaged in that affair.

The Keefer family, arrested at Fort Smith, Ark., on a charge of being the Kansas Benders, after examination before United States Judge Parker, at that place, were released. The parties from Kansas failed to identify them.

POLITICAL.

A Washington dispatch says that since President Hayes came into office two clerks have been kept busy at the White House, briefing and indexing applications for and recommendations to office. Over 4,000 applications for office have been received by the President, exclusive of those received by members of the Cabinet.

The President, it is said, contemplates declining to hear office-seekers in person and to refer them to the several departments.

The Associated Press agent telegraphs from Washington: "It can be stated on authority that the President made no bargain whatever with, or promised anything to, Chamberlain as a condition of his retiring from the Governorship."

WASHINGTON.

The Secretary of the Treasury has issued the forty-fifth call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds of 1865, May and November. The call is for $10,000,000, of which $9,500,000 are coupon and $500,000 registered, the principal and interest to be paid at the treasury on and after the 5th of July next, interest to cease on that day. The following are the descriptions of the bonds: Coupon bonds—$500, No. 46,001 to 49,800, both inclusive; $1,000, No. 132,001 to 141,000, both inclusive. Registered bonds—$5,000, No. 7,601 to 7,764, both inclusive.... Secretary Sherman has just made an important decision relative to the course to be pursued by the Treasury Department in the suits against the persons whose names are on the bonds given for the honest and faithful discharge of their duties by the revenue officials convicted of complicity in the whisky frauds. It is announced that the policy of the Secretary of the Treasury will be that of no compromise with the bondsmen, whose principals have violated their trusts and subjected the revenue to enormous losses in consequence of their rascality, and that suits to recover the amount of these bonds will be vigorously prosecuted.

Clerk Adams says that thus far the roll-call of the new House indicates a Democratic majority of about twelve. Of the 293 certificates, 285 have been received.

Secretary Sherman intends to discontinue the office of Appraiser of Customs wherever he can do so without injuring the service. He has discontinued the offices at Memphis and Norfolk, and will very soon at Toledo, O.

President Hayes will occupy, during the heated term, the house at the Soldiers' Home, in which Mr. Lincoln lived in summer during his Presidency. This is something quite unusual in Washington society, and is a practice which has not been observed since the war days.

GENERAL.

The friends and relatives of Gen. Custer have prepared an amendment which they propose to have attached to the Army bill at the extra session of Congress. This appropriates $10,000 for the erection of a monument to Custer and his associates upon the battle-field where they fell. It is thought by them that this would be better than to have the bodies removed East.

New York papers chronicle the death of Dr. William A. Muhlenburg, the well known Episcopal clergyman and hymn-writer. He was the author of "I would not live alway," and many other popular hymns.

The Supreme Court of the United States has tapped the Centennial fund in the interest of the national treasury, its decision being that the Government is a preferred creditor, and must have the $1,500,000 which the people's representatives loaned to that enterprise before the stockholders and other interested parties can be allowed to dispose of the profits.

Over $500,000 worth of fresh beef was shipped from New York to England during the month of March.

FOREIGN.

We have this bulletin of news from the City of Mexico: "The disaffection is spreading. The oldest adherents of Diaz denounce him, and the spirit of revolt has spread throughout the army. President Diaz is sick in bed, and various rumors as to the character of his disease are current. The manifesto of Lerdo created a sensation. The constitutional party are rapidly organizing. The troops of the state of Morelos have pronounced for Lerdo. The troops in other parts of the country are greatly discontented, and a general outbreak may be expected any day."... Finzel & Sons, Bristol, Eng., who some time ago closed their sugar refinery, said to be the largest in the world, have placed their affairs in the hands of their creditors. Their liabilities are estimated at $2,500,000.... A renewal of the Turkish atrocities in Bulgaria is threatened.

The latest advices from Mexico, via New Orleans, represent that the reaction against Diaz has set in in earnest, and that the whole country will soon be involved in another revolution.... News comes from St. Petersburg that the Czarowitz has declared categorically in favor of peace, and that Russia urges Montenegro to make concessions.... There is a contest of jurisdiction between Canales, commandant at Matamoras, and Porfirio Diaz, usurping President of Mexico, the object in dispute being the possession of Cortina, the veteran revolutionist and cattle-thief, now a prisoner under sentence of death in Canales' department. Diaz has sent a Government vessel to the Rio Grande, and demanded the surrender of Cortina, but Canales claims the right of possession because the bandit was condemned under state law.

Turkey objects to the protocol and its accompanying declarations, [illegible] stating to the sovereign officials that the Bulgarian massacres were the result of intrigues of foreign agitators, and that the promised reforms were being carried out.

Constantinople has been visited by another disastrous conflagration. Nearly 800 houses in the Greek quarter were burned.

THE SOUTH POLE.

Explorations and Expeditions in Search of an Antarctic Continent.

Not so much for the purpose of discovering new lands in the south as to obtain information concerning the South magnetic pole—a matter of much importance, the British Government fitted out the Erebus and Terror, and placed them under James Ross, with Crozier as his second in command. They left England in 1839, and did not see it again for four years.

Wonderful it was to see a raging volcano in such a region. A long stretch of land was seen to be marked by two magnificent mountains, one of which, an active volcano, 12,000 feet high, received the name of Mount Erebus; while the other, an extinct volcano of somewhat less height, was named after the companion ship Terror. An unmistakable volcano was Erebus. Such a magnificent combination of volcanic fire and endless ice probably never before met human eye, for Mount Hecla, in Iceland, must be far inferior to it.

Ross did not winter in that remote region; indeed, so far as is known, no human being ever passed a winter among the Antarctic ice. Ross spent three summers in his exploration, while he housed his ships for the intervening winters, either at Tasmania, or the Falkland islands. Among the early explorers of the mysterious Southern ocean were Juan Fernandez, Dirk Gerrits, Pedro Fernandez de Quiros, Capt. Cook, Weddell, Dumont d'Urville and Wilkes. We might, also, if their discoveries had borne rich fruit, notice more fully the expedition of Kerguelen, who discovered the island named after him a little more than a century ago; as also those of Smith, Powell, Palmer and Bellinghausen, fifty to sixty years ago, resulting in the discovery of South Shetland, South Orkney, Palmer's Land and Alexander Land. Those fitted out by Messrs. Enderby, the liberal and energetic promoters of whale and sea fishing in the Southern ocean, are worthy of brief record, for two vessels, placed by them under Capts. Biscoe and Balleny, sailed into regions which led to the discovery of Enderby Land, Balleny Land and Sabrina Land.

One object of Sir James Ross' expedition was, if possible, to reach the South magnetic pole—a different point from the South terrestrial pole. The great icy barrier prevented the realization of that hope. A few years ago Lieut. Moore, in the Pogoda, set off to make magnetic observations in the Antarctic circle that had not been visited; he did so, and rendered great service to science, but did not get within 1,400 miles of the tantalizing pole.

The reader will remember that two years ago the astronomers of the whole world were greatly interested in a transit of Venus, correct observations of which would, it was believed, afford data for calculating the true distance of the sun from Venus, from the earth, and from all other planets. It was desirable to make the observations at many different spots, widely separated both in latitude and in longitude; and one of the spots selected was Kerguelen's island, already mentioned, situated between the Cape of Good Hope and Australia, but farther south than either. Astronomers from England, Germany and the United States landed on the island and did good work there, but the roughness of the climate was a great trial to them. Although farther from the South pole than any part of England is from the North pole, the weather was nearly always stormy, and the temperature verging on the freezing point, even in the summer of that hemisphere.

What we know of the South pole, then, is simply this: That no one has got within 700 or 800 miles of it; that icy barriers are met with quite eclipsing anything known in the North Frigid zone; that mountains have been seen (one shooting forth volcanic flames) loftier than any discovered by our northern explorers; that all the land is covered with snow at all seasons; that no human being has been met with beyond fifty-six degrees of latitude; that no vegetable growth, except lichens, has been seen beyond fifty-eight degrees of latitude, and that no land quadruped is known to exist beyond sixty-six degrees of latitude.

Davis in the Senate Chamber.

Senator Davis looks as if he enjoyed himself vastly more than in the Supreme Court room. All the Justices there look uncomfortable, whether they feel so or not, sitting in lonely state in a straight line on that lofty "bench" in their troublesome gowns. No wonder they all get so enormously fat and heavy jowled. Judge Davis' elephantine figure, folded in that long-tailed robe of satin, was a sight for commiseration. Now, in a morning coat, he looks considerably relieved. He swings his Senatorial chair about, and throws his mighty arms out over the other desks, spreads himself, and at last has room to spread. He has a strong and noble countenance. There is not another left in the Supreme Court room at once so benignant and trust-inspiring. It is emphatically "a good face," while it is a strongly intellectual one. What a pity he cannot subdue that "ponderosity" of his sufficiently to leave the action of that large brain unclogged. That he has so much, and uses it so well, in spite of all, proves him indeed a mighty man. The resolutions of the bar of the Supreme Court, in which they record "their high sense of the learning, ability, love of justice, and fearless independence which he brought to the discharge of his judicial duties," are a record of which the retired Judge may well be proud. But he will find in the Senate of the United States a larger and more congenial sphere—with a future!—Mary Clemmer.

What a Trade Dollar Is.

The "trade dollar" is a better coin than any other of the silver coins prescribed in the Revised Statutes. It was coined for foreign trade, and weighs 420 grains; whereas, two of the half dollars provided for in the same law weigh only about 385.80 [illegible] The foreigners would not [illegible] this debased coin, and the trade dollar is a necessity.

No More Stovepipe Hats.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales says so, and that will probably settle the matter. At least, he says he isn't going to take any there in his'n. He affirms that, early the present spring, he will appear on Rotten Row in a "low-crowned hat." There is no place in the wide world like Rotten Row in which to introduce a new fashion, while there is no one like an heir to a throne to bring a new fashion into vogue. For more than three centuries no English gentleman has dared to walk or ride on that famous street without having his head surmounted by a stove-pipe. In early times they were made of Spanish wool, were very hot in warm weather, and very heavy in all weathers. After the Hudson Bay Company was organized the fur of beaver was substituted for wool, and a lighter and much more elegant hat was made. The hat was called the "beaver," and its use was almost entirely limited to the nobility and gentry.

"Stovepipe" hats became fashionable among the masses about the year 1840, when an ingenious Frenchman invented and brought out a hat with a light body and a covering of silk plush. Though the style has been changed to some extent twice a year ever since that time, hats made of the material above named have generally been worn by gentlemen on dress parade till the present. When Kossuth visited this country he wore a low-crowned, soft, felt hat, and a similar hat, rejoicing in his name, soon became "all the rage." During the political canvass that resulted in the election of Gen. Taylor to the Presidency the "rough and ready" hat made its appearance. Fremont, it is said, was the originator of the hat known as the "wide-awake." It was very similar to the "ragged-edge," which was named for the pastor of Plymouth Church. The Mexican sombrero has long been the favorite hat in the Southwestern States and Territories, while the planter's hat has been much worn throughout the South. In Boston, however, and in all places that desire to be like Boston, the genuine, orthodox stovepipe has alone been regarded as just the thing for a gentleman to wear.

There are few bad qualities that cannot be set down against the stovepipe hat. It is at once ungraceful, awkward, and uncomfortable. It is the favorite target for boys armed with snowballs. It is the delight of the wind, while a new one is sure to bring up a shower, if the owner has no umbrella. It invites sunstroke, and is said to be the leading cause of baldness. It is very uncomfortable when on the head and very unhandy when it is off. A man looks as awkward when holding one in his lap as when holding a baby. If he puts it on a seat beside him, some one is sure to sit on it, while, if he places it on the floor, it is certain to be mistaken for a spittoon. It is not the thing for a sunny, a rainy, or a snowy day. It only looks well when it is new, and the shine will not remain on it much longer than it will on a pair of boots. An old-fashioned stovepipe only serves to remind people that the wearer of it has seen better days, while a "warmed-over" plug conveys the idea that the owner is trying every makeshift he can in order to bridge over present embarrassments.—Chicago Times.

Japanese Finances.

The Japanese Government finds itself financially straitened by the continued drafts of its new civilization and the assumption of the feudal tenures, and the budget just issued cuts down the expenditures from 68,000,000 yen (99 cents) to 62,000,000. Some of the normal and girls' high schools suffer by this retrenchment. The Emperor and his family have a personal revenue of only 827,000 yen. He has lately been on a journey with the Empress to Kioto, to visit the ancestral tombs and open a railroad. This public association with the people, in company with the Empress, the first instance of which was within a few months, is having a great popular influence. A small rebellion against the abolition of the feudal system has been suppressed. The new American organ, the Tokio Times, warmly advocates a customs revenue and protection to native industry, and is of course in hot controversy with the old British periodicals.

Simple Cure for Earache.

Many years ago two of my children, one aged 3, the other 1 year, had a terrible attack of earache all one day and night. I worked over the little sufferers, doing all I could think of, and trying remedies suggested by our neighbors. On the second morning of the attack, a lady came in and asked me if I had tried burnt sugar. I told her no, that I had not heard of that. She told me to put some live coals on a tin plate, sprinkle some brown sugar on them, set a funnel over it, and then hold the child so that the smoke could go into the ear. I did so, using the same remedy for both little ones. The result was marvelous; the pain stopped instantly, and soon both little sufferers were in a sound, refreshing sleep.—Josephine C. Long, in the Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph.

A Parisian matrimonial advertisement says: "A grandmother, who is infirm, wishes to marry her granddaughter, 18 years of age, pretty, honorable, stylish, and with 12,000,000 francs, to a young man who is serious, and has a title and some fortune." Another advertisement runs: "A gentleman of mature age, and a literary man, will marry a lady of his own country and political party (anti-Bonapartist), if she be 40 years of age and have more than 40,000 francs in the funds. If not, no."

FRIGHTFUL CALAMITY.

Burning of the Southern Hotel in St. Louis—A Large Number of Guests Meet a Fiery Death.

One of the most appalling calamities that has ever befallen the city of St. Louis took place at an early hour on the morning of the 11th inst., involving the destruction by fire of the large and fine Southern Hotel, and the loss of a large number of human lives. The fire, according to the accounts before us, caught in the store-room in the basement of the hotel, and was first seen coming through the ground floor, just north of the office, and in ten minutes it had ascended the elevators and rotunda, and spread itself over the sixth floor, under the roof. This floor was occupied entirely by employes of the hotel, the largest part of whom were women. The fire spread rapidly, filling every room and hall with flames and smoke, and the scene was of the most terrible description. Frantic men, women and children ran through the halls, shrieking in the most heart-rending manner, in their wild and desperate efforts to escape. The smoke was so dense in some of the halls that the gas-jets were extinguished, rendering egress, even to those most familiar to the building, a matter of great difficulty. The fire department was on the spot promptly, and hundreds of people congregated at the scene, ready and willing to render any aid necessary. The density of the smoke in the halls drove many guests and boarders back into their rooms, and they rushed to the windows as a means of escape. Ladders were raised as soon as possible, and women and children, with nothing but their night-clothes on, were thus taken from the burning building. Some fainted from fright, and others sank exhausted to the ground from nervous prostration. The ladders generally were too short to reach to the fifth and sixth stories, but, by hoisting some of them on the one-story balcony, on the north side of the building, these floors were reached, and all those at the windows rescued. The Skinner fire-escape was also brought promptly into service, and was the means of saving many lives. While this work was going on, some frightful scenes occurred. One man, who had been occupying a window on the Walnut street front of the hotel, became desperate at the seeming delay in effecting his escape. With nervous hands he tore the sheets from his bed into strips, tied them together, and, fastening this improvised rope to the window-sill and disregarding the fact that it did not reach more than twenty feet, he let himself down hand over hand. The men below who saw his position turned away their heads to avoid witnessing the sickening event that was inevitable. Finally he reached the end of the sheet, and then, for the first time, he seemed to realize his position. He stopped, threw his head back, revealing a ghastly face, and swung slowly to and fro, swayed by the breeze which the roaring flames above created. His limbs swung around convulsively, as though to catch upon something, then he let go, and groans went up from hundreds as he whirled round and round and finally struck on the stone flagging with a sickening thud. He was carried to a saloon across the street, and died in a few moments. Two other men jumped from the fourth-story windows, one of whom seemed not to be dangerously hurt, while the other expired in a few moments. A woman in the fifth-story window on the Fifth-street front became panic-stricken and jumped out. She alighted on her feet and was carried to the St. James Hotel still alive. Her husband, who had been standing by her side, then tore up the bedding, and let the strip, so made, out of the window. To this firemen attached a rope which the man hauled up, making it fast to the window-sill, and safely descended by it.

A man named J. E. Wilson jumped from the fourth-story window and was killed. Andrew Ensmen and Mrs. Scott met their death in the same way. The mortality among the female help of the hotel is feared to be great. There were some 200 of them, all of whom were lodged in the upper story of the building. The panic among them was terrible, and a number of them jumped from the upper windows on the Elm street or rear side of the house.

At a quarter past 2, or about half an hour after the fire was discovered, the entire roof was ablaze, and the flames were rapidly descending to the lower stories. A half hour later the floors and interior walls began to fall. The roof fell in, and there is now nothing left of one of the finest hotels in the country, except the Walnut street front, and parts of the Fourth and Fifth street faces.

The loss on the building and contents is from $750,000 to $1,000,000.

Graphic Description of the Fire, Together with Attending Scenes, Incidents and Escapes.

A letter from St. Louis gives the following additional details of the terrible calamity:

The particulars of the disaster exceed, in their intense and distressing features, those of any of like character, and are set forth in their grim and appalling ghastliness, with sickening and harrowing detail. The frantic efforts of hundreds of people to escape an awful death before the eyes of thousands of their fellow men, unable to render the slightest aid, forms a most agonizing picture. Timid and weak women driven to frenzy, leaped from dizzy heights to escape one horror, and met another on cruel, flinty pavements. Strong men swung themselves from perilous elevations and clung convulsively, desperately, to the frailest support, till the scorching flames or physical exhaustion compelled them to loosen their hold and fall with a deadening thud at the feet of the frightened crowd, who stood with outstretched hands, vainly essaying to break the force of the frightful descent. Wild, despairing faces—faces never to be looked upon and forgotten—faces blanched with that awful dread which impending death brings to the boldest, crowded to the half-open windows, gazing wildly on the mighty sea of upturned faces below, with the fire, cruel, certain, remorseless, behind them; before them a yawning gulf where death equally horrible and certain awaited them. As their cries for help broke on the midnight air, men wept like children at the sight, women fainted at the sound, all praying to heaven to succor the doomed wretches. The spectators wrung their helpless hands in mortal agony as one by one the distorted faces dropped back into the lurid flames, or leaped forth to certain death. Alternate cheers and shudders escaped the multitude on on the street below—cheers at the intrepid daring of some stout hand and heart rescuing an unfortunate victim—shudders as from the burning pile came a bundle, or what seemed a bundle, hurling itself through the sea of flame and smoke, and revealing a mass of quivering, mangled flesh at their feet. To read of such scenes chills the blood, but to witness such a spectacle is to have the scene [illegible] on the tablets of the memory.

The whole history of the progress of the conflagration is a repetition of heroic deeds, and harrowing incidents. Miss Kate Claxton, the actress, who it will be remembered was on the stage of the Brooklyn Theater at the time of the recent fire, playing the character of Louise in the "Two Orphans," and who had such a remarkable escape from that holocaust, was also a guest at the Southern. She occupied a room on the third floor, and was awakened from a sound sleep by a loud cry of "fire!" from the hall. Jumping out of bed, she groped her way to the door and opened it, to find that the place was dense with smoke, and that immediate action was necessary. Slipping into the scantiest of garments, she threw up one of the windows to ascertain the chance of escape by that route, and, finding that it was [illegible], she concluded that her only hope of escape lay through the hallway. People were screaming and hurrying past her door, and she determined on the instant to cast her lot with them. There were no lights, and what was done had to be done in the darkness. [illegible] the direction of the stairway, and before proceeding far was materially assisted by a gentleman, who seized hold of her arm and pushed her along with a proper appreciation of the need for haste. When she came to the stairway she fell down, and rolled for some distance. After getting to the bottom, not being badly hurt, she was able to get up expeditiously and make her escape. She lost every article of clothing she had in the hotel, save what she had on.

One of the saddest incidents of the conflagration was the death of the Hon. George Munster, M. P., of England, who recently married the daughter of a prominent physician of St. Louis. He was spending his honeymoon at the hotel. By wonderful presence of mind on the part of his wife both escaped out of the burning building, but their fright and the confusion and horror of the scene had overturned Mr. Munster's reason, and under an insane impulse he rushed back into the building, and, putting a pistol to his head, blew his brains out.

Mr. Edward P. [illegible], a commercial traveler of New York, certainly owes his escape to his remarkable coolness and presence of mind. He says he was awakened by hearing a noise as of somebody scuffling or quarreling in the hall. The smoke and flames of the fire very quickly told the whole story, and, instead of madly rushing into the hall and endeavoring to make his way out through the smoke and flames, he closed his room door, got up and shut the transom above it, and then coolly commenced to dress himself. He went to the beds, of which there were two in his room, and, taking the blankets from them, cut them into strips to make a rope with which he intended to lower himself to buildings immediately under the window. He had tied his blanket strips together; then, to be certain of having enough rope to reach the ground, he took the counterpanes off the beds and added them to the blanket strips. He then lowered his blanket rope, to which was attached, by those below, a stouter and larger rope, which he hauled up. This rope he managed to throw up to some women in the window on the floor above, who made it fast to the leg of the bed, and thus himself and those in the room above escaped, uninjured.

A woman in the fifth-story window on the Fifth street front became panic-stricken and jumped out. She alighted on her feet and was carried to the St. James Hotel still alive. Her husband who had been standing by her side, then tore up the bedding, and let the strip, so made, out of the window. To this firemen attached a rope which the man hauled up, making it fast to the window-sill, and safely descended by it.

A man appeared at one of the fourth-story windows. He was in his night dress, and his demeanor exhibited frantic excitement. He yelled to the crowd, "What shall I do?" Several in the crowd as frantic as himself cried "Jump." The man appeared to hesitate. "Jump," "Jump," came from a thousand hoarse throats. Standing on the window-sill, the man jumped. The figure wavered in its flight, struck the corner of the balcony, and, bounding off, fell on to the pavement, striking there with a heavy thud, on the head and shoulders. The man rebounded with a horrid cry and fell back.

Another man in the fifth story sat in the window with two sheets in his hands. These he finally tore in strips, hastily twisted them into a rope, fastening this improvised rope to the window-sill, and, though it did not reach more than twelve feet, he crawled out and let himself down hand over hand very slowly. Finally he reached the end of the sheet and then for the first time he seemed to realize his position. He stopped, threw his head back, revealing a ghastly face, and swung slowly to and fro, swayed by the breeze which the roaring flames above created. His limbs swung around convulsively as though to catch upon something, be it ever so slight; then he let go, and groans went up from hundreds of throats as he whirled round and round, and finally struck on the stone flagging, dead.

At a corner window a young lady appeared with a rope in her hands, which she securely fastened to the window and began her descent, coming first hand over hand and then sliding until she reached the ground in safety. The feat was one of the most thrilling, and the heroine, a Miss Handy, was received with the wildest enthusiasm by the crowd, and immediately sent away in a carriage.

Col. Robt. G. Ingersoll also had a narrow escape—from not being in the building. He had engaged rooms at the hotel, expecting to arrive on Tuesday night, but for some reason did not arrive until Wednesday morning.

One man in the fifth story made a rope of his bed-clothes, and tried to save himself by sliding down, but, unfortunately, he lost his hold just after leaving the window, and fell to the ground below. He was picked up and carried into a saloon, where he died shortly after.

THE HAND-WORKERS OF THE Mississippi Valley.

Their Power and Responsibility.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE THE ILLINOIS FARMERS' ASSOCIATION, IN THE SENATE CHAMBER, AT SPRINGFIELD, ILL., JAN. 23, 1877, BY [illegible].

In order to be practical we must both study and think. We must study the past, and think about the future, that we may make the best of our circumstances, and guide our steps in our daily walk.

We must know and use what comes to us from the past, and know and avoid the mistakes of those who have lived and labored before us.

The period between the sixth and sixteenth century—between ancient Rome and the time of the Reformation—is called the Dark Ages; yet, as Emerson says: "These 'Dark Ages' have given us 'the feet on which we walk, the eyes with which we see'—the mariners' compass, and the lens for our microscope and telescope." To this period we are also indebted for printing, glass, paper and many other things now deemed indispensable. From the Dark Ages we received the "Magna Charta," all the principles of which are by no means practically applied. Friar Roger Bacon, who was feared and hated by the populace, as one leagued with infernal associates, produced from his laboratory gun-powder, which enabled the Thrall to cope with the iron-clad Knight; and finally gunpowder abolished the feudal system.

SIX HUNDRED YEARS AGO,

Friar Bacon, penetrating the future even of Liverpool, New York and Chicago, predicted that the time would come when ships would be propelled by machinery faster than by many rowers, needing only a pilot to steer; and that carriages would also be driven upon the land, by the power of machinery, faster than any animal could run. He thus recognized the possibilities of the steamship and the railway. He was not a popular man in his day; he was feared and hated, as a magician and one leagued with Satan, by the ignorant masses, and was imprisoned and persecuted, as a subversionist and a dangerous character, by his superiors in office.

We are proud of

of its achievements, its progress. It is true that we have realized Bacon's prediction in the steamship and the railroad. We have improved the printing press, so that it can print and perfect newspapers at the rate of fourteen miles of papers in an hour. We have the electric telegraph, the sewing machine, and improved farming implements. We no longer thresh out wheat by beating it with two sticks tied together with a thong. We have the steam engine as our slave to do our painful labor—our toil.

We have machinery which, if placed under society, would raise it to a higher grade, as 5,000 jackscrews placed under a great hotel in Chicago raised it to a higher grade without producing any shock or disturbance of its guests, or interrupting its business. Much has been done in the nineteenth century; but for these mechanical inventions which are most conspicuous, and regarding which we feel the most pride, we are indebted to the poor and obscure hand-workers.

Great progress has been made in the invention of appliances for changing the raw material which Nature has supplied us with in inexhaustible abundance, into things useful to man; into furniture and means of instruction, and in the means for transporting these products through space; but corresponding progress has not been made in improving the means of interchange and proprietary distribution.

We have made little progress in the improvement of civil government, either as to efficiency or economy. We have yet to realize a government "of the people, for the people, and by the people." We have now a government of the people by a class and for a class. We do not all realize that we are governed by an oligarchy composed of professional office-holders and office-seekers; that our elections are usually merely contests between two sections of this class, and the result merely a decision as to which section of the oligarchy shall govern and enjoy the emoluments arising from the control of government.

Neither do we sufficiently realize that a government of the people by the real representatives of all classes is practicable, and that it has been proved to be practicable by many years' experience in another country.

PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION

by the preferential vote is a system under which the majority rules, but under which the various interests, opinions and desires of all are proportionately represented; a system under which law-making bodies become society in miniature, and laws the accurate and orderly expression of public opinion.

I addressed the Illinois Farmers' Association one year ago on the subject of government and the possibilities of its improvement. I shall not, therefore, dwell upon that subject at this time, further than is necessary to illustrate the importance, in that connection, of improving the physical, intellectual and moral condition of the units which compose the State, in order to improve the State.

LORD MACAULAY,

in a letter to a gentleman who was writing the life of Thomas Jefferson, declared that he had no sympathy for Mr. Jefferson's views, and had never expressed any, even on the hustings; on the contrary, he declared that he believed a government, by the votes of a numerical majority, composed of the poorest and most ignorant, was utterly impracticable. John Adams, Gouverneur Morris, James Otis, Stephen Hopkins, Alexander Hamilton, and other noble and patriotic Americans of the Revolutionary times, doubted the ability of the people to govern themselves under a system as popular even as our existing national government. Mr. Hamilton thought the British Government, just as it was in his time, the best form that had ever been devised. Hamilton, up to the time of his death, had little faith in the permanency of our constitution; he considered it too weak, too popular. He urged, in the convention, a plan which required the President to serve for life; United States Senators to serve for life; Congress to have power to legislate on all subjects without any restraint but its own pleasure and judgment; Governors of States to be appointed by the Federal Government, to serve during good behavior, with power of absolute veto of all laws passed by State Legislatures.

Mr. Hamilton believed that the great majority of the people were poor and ignorant, and incapable of exercising the elective franchise with intelligence and freedom.

The argument

AGAINST POPULAR GOVERNMENT

has always been that the great mass of the people were poor and ignorant. Lord Macaulay, and the American statesmen to whom I have referred, were intelligent, well-informed men. We cannot say that they were wholly mistaken, both as regards the facts and the conclusions therefrom. It is, perhaps, true that in all countries the great majority of the people are poor, and extreme poverty is apt to be accompanied by ignorance. What, then, is our mission to this country? [illegible] recognize as a fact that the majority are poor and ignorant, and [illegible] conditions [illegible] render the mass of people [illegible] poor and ignorant, and ascertain how far this condition is caused by the mal-administration of those affairs that are managed by governments, and the feasibility of so modifying the Government as to reverse those conditions, and enable the majority of the people to be well provided with those things that are essential to their welfare, physical, intellectual, and moral. My theme to-night is of the Mississippi valley—their power and their responsibility." I claim that they have the power to understand this great social problem, and that they have the power to inaugurate movements which will ultimately solve it in a practical way, not only for ourselves, but for all peoples; and I may add that that movement has been commenced, and has made some progress already.

"THE HAND-WORKERS

Let us keep

in view. Admitting that poverty and ignorance is the common fate of a great majority of the people in all countries, and that by reason of their poverty and ignorance they are incapable of self-government, the problem is how to reverse these conditions so that the great majority of the people shall no longer be poor and ignorant, and may become capable of self-government.

But why appeal to the hand-workers of the Mississippi valley as having the power and responsibility to secure the solution of this great problem? My answer is, that for these purposes those who have [illegible] mechanical machinery are [illegible] any other class of society in understanding the relations of a part to the whole, and the necessity of perfect adjustment and reciprocal action of the parts with each other, to secure results by the combined and co-operative action of all the parts; that the invention, making and use of mechanical machinery affords a necessary preparation for the invention, making and management of another class of machinery—machinery by which wealth is most readily or economically produced, and interchanged between producers, and by which the rights and duties of individual members of society are marked by laws, and protected by governments.

YOU OCCUPY A VAST PLAIN,

extending from the Appalachian range and the Alleghanies on the East to the Rocky mountains of the West; from the genial climate of the Gulf of Mexico, the land of cotton, rice and sugar, spanning the great wheat belt, and extending to the snows of Dakota; with its mighty streams, navigable for many hundreds of miles, the Mississippi, Missouri, Red, Arkansas, Tennessee, Ohio, Cumberland and the Illinois rivers. With its thousands of miles of railroads, and washed by the waters of the great lakes, and connecting with the great water system of the St. Lawrence, with its many roads to the sea. You occupy also the great highway between Europe and Asia. The hand-workers have been the great power that gave persistent and efficient force to our Revolution, and have been the balance-wheel that has preserved democratic-republican institutions in this country, and prevented the absorption of power by the General Government, and its withdrawal from local governments and the people.

I claim for the hand-workers of the Mississippi valley that they are less incapacitated for this work by poverty and ignorance than any other people in the world, and have the power also, by their numerical majority, to dictate who shall make and administer the laws of eighteen out of the thirty-eight States of the Union, and have power, moral and political, to influence the making and administration of the laws of the nation.

Mr. Young, of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, divides the population of the country engaged in the different pursuits into about 6,000,000 of agriculturists, 3,000,000 of wage workers, upward of 1,500,000 engaged in the professions, and less than 1,500,000 engaged in trade and transportation, i. e., the commercial class. It is easy to see where the numerical majority resides.

The metropolitan press has, almost without exception, been controlled in the interest of which is always popular with the money power, and the mercantile classes. Notwithstanding that the masses have had few great newspapers, no periodicals, and few greatly lauded leaders to advocate their cause, they have, nevertheless, by their votes for the most part, controlled the Government of the United States throughout its history.

Great political convulsions, like the slavery agitation, disintegrate parties and make new divisions of their atoms; but the individuals must eventually subside into the two great parties—one contending for the welfare of the many, and the other for the aggrandizement of the few.

Your power can only be exercised when the possession of it is realized, and the necessary organization and concert of action is secured. Of your power, hand-workers of Illinois, under these circumstances of organization and concert of action, we have this day, and in this capital, beheld a crowning manifestation.

Two years ago you decided to organize and to bring your voting power to bear upon the political affairs of your State. Through the efforts of this and kindred associative organizations, a concert of action was secured between the farmers, miners and mechanics of the State. You nominated, voted for and elected, four members of the national House of Representatives, more than five members of the Illinois State Senate, and more than twenty members of the Illinois House of Representatives; also, the Superintendent of Public Instruction in your State, and a Judge of the Supreme Court of Illinois, as well as numerous county and municipal officers. And to-day your representatives in the General Assembly have, on joint ballot, "broken the slates" of both the "Democratic" and "Republican" politicians and elected the man of your selection Senator of the United States.* All this, be it remembered, however, is the result of and effort of two years ago. Since which you have almost wholly abandoned your political organization, and have for the most part been driven into the ranks of one or other of the political parties by their "whippers-in." You, therefore, have an experimental knowledge of your power when organized, united and active, and of your weakness when unorganized, divided and inactive. You have power, and, if the spirit of this annual meeting of the Farmers' Association meets with sympathy and support, the farmers of Illinois will not permit the power which they evidently possess to remain latent and unused.

The mere use of power to secure office for ourselves or friends, for the mere sake of official emoluments, is not worth an effort. But persistent labor for the advancement of true civilization and the full development of the manhood of our people, by the removal of those obstacles that have been placed in the way by government, and can therefore be removed by the action of government, should command your whole energy and activity.

Without undervaluinf or overlooking the advantages of our present civilization and our form of government, no thoughtful person will deny that there are great societary evils existing among us to-day, for which governments are responsible and for which they are providing no remedy. In the old world these are of the most appalling nature, and the evidence of the premature decay of our own young civilization is manifested by great numbers of tramps in the country, and paupers and those who are unwillingly idle in our cities, and other signs indicate that evils peculiar to old and decaying civilizations are growing upon us here.

In England, for example, we have the monstrous paradox of a nation of enormous and growing wealth, in which a large and increasing portion of its people are ground down under the hardest poverty, to physical, intellectual and moral deformity. We behold a nation which, during its continental wars, was ready to raise easily vast sums, annually, to support and subsidize armies and navies, the great majority of whose people have scarcely food to eat or clothes to wear; a nation where is rising like a swelling flood, encroaching continually upon and ingulfing classes who thought themselves on safe ground, being skilled, industrious, and frugal; a nation whose labor-saving machinery does the muscular work of many millions of men, and yet whose children, scarcely out of the cradle, have to work day and night, kept awake by the whip, and crippled [illegible] poor children and laborers of the "farm gangs." A nation overflowing with wealth, doing the business of the world, whose merchants and traders all fail, at some time in their career, almost without exception; containing, also, many hundreds of thousands who would gladly toil all day for food and a night's shelter, who can get no work to do. It is a nation, to use Mr. Carlyle's striking illustration, in which a "horse is sure of [illegible] for the work he does, but a man who is willing to work may starve."

It is not strange that Lord Macaulay declared a government by a numerical majority of such a people as impracticable; and it is not strange that our own people are becoming each year more and more like the people of that country in the poverty and degradation of the majority, produced by similar causes, which must be removed if representative government is to succeed here. Our English professors of political [illegible] and our English law-makers declare that systems of law regarding [illegible], which have been principal instruments in bringing the majority of the people of Great Britain to this deplorable condition of poverty and degradation, are alone scientific and orderly, and hence desirable for this country and this people. You have entered your protest against the unphilosophical and of Great Britain; you have denounced the resumption of a system by which all who incur debt promise that which is impossible, to pay in gold, when there is not gold coin enough in the commercial world to much more than pay the annual interest on the government debts of the world.

Mr. Fawcett estimates the amount of gold coin in Europe at $1,[illegible],000,000, and the annual interest on public debt $1,650,000,000. There is no hard-money system in any commercial country. The same authority shows that in Europe there is in use, as money, the following amounts:

Gold coin	$1,[illegible]
Silver and base metal	[illegible]
Paper	2,000,000,000
Total	$5,900,000,000

Per capita, $21.40, which he estimates at $1.40 per capita more than we have in the United States, including coin and paper at this time, while the cry from our "political economists" and statesmen of the English school is, contract the currency and resume that ruinous system—promises of coin that does not exist—resume a system of periodical suspensions of payment when payment is demanded in coin, and general financial and commercial collapse occurring at least once during each decade.

In the Dominion of Canada they have the English system of specie banking in its most perfect form—a system under which, in the year 1876, one man in every thirty-two doing business in Canada failed. These figures are from the commercial agency of Dunn, Winans & Co., of Montreal.

The hand-workers of the Mississippi valley have declared their

OPPOSITION TO A RESUMPTION

of the English financial system of promises to pay everything in coin, which does not exist in sufficient quantities and cannot be had. They desire to preserve the United States legal-tender notes, which did us such good service that sagacious Governments, like the German, are introducing like notes in their own finances. Western anti-resumptionists were pronounced by the people in the Eastern States as ignorant men who knew nothing of the true, scientific and well-tried systems of finance—and they refer to systems under which the mass of the people are impoverished to the verge of pauperism—while ninety-seven in a hundred merchants and traders die bankrupt. And while they were ridiculing the Western "inflationists," these very Eastern merchants and manufacturers were having their foundations undermined, and have been ever since passing into the abyss of bankruptcy and ruin.

You insisted that it was

NOT DESIRABLE TO RESUME

the system of forced promises to pay all debts in gold as the only legal tender. You insisted upon the preservation of the United States legal-tender notes. You claimed that as paper currency must exist in every country and must exist here, that a paper currency consisting of evidences of Government debt, and receivable for all public and private dues, and interchangeable with United States interest-bearing obligations, equivalent in value to coin, would be a better paper currency than promises of banks to pay coin on demand—a promise that cannot be, and never has been met when general demand was made.

YOU INSISTED that the power to contract and expand the volume of the circulating medium involved the power to contract and expand the market price of all property, and that this power should not be delegated to any particular class of corporations or individuals, or even to Government officials; but that the power of every holder of Government debt-obligations, legal tender and not bearing interest, redeemable in interest-bearing obligations of the Government, and re-exchangeable at the pleasure of the holder, would automatically regulate the volume of the currency according to the needs of business, from time to time, as the supply of steam is automatically supplied or withheld from an engine by its governor.

You claimed that the Government of the United States would be unable to redeem its outstanding legal-tender notes on demand in gold coin, as the coin could not be had, and that at a recent date the Government did not have to exceed $13,000,000 of coin which was available for redemption, while its outstanding legal-tender notes exceeded $350,000,000. That the true policy was to make the legal-tender notes convertible into United States interest-bearing bonds or certificates, which should be interchangeable.

Time is gradually proving that

YOU WERE RIGHT.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his recent report, admits that the coin redemption of the United States legal-tender notes in circulation is impracticable—that redemption in bonds is practicable.

The National Convention of Bankers, recently held at Philadelphia, by resolution coincided in this view, and practical bankers in the East are beginning to agree with you that these bonds offered in redemption that a permanent and irrevocable funding of United States notes would produce a financial and commercial earthquake.

You saw the solution of this financial problem, because your class alone had passed to the third stage of industrial and practical education. Your knowledge of and use of machinery; your habit of instantly acting and correcting derangements and irregularities, had fitted you to detect the derangements and irregularities that have existed in financial systems for the last 200 years, and enabled you to suggest a mode of improvement.

You realize that, in order to enjoy popular government, our people must be rescued from want and ignorance; that one of the leading causes that keep the great majority of the people in poverty and ignorance is that the manipulation of the currency under the English system operates as which draws wealth away from those who produce it, and transfers it to a few who control the pump. You propose to do away with the pumping system, and have a financial currency system which will correspond to the water that the demands of commerce shall evaporate from the bonded debt what is needed in the form of current money; that this current money shall seek, as the clouds seek, places where currency is wanted; that any excess of currency shall drain back, by conversion at the United States treasury, into the bonded national debt, as an excess of rain, after saturating the soil, flows back to the ocean through the water-courses that the Almighty has provided to dispose of the excess of rain. In more than one sense the proper study of mankind is man. A man can not be comfortable, however well his body be clad, if his feet are naked and plodding through freezing mud.

CURRENCY SYSTEM OF NATURE;

SOCIETY CANNOT BE COMFORTABLE

if a [illegible] to every cell and tissue. A pin prick will find blood everywhere. The excess passes through the capillaries to the veins, thence through the lungs, where it is combined with other ingredients received from the atmosphere, and again passes into the heart, from which it is forced into every part. [illegible]

HEART AND LUNGS OF SOCIETY.

The lungs—the manufacturing cities—send the blood in the form of [illegible] boots, shoes, hats and caps, furniture—things for the use and comfort, and education and recreation of man; these pass down the railroads and streams (the arteries), they branch off at every station and landing, and the stream subdivides on the country roads (the capillaries) and reaches every homestead, and every human being (every cell); then back through the veins, returning to the city (the heart), come wheat, and corn, and meat, through the veins into the [illegible] the manufacturers, [illegible] the operatives in order that they may prepare (as the lungs) new arterial blood for re-distribution; and the [illegible] blood represent money.

If the circulation of the blood should cease, the man would die. If the circulation is irregular or deficient, the man is sick.

The telegraphic wires correspond to

THE NERVES

of the human body—the conveyance of intelligence to sensation. If a man's foot is wounded, his head receives a dispatch instantly, conveying the intelligence, and the radiating nerves convey the sensation to every other part; and if one part suffers, all parts feel the pain, sympathise and put forth efforts to repair and heal. As it is thus with a healthy man, so must it be with a healthy society. All parts must be in intimate relation with every other part; all must co-operate for the common good. It must be realized that if one part of the people are in want and ignorance, all parts of the body politic must suffer. We must also remember that as every body has many parts, each adapted to its especial work and function, and happy in that work, so there must be various parts and organs to the body politic or social: feet, head, hands, heart, lungs, limbs, muscles, nerves, veins—all of which are especially fitted to perform special service for all, and for which all are performing reciprocal services. Such is not the present state of society in any country, but we are slowly approaching it. I said you had reached the third stage of

INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS AND EDUCATION.

The first stage of industry is that in which war alone is considered the proper vocation of a free man. Women and slaves must do the field work, and weave, spin, knit and sew for the soldiers.

Many small tribes or nations are, by conquest, finally consolidated and held within natural boundaries by the strongest; then the second stage of industry is reached, life being comparatively secure, wars less frequent, and only a portion of the men required for the army.

Men now engage in industry and trade, at first reluctantly, however; then comes division of labor, the second stage. The division of physical labor among uneducated men, people whose brains contain no pabulum, nothing to digest while at work, is stupefying and degrading. A man who is occupied all his life in making the thirteenth part of a pin, with nothing to think about, is evidently not living as he ought. Though Spinoza, while engaged in earning a scanty living by polishing spectacle glasses, worked out in his head his wonderful system of philosophy, he was educated before he went to polishing glasses.

The third stage of industry is that in which the hand-worker has received some education, so that while he works with his hands he builds in his head a machine to do what his hands are doing; he becomes an inventor, a machinist, and a manager of machinery. This is the stage in which you are to-day, for every farmer is now a machinist;

EVERY FARM HAS ITS WORKSHOP,

great or small. Many an intelligent farm lad can run the steam engine that drives his father's threshing machine, and all have at least a common-school education, the tools for acquiring all human knowledge.

You all use complicated machinery; you all know when it is out of order. If you hear some unusual rattle or squeaking, you stop your machine instantly, ascertain the cause, and apply the remedy.

You have found that the governing machinery of your country and its

FINANCIAL MACHINERY

is continually out of order; that it does not perform its work; that it is continually either breaking down or rattling and jingling, indicating derangement. You have been told that these great machines are too complicated for you to understand or handle. You say, if it is not more complicated than my threshing machine, or my harvester, I can understand it; you examine it, especially the English financial machine; you study its construction, and its history, and its work; you find it is a machine or system that promises to pay gold when it has no gold to pay, and cannot get it; it is a system under which, while the nation has become nominally rich, the people have become correspondingly poor and deformed in body and mind; that more and more of the children of each overworked generation become too weak to snatch a living in the midst of fierce competition, and drop off into

THE POOR HOUSE OR THE PRISON;

you find that under that system trading and professional callings are deemed more honorable than the labor of production; that producers are degraded, because of the small share they receive of what they produce; that undue competition between the members of an overcrowded commercial class has caused "business" to become a system of war or a game of chance; you find that the best merchants and the candid students and writers of England declare their financial system a failure, and the Bank of England an overloaded, overworked and inefficient machine. That the continual raising and lowering of the rate of interest in order to keep coin in England is continually changing the market value of all commodities, so that he who carries on a legitimate manufacturing business is subjected to all the uncertainties and risks of gambling. That of those who engage in trade and commerce, a large majority die after a career of labor and anxiety, leaving no provision for their families, and it is exceptional to find a merchant who has not failed at some time. As you investigate, you wonder that the mercantile classes have not discovered that the

PRIME CAUSE OF THESE EVILS

is in their financial system. You become doubtful of the correctness of your own conclusions as to the cause of these difficulties, social derangements, and suffering; you inquire of merchants whether they have examined the matter; most of them say no, that it is too complicated, that they cannot understand it; you accompany a merchant through his great establishment; you admire, understand, and are interested in the steam engine which is used to elevate or lift his goods; you are quite likely to find that he does not understand the parts or the workings of his own steam engine; he tells you, perhaps, that it is too complicated, that he cannot understand it, that he leaves that to his engineer, as he leaves the subject of

FINANCE TO THE ROTHSCHILDS.

The fact is, that merchants and business men are very acute, and very quick, and are intelligent in certain ways, but they make pack-horses of their brains in their every-day work, so at night when they put the tired pack-horse in its stable, they do not care to study the steam engine or any other machinery.

Professional men, in cities at least, are so engrossed with their special lines of thought and effort that few give much attention to the grand machinery of society; they do not realize, like Emerson, that "Our state of society is one in which the members have suffered amputation from the trunk, and strut about so many walking monsters—a good finger, a neck, a stomach, an elbow, but never a man. The priest becomes a form, the attorney a statute-book, the mechanic a machine, the sailor a rope of the ship."

YOU EXAMINE AND FIND

that there was a system of finance practiced in the Middle Ages—the "Dark Ages"—under which Government debt supplied the circulating medium; that the Government [illegible] coin; [illegible] you find [illegible] those notes and makes them worth less than coin, because it refuses to receive them [illegible] and you find, further, that the Government [illegible] they were issued, which provided that they should be receivable by the Government at par [illegible] obligations of the Government.

YOU DEMAND—

[illegible] same as gold.

[illegible] its old rank in the [illegible] that the products of our American silver mines shall be coined, as well as the products of the British gold mines.

[illegible] that if any [illegible] basis—United States notes not bearing interest—and [illegible] exchange them for Government [illegible] change should be made at the sub-treasuries, and that the holder of the interest-bearing obligation may re-exchange it for greenbacks at par and interest at his pleasure.

You demand that without suddenly disturbing existing conditions, the policy of this Government shall be to supply, in the form of evidences of its own debt, the paper currency of the country, instead of farming out the privilege to corporations to supply the paper currency, to consist of evidences of their debts.

While managing your plows, your drills, your harvesters and your threshing machines, farmers of the Mississippi valley! you have time and opportunity to think. Your education has been sufficient to give you control of all historical and scientific facts, and while tilling your farms, you may find the proper relation of these facts and build better machinery for the social use of mankind.

THE PEOPLE OF THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY

are, in number, twenty-one of the forty-six millions of our population. In this great central basin of the continent we have one-third of the acreage of the United States. A steamer leaving the Gulf may pursue her uninterrupted course to the head-waters of the Missouri—more than 4,500 miles. We have within this grand region an abundance of iron, coal, lead, copper, zinc, silver and gold; and wood and timber, both hard and soft, in great abundance and variety; a soil of unsurpassed richness; a people in whose veins are mingled the blood of the Puritans, Cavaliers, Huguenots, the Dutch, the Celts, the Germans and the Scandinavians, who sought this continent during the last century, and of those of later immigration. If the mingling of the blood of the most energetic specimens of the best nations can produce a superior race, we have it here.

WITH A TERRITORY

extending through twenty degrees of latitude we have the best varieties of climate.

Emigration, which for 4,000 years has been flowing westward, here meets the current coming eastward. We have area enough to contain the principal countries of Europe; and we have in forest, mine and soil resources sufficient to shelter, feed and clothe all the inhabitants of those countries, in addition to our own.

With all these resources, with an intelligent and skilled people, the majority are poor, and nearly all are deforming body or mind, or both, in efforts to provide shelter, food, clothing and other necessaries of civilized life for themselves and their families.

We have sufficient raw material and men with skill to make and operate machinery enough to make all those things needed, to the extent of the reasonable desires of our whole population; yet men and women, able and willing to do this work, are idle and suffering; machinery stands unused or works sluggishly, and this is largely owing to the want of a proper system of exchanging products and commodities. The machinery of production and of interchange stands idle for want of oil to lubricate it. The Rothschilds of the world have a monopoly of the FINANCIAL OIL.

A distinguished Englishman recently remarked that when on the Atlantic coast he felt quite as much at home as though he was in a British colony, but when he crossed the Alleghany mountains he felt that he was in America, and among a different people.

The Eastern people are accustomed to look eastward across the Atlantic for precedents, and to follow them closely and look for foreign applause for having done so. Let the people of the West think and act as Americans.

In this great central plain our steamboats and our railroad trains move like shuttles,

WEAVING THE FABRIC OF A NEW SOCIETY.

Here we have both the woof and the warp; our lines run north and south, as well as east and west; we are a moving people; we come into contact from every direction; we modify each other's habits, both in thought and action. We may be as

RICH AS WE DESIRE

in all that contributes to the physical and intellectual well-being of man; we have the raw material, and the men and machinery to change its form. We have position and power. Let us realize our responsibility, and fully and properly use our power, first, to improve our own social condition, and, by our influence and example and moral force, to improve the condition of mankind. Let our Government be made to from being impoverished by foreign legislation, and let us solve the transportation question by bringing the factories to our farms.

Let us change our raw material into houses, clothing, food, means of instruction and recreation, so that all shall be supplied. Let us secure a system of interchanging what is produced, so that all who produce may be supplied in exchange with what they need or desire. Let those who cannot work or will not work be placed in infirmaries.

We have received much from those who lived in past centuries; let us add our quota to the fund to be transmitted to future generations.

YOUNG MEN!

yeomanry of the Mississippi valley! Hold the fortress, the citadel of the civilization of the nineteenth century. Hold the best stronghold of representative government, and let not our civilization be plowed under like those that have preceded it.

ORGANIZE!

Make every school house a rallying point for enlistment and drill. Organize a company in every school district, a battalion in every township, a brigade in every county, a division in every Congressional district, a corps in every State. With your right resting on the Rio Grande, your left on the Pembina, to victories to be gained not with shot and shell, but with well-aimed ballots.

FORWARD!

Six hundred years ago,

FRIAR BACON

ventured to predict the advent of the steamship and the railroad. May we not venture to predict that the time will come when civilized men will be as well off as the savage, who, with a day's hunting and fishing, which is but recreation for him, may supply himself and family not only with the necessaries of life, but also with all that they have learned to desire?

Hand-workers of the Mississippi valley, you have power to greatly improve your own social condition, and thereby to advance the condition of all peoples!

You are individually responsible for the full and proper use of your superior advantages! MAY YOU REALIZE YOUR POWER AND RESPONSIBILITY.

* The Supreme Court of the United States has decided in substance: "That the common law power of the State Governments to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, etc., applies to railroads and grain elevators, and that it has in no way been diminished and restricted by the construction of the United States, and that the State Legislatures have the right to decide by statute, if they please, what are "reasonable rates" of transportation." This is called the "Granger" decision, and confirms the Granger laws. Under it the farmers cease to be serfs.

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

AMERICAN [illegible] shipped to [illegible]

NOT one [illegible] description [illegible] ports in [illegible] England or [illegible] from the [illegible] of New York [illegible] the month of February.

THERE were twenty-[illegible] failures in New York city during the month of March. The aggregate liabilities were $5,512,896, and the assets $984,882.

REPORTS from all parts of the West, says the New York Tribune, continue to indicate better times, livelier trade, and a general feeling of buoyancy among all ranks of business men.

AMERICAN horses are making their mark in England. Their admission to race courses has improved the native [illegible] demand for them which can only be met by exportation direct from America. Thirty-nine horses were shipped last October from Montreal, and now twenty-six more have been sent on from Philadelphia.

A LEADING industry in Berks county, Pa., is, and has been for years, the manufacture of wool hats. In 1840 from ten to twenty hands were employed, who produced 175 dozen hats per week. In 1867 410 men were engaged, and 489 dozen hats were manufactured daily. Last year 478 men found employment, and 648 dozen hats was the daily product.

PRESIDENT HAYES and Secretary Evarts are warmly in favor of having the United States well represented at the Paris Exhibition, both as a matter of courtesy toward the French republic and for the benefit of American manufactures and commerce. A message recommending an appropriation and the employment of Government ships to carry the goods to and from Havre will be probably sent to Congress early in the extra session in June.

THE rapid increase of steamers on the chain of the great Northern lakes is the feature of the lake trade during the last three years. The number employed in 1876 is reported to have been 885, their tonnage being 190,367. The number of sailing vessels has fallen off heavily, decreasing from 3,208 in 1872 to 1,382; the tonnage, however, not going down in quite the same proportion, but to such an extent that there were 200,000 tons less in the trade last year than in 1872.

A LAW has been enacted by the Legislature of North Carolina imposing a tax of $500 upon all non-resident dealers in the fertilizers so largely used in the exhausting agriculture of that State. There is only one local fertilizer factory in North Carolina, this being at Wilmington, while fifty houses outside of the State, mostly Baltimore concerns, are represented by agents there. The outside dealers intend to contest the law. They declare it to be unconstitutional, and they have met and voted the money to carry on a suit.

THE Journal of Commerce, of New York, warns us that this country is not going to monopolize the new business of shipping fresh meats to Europe. England is not the only country that produces an insufficient supply of meats for its own population. There is quite as great a deficiency in France, and perhaps in Belgium, in proportion to population, and with an adequate supply at moderate prices a great demand is likely to arise in those countries. Already a French company has been organized for the purpose of carrying fresh meats from the Argentine republic to France, and an experimental voyage has been made which is pronounced fairly satisfactory. The process of refrigerating is said to be a new one, adapted to the special use to be subserved. Already golden anticipations are indulged as to the future of the trade. It is estimated that as many as 100,000,000 head of cattle find pasturage on the vast pampas of the republic, of which 2,000,000 can be spared annually without exhausting the natural increase, and the pampas would easily sustain double the number. Hence it is anticipated that the South American republic may become the slaughter-house of Europe, and that the difficulty will not be so much that of delivering the meat in marketable condition as that of providing vessels enough to carry all that will be in demand.

How Scandal Pays.

Brother Beecher has returned home, weary, but triumphant, with $40,000 in his pocket. A car-load of his admirers met him in the suburbs and escorted the reverend traveler and his shekels to the safe vicinity of Plymouth Church. From the scandals of his famous suits he thus emerges with a golden halo about his massive brow. Nor is he the only victor in the field. Theodore Tilton is in Texas, literally coining solid money by his airy eloquence, and he may be expected to reach Brooklyn soon with overweighted pockets. But where is the third party in the scandal trio? What has become of the sad-eyed little woman whom both these men loved, and whom, at least, one of them dragged down to life-long shame? Is she still pricking back death with her needle, earning a scanty livelihood, as reported, in the unsympathising City of Churches? What a pity for her that she is only a woman! Were she but a man, it would seem that she could easily fill her purse with coin proportioned to the depth of her scandal.—New York Paper.

Accident Insurance.

Life and accident insurance has gone down to such a fine point that all the people ought to get insured. Looking over the list of last year's accident work, as presented by a prominent company, we find it paid losses of $100 or more for the following causes? Fell down stairs, $600; fell on icy board, $225; thrown by a cow, $260; fell from a chair, $330; hit by a base-ball, $210; stubbed his toe, $110.71; fell on a log, $200; fell through a hole in floor, $200; ran against a pump, $300; hit knee against chair, $100; fell rom a stool, $225; fell through a barn floor, $128.57; toe stepped on, $125; beaten by roughs, $112.86; bitten by insect, $195; fell over an ottoman, $300; jolt of wagon, $120.—New York Travelers' Journal.

OUT in Montgomery county, Oregon, there is a lady lawyer. She is, or was, married. And the other day a client went to her office and found the door locked, with the following notice pinned up on the outside: "Gone to my husband's funeral; back in thirty minutes."

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

The approaching European war has given wheat and other grain an upward tendency, and since our last report such commodities have materially advanced in this market, though the receipts are light. On yesterday our dealers were offering for wheat, Amber No. one, $1.66c., White do No. one, $1.67c., Red do No. one, $1.65c., No. two do, $1.50c. Flour is unchanged, and quoted at $9.00 per bbl.; corn, 50c., oats, 42c. In butter and eggs there is no advance, if anything these articles have fallen; of eggs our shippers average about ten bbls. per day since the departure of the last snow. The prices paid for butter yesterday was 12½c. and for eggs 10c. Potatoes are worth $1.10c@$1.25c., and but a small quantity offered. Hogs, live wt., 4½c@5c.; dressed, 6c@7c; hides, green, 5c.; clover seed, $7.50.

Vegetation, and especially the wheat, is coming forward rapidly in this neighborhood and vicinity. And now the robin's song is as sweet as a fairy's feet, stepping on silver sand, and the little pig curls his tail with an evident grunt of satisfaction as he meanders, while the happy woodpecker may be heard drumming upon some dead sycamore. Everything is lovely and the goose hangs high. Hail, gentle spring!

That essential class of our business men, the butcher fraternity, must be forming a corner on meat, bologna, etc., judging from the fact that we met the Messrs. Sim Tarney, John Treesh and Uncle Mike Long, all of Auburn, in town the other day in consultation with our town butchers. Sim, the festive cuss, seemed to be leader of the mob.

In the way of village improvements, we notice that Dr. Snyder is putting up an addition to his residence, and that the new Post Office room is now completed. The U. S. Mail is dished up to the public in the new quarters by Uncle Ben since last Monday.

The Wild Dutchman, who sails under the euphonious position of pathmaster for this school district, has issued an order to the effect that all persons owning saw-logs lying in the highway near Calkins' Mill, shall remove them "right away off, pretty quick, by dang." Bully for you, my boy.

The other day Wm Rosenberry, the butcher, propelled Ben Hamilton, the barber, one-fourth of a mile on a wheel barrow, with a 1000 pound porker, (Ben for a balance weight) en route from the slaughter house to the market.

Corunna rejoiceth in a new barber. His name is Benjamin Hamilton, hails from Garrett, and he is a good workman. He may be found in the basement of Adams' new building.

Seekers after the treasure left upon the scene of the late railroad accident, have abandoned the field, with a realization of the truth, that "all that glitters is not gold."

It is rumored that Ike Reed has taken unto himself a new wife. If such is the case, he has our congratulations.

LOVELAND.

NEWVILLE.

Stapleton & Bowman have bought the stock of drugs belonging to H. H. Ackley, and moved them in to theirs new room where they propose to keep a full line of drugs and medicines.

H. W. Coburn has sold his stock of dry goods to Cecil and Leon Rhoades, who will cary on the business at the old stand.

The honorable board of commissioners paid our town a visit last week. They report considerable damage done to the bridges of the county by the high waters. The board condemed the bridge over the river at Newville, and give notice that persons crossing said bridge, do so at their peril.

On Monday the 16th, Mr. Russel Coburn's barn was distroyed by lightening, with the contents cosisting of hay, grain, reaper and mower, threshing machine, wheat drill and other articles, amounting to about one thousand dollars, was entirely destroyed. The loss to Mr Coburn is heavy, and is severely felt by him.

Fifteen persons were baptised at the U. B. church, of this place last Sabbath.

Died at Newville on April the 18th, 1877. Amsi Seely. Mr. Seely was born in Stamford Connecticut, May 23d, 1805. Mr. Seely is an old citizen of this county, having resided here for about thirty six years, has served this county as commissioner a number of years, and was an efficient officer. He was a good citizen, generous to a fault, always ready to help the needy, and his family is entitled to the sympathy of all good citizens in their affliction.

JUNCTION.

Garden making has commenced in earnest.

Mrs. Geo. Clark is convalescing.

Mrs Geo Essig is lying very low with Typhoid fever.

Preaching at the school house next Friday evening.

Tramps are on the move in droves of four and five, and when they go to a house they always ask if the man of the house is at home—of course they want work—but when work is offered they always feign sick.

Mr. Ashley is remodeling his hotel in such a way as to make it front the depot, this will cause it to have a more respectfull appearance.

The citizens of the Junction met at the school house on last Sabbath, and orgaized a Sabbath school. Mr Isaac Rust, was chosen Suprintendent, Mr. P. Ditmar, Treasurer, and Mr. J. J. Martin Secretary, an able body of teachers was chosen as this is the first attempt of anything of the kind at this place. We hope the patrons will aid in keeping it up, and endeavor to make it a success.

M.

Packard is as terrible with his pen as an "army with banners" or as—Stanley Matthews. He has filled a brief of fifty-three printed pages to prove that his title is as good as that of Hayes. He could prove that to the satisfaction of the entire nation within much less space. Everybody believes it to be a fact that both Packard and Hayes were eight to ten thousand votes behind the democratic candidates in Louisiana. In old times that indicate defeat, but now it is simply an incentive for four radical rascals to arrange the returning board machinery for a swindle.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but naturla that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St, Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables, routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

A TILT

"It may be so but I don't see it."

"It's because you don't use your eyes; you're prejudiced."

"Perhaps I am."

"I know you are. It would be foolish to talk against custom-made clothing. Those who prefer it, and can afford it, have a right to it, but I won't listen to your slurs against 'ready-made;' my experience is all against you. I have bought ready-made of SAM PETE & MAX, and found it to fit as nicely, last as long and look quite as well as custom work, and for much less money."

"You seem, interested in the Star Clothing House."

"I am, but not in the sense you mean. I think a house that has done so much to raise the tone of ready made clothing business, and at the same time reduce the prices for the people, deserves a good word."

"But you detract from the custom-trade."

"Not a bit of it! It is not that I love Cæsar less, but Rome more! The truth is, custom work has not become poorer, and gone down, but ready-made has become better and risen up! Now do you see it?"

"I wouldn't acknowledge it if I did."

"Of course you wouldn't. Those beaten in arguments seldom do. Good morning."

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES.

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arraves in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale groser, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

TEAS! TEAS! TEAS.

The reduction of 10 per cent has placed teas so low that now they are as cheap as before the war. We have a good tea at 35 cents and the very best Gunpowder or Young Hyson at 80 and 90 cents.

Burned to Death.

A little daugter of Andrew Wyatt, living two and a half miles east, was burned to death last week, while building a fire. There was no one with her at the time, her mother having gone to a neighbors. Her clothes caught from the fire she was kindling, and she was burned to such an extent that she died soon after.

They will keep both stores open for business until they move.

A man drove in town Saturday night and hitched in front of one of our saloons, tying the lines to the wheel of his wagon. Some time after the horse began to back up which wound the lines on the wheel, causing him to back more rapidly till he got tangled in the harness and fell, straining him so that he could not get up, but lay there till Monday morning, when he was knocked in the head and hauled off.

We regret to say good by to Mr. Welch. He has labored so earnestly and cheerfully, and has made his field of labor so broad and comprehensive that he is unto us as a brother. How often he has drawn us to one side and delicately advised us to be more than a brother-in-law to the church; and for all these lectures do you suppose he would ever take a cent? We never asked him, but we are a better judge of human nature than to make such a blunder. And now we are to part with him, for he goes to Pierceton next Monday. Well brother farewell, and if forever on earth, then let us hope to clasp hands across the bl—— shining streets, where parting will be no more forever and ever, amen.

FIRES.

The Butler "Record" of last week gives the following account of fires.

We learn that the residence of Henry Shoub, living three miles East of Butler, near the State line, was burned to the ground last Sabbath, with most of the household goods therein. No origin of the fire given, and no Insurance. The loss will probably approximate $1,000. This is one of many fires that have occurred in this township in the last few years. The loss will fall heavily on the family, as they are but ill prepared for its burden.

Wednesday morning April 11th, the house of Mr. Flickinger, three miles and a half East of Butler, was discovered on fire. The neighbors arrived at the place of the fire, noticed the old lady, Mrs. Flickinger alone, and upon asking her where Mr. Flickinger was she said "up stairs." A rush was made into the house, where the lifeless body of Mr. Flickinger was found. The house was wholly destroyed. No Insurance. This is the second dwelling that this family has lost by fire, within a few years.

We learn from coroner Latson, that the old man evidently died from heart disease, brought on by excitement caused by the fire.

Good for Spencerville.

We are glad to record a noble act upon the part of the enterprising citizens of Spencerville, in raising sixty dollars to help pay the indebtedness of the Eel River Railroad, guaranteed by four citizens of this town. The matter being brought to their attention by our excellent friend, Col. John S. Boots, the following gentleman nobly responded as follows.

S. S. Shutt	$15.00
John S. Boots	10.00
J. W. Dills	5.00
Wm. Shutt	5.00
G. A. Bishop	5.00
F. Bishop	5.00
Geo. Barney	5.00
Wm. Henderson	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]

There always was a reciprocal feeling between the two places. This last act binds us more closely together, and now we are ready to go our last dime on the leading most of the St. Joe.

Old Settlers Society.

Steuben county has for a number of years a society called "The Old Settlers Society," where once every year all the old settlers meet and talk over their early pioneer life, produce relics, have a big dinner and a good time in general. Such an affair must be an enjoyable one to the "old boys," and DeKalb county should not be behind in such matters. Our old pioneers could enjoy a meeting as hugely as can those in Steuben county, and such being the case why can't they have the opportunity, all it wants is someone to work the matter up, have a meeting called and appoint a committee and let that committee consist of men who will go ahead with it. Such men as John P. Widney, Henry Faegler, of Auburn, David Butler, Concord township, Dwight Moody and Samuel Widney, of Newville-tp. James R. Cosper, of Union township, and a host of others could do much toward making such an enterprise a success, and while thinking of the matter bear this in mind, that it will not be an affair where much money will be needed Let us hear from some of our old settlers.

Auburn Manufacturing Organization.

Again we would call the attention of our citizens to the manufacturing interests of Auburn. It will be seen by a recent publication in the Courier that Mr Stamets, has come boldly to the front and offered land free of charge to any who will erect some manufacturing establishment thereon. So far, that is a start, but that is not all needed. Our citizens, to make the enterprise a success, must come together, talk the matter over, and devise means by which they may be able to reach out into the states and draw such parties as are substantial to Auburn, show them what facilities we possess, what a vast amount of timber of all descriptions are at our command, the advantage of our railroads, and if water is needed, how easily we can supply them. All these superior advantages will be points worthy of notice to such men, and if handed to them in the right shape, will certainly bring them here. It will also be the means of enhancing the value of property at least fifty per cent. Now let us reason together, push the matter with a vim and not let it die out, and give our neighboring towns a chance to crow over us. All who are interested in the enterprise are earnestly requested to meet next Wednesday evening, the 24th, at Hollister & Benedict's Hall, when an organization for the furtherance of the manufacturing interests of Auburn will be formed. Let every citizen consider himself a committee of one to invite his neighbor to be present, and not fail to be there himself.

Obituary.

Mr. Editor. It becomes our painful to inform the readers of the Courier of the death of "Quad." the Newville correspondent of the Republican. The poor fellow had been ailing several months previous to his decease, but no one had any idea that his time was so short. About three months ago his physicians recommended a change of climate, he seemed to revive for a while after changing, but soon relapsed. He next adopted a course of emetics, and threw up a great quantity of slang and abuse against the churches of Newville and some of our citizens (through the Republican) which seemed to relive him a great deal, but about two weeks ago he was taken with another relapse and although everything was done for him that his friends could think of, it was no avail. Traveling was recommended both by water and land, and accompanied by Dr. Cal. Chambers and Tape of Buttler he started east the 3d inst, but the climate or something else of Hicksville was too much for his weak constitution. On his return he was taken with a severe fit, pitching forward breaking the dash and nearly killing himself, after which he was entirely unconscious until about 3 a. m. of the 24th when he came too he was lying in a pile of shavings in the rear of Dr. Bowmans office. He expired about 9 45 of the 7th. W.

G. H. Forkner of the New York store is in the market this week buying goods. He will bring to Auburn one of the larges and best assorted stock of dry goods ever brought to this market You must not forget to call and see their stock. We be speak for them a good patronage.

FARMERS READ.

South Bend, April 16, 1877.

Mr. J. L. Davis, Dear Sir,—We reply to your favor of the 13th inst., that the reports to the effect that Mr. Oliver was ever sued for making his plows, and that he was beaten in such suit, is false and without any foundation whatever. Mr. Oliver is the sole inventor and patentee of all the process of chilling and forming the irons for his plows, and of the construction of his plows also. Let us know the name and address of any one who attempts to collect royalty for the use of Olivers chilled plows, and we will have him arrested at once, as he will be attempting to swindle. Those who [illegible] the bogus plows, made at this place, will regret it, unless they have a bond from the party they buy from, and which we recommend in our circular as follows:

Should parties offer to sell you the above infringing plow, with the verbal assurance that it is not an infringement, and that you will not be molested in its use, you should demand from them a bond, signed by some person of undoubted responsibility, guaranteeing you indemnity for damages that may be recovered from you for such purchase or use.

Do not accept any verbal promises to protect you in the premises. Your own interests demand that you have a good bond to that effect, and when attempts are made to pursuade you to the contrary, you may be sure that the parties dare not assume they endeavor to have you incur. Yours, &c.,

L. Pike,
Sec'y South Bend Plow Works.

I call the attention of the farming community to the above letter, which shows conclusively that no other person than Mr. Oliver has a right to make a plow of chilled iron, and all other plows than his are bogus. Get the only genuine which I now have on hand. J. L. Davis.

We ran down to Washington last Friday only to find the city wonderfully unusually, remarkably quiet, and the president as placid as an unruffled frog-pond. In a long and interesting conversation with him on Monday morning, he seemed to feel his oats, and spoke cheeringly of the effect his recognition of Nicholls as Governor of Louisana would have on his party. "Tom," he remarked confidingly, "there has been too many Mortons and Chandlers and Camerons running this Government in the past, and I propose to stop it. Of course, Chandler and J. Madison Wells and Joe, Bradley elected me, but I promised nothing in return and I think they will get it. In my inaugural I guaranteed a local self government to every state, which means that Hampton and Nicholls are the "de jure" Governors of their respective states. I know some of my political friends will howl about the fairness of my election in Louisiana if I go against Packard, but then I am "de facto" President, and in full possession of all its powers emoluments. Packard lacked shrewdness in not having a commission appointed. He might have been Governor to day as I am President." Just at this moment Schurz came to the door and wanted in, but Hayes dismissed him with the remark that he was very busy with affairs of state. The usher afterwards informed us that when the Secretary learned that we were having audience with the President, he was perfectly delighted, and joyfully murmured, "Now is my civil service reform a triumph."

The youthful Webb now entered and announced hash, and just then the gallant lady of the White House, Mrs. Hayes appeared at the door and sorely pressed us with an invitation to dine with them in the blue room, which we unhesitatingly accepted. "Mr. President," we said, as our hand lingered in his at departure, "if you will stand by Nicholls and the south, and let Key give the democrats a few more offices, the Courier will certainly stand by you and see you through." "Could I have the support of that journal," said he, visibly effected, "the great object of my life will have been accomplished, and who knows but I may in a contrite moment, give way by resigning an office I was forced to occupy against my own convictions, and let him who was legally and duly elected enter upon the duties thereof."

And we left him feeling that justice would be righted, that truth would rise again, and convinced that the President would do good if left alone. As a parting evidence of his appreciation he had the Marine band stationed on the front lawn. As we passed out they struck up, "I love thee, fondly," and through blinding tears we reached the depot just in time to get a westward bound freight train.

We feel now as through life were a blank, and our existance so far had been for nothing, because our learned astute, and highly comical friend, Senator and brother, Doctor Mercer, has withdrawn his patronage form the Courier. He seems to have taken our remarks about his voting against a new State House, sadly to heart, and suffering under the torture of a diseased conscience, at last resolved on vengeful destruction, and came in and paid up. What, a Senator and not a subscriber! There is a hog hole in our Corunna list now and by democratic assistance and divine providence, which always work in unison, we propose to close it. Oh, Doc., Doc., how often would we have gathered you, as a hen gathers her chickens, but ye would not. We hardly expect to publish a paper to suit the views of an average radical Senator, much less a narrow, illiterate, bigoted blatherskite of a much less standard.

A Colossal Fortune.

We have just been over to congratulate our genial, clever, affable, accomplished and erudite friend, Jas. Potter, Esq. The startling news reached him a few days ago, that he was about to be inflicted with a colossal fortune ranging anywhere from ten to forty millions. Old John Jenings, was an Englishman, and died leaving an immense fortune, which has accumulated to such an extent that it can scarcely be estimated. Mr. Jennings was the great grand father of our fellow townsman, and the heirs of this fortune are meeting with success in their claims. One of them residing at Shelby Ohio, will leave for England in June, to get possession of the estate. While Jim is confident, he is not bewildered at the dazzling prospects. We suggest, the building of an opera house, a street railroad and a hippodrome together with water works and a brewery, to which he will no doubt respond when he gets the money. As the estate is said to be worth four hundred millions of dollars, and there wont be over a hundred heirs, it will give Jim a chance to put down a new side walk, and put up a two story brick shoe shop. Forty millions is not to be sneezed at these hard times.

Election Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the annual election of the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, will be held at the town building, May 7th A. D. 1877, for the purpose of electing the following officers. One trustee for the 1st ward, one trustee for the 2nd ward, one trustee for the 3d ward, one trustee for the 4th ward, one trustee for the 5th ward, one clerk, one treasurer and one assessor.

Attest. J. L. Roth, Town clerk,
Auburn, April 16th, 1877.

AN ORDINANCE.

An Ordinance forbidding the citizens of the town of Auburn to allow swine to run at large, and prescribing the duties of the Marshal relative thereto.

Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the Board of Trustees of the incorporated town of Auburn, in DeKalb county, in the state of Indiana, that it shall be unlawful for any citizen of said town to allow his or her swine to run at large, upon the streets alleys or uninclosed land within the said town.

Sec. 2. Whereas, any swine shall be found running at large or pasturing upon any of the uninclosed lands, streets or alleys of said town, it shall be, and is hereby declared to be the duty of the Marshal of said town, to take up and impound said swine, in the public pound of said town.

Sec. 3. The Marshal upon taking up and impounding said swine, shall immediately give notice in writing to the owner of such animal, if known to him, if not, he shall give notice by posting up in three of the most public places in Union township, in DeKalb county, Indiana, a notice in writing, stating therein the time of the taking up, the age and marks, and a full description of the animal taken up, that the owner thereof is unknown to him, and the place where said animal is impounded.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of said marshal to carefully attend to, feed and provide for said swine thus taken up and if, after the expiration of ten days from the day of posting up said notices or notifying the said owner, as provided for in section three of this ordinance, no person shall appear and claim and prove the animal so taken up, to be his property, the Marshal shall immediately advertise said animal for sale at public auction, by posting up in three of the most public places in Union township, said county, written notices, stating thereon the time and place of sale, the description of the animal to be sold, that the same was taken up as an animal not entitled by law to run at large, or pasture upon the public commons, which notice shall be posted up at least ten days before the day of sale.

Sec. 5. If at any time before the expiration of ten days from the time of posting up the notices as provided for in section three of this ordinance, any person shall appear and claim the animal taken up as his property, and prove by his own affidavit, or the affidavit of any other person, that the animal taken up belongs to him and shall pay the Marshal for taking up said animal the sum of three dollars for his trouble and expense of keeping the same, he shall be entitled to the custody of the animal taken up and it shall be the duty of the Marshal to immediately deliver the animal so taken up, to the owner, provided, that in all cases where the owner shall be notified by the Marshal in writing by a notice delivered to said owner in person, if he shall immediately proceed to take into his custody the animal so taken up, he shall be liable to pay to said Marshal the sum of one dollar and fifty cents only.

Sec. 6. In all cases when any animal shall be taken up and impounded under the provisions of this ordinance, if the owner shall not appear and prove the animal so taken up to be his property, as in the 5th section of this ordinance provided, and pay the amount due the Marshal for the taking up and impounding of the same, as provided in said section 5, previous to the day of sale specified in the notices of sale, it shall be the duty of the Marshal to proceed and sell at public auction the animal so taken up for the highest price bid for the same, and out of the sum bid for and received for the animal so sold he shall be entitled to retain the sum of three dollars for his services rendered in the taking up of said animal, and the forth sum of ten cents per day for each day he shall have kept and fed the said animal; and the balance of the money received for said animal shall be paid over the Treasurer of DeKalb county, Indiana, by said Marshal to be by him disposed of as provided for by law.

Sec. 7. Whereas, an emergency exists this ordinance shall take effect immediately after its publication in the Auburn Courier, a newspaper published in said town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana.

UNDER THE VIOLETS.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Her hands are cold; her face is white;
No more her pulses come and go;
Her eyes are shut to life and light;
Fold the white vesture, snow on snow,
And lay her where the violets blow.

But not beneath a graven stone,
To plead for tears with alien eyes;
A slender cross of wood alone
Shall say that here a maiden lies
In peace beneath the peaceful skies.

And gray old trees of hugest limb
Shall wheel their circling shadows round
To make the scorching sunlight dim
That drinks the greenness from the ground,
And drop their dead leaves on her mound.

When o'er their boughs the squirrels run,
And through their leaves the robins call,
And, ripening in the autumn sun,
The acorns and the chestnuts fall,
Doubt not that she will heed them all.

For her the morning choir shall sing
Its matins from the branches high,
And every minstrel-voice of spring,
That trills beneath the April sky,
Shall greet her with its earliest cry.

When, turning round their dial-track,
Eastward the lengthening shadows pass,
Her little mourners, clad in black,
The crickets, sliding through the grass,
Shall pipe for her an evening mass.

At last the rootlets of the trees
Shall find the prison where she lies,
And bear the buried dust they seize
In leaves and blossoms to the skies.
So may the soul that warmed it rise.

If any, born of kindlier blood,
Should ask, "What maiden lies below?"
Say only this: "A tender bud,
That tried to blossom in the snow,
Lies withered where the violets blow."

THE PAYMASTER'S ROBBERY.

A Reminiscence of the War of 1812.

Watertown is the county seat of Jefferson county, New York. It is situated on the south side of Black river, a large and rapid stream. This river rises, far up in the Adirondac mountains, and pursuing a westerly course for more than a hundred miles, empties into Lake Ontario at its eastern extremity, not far from the outlet of the St. Lawrence river. It is a valuable stream, not only watering a large proportion of the northern part of the State, but abounding with many rapids and falls, and thus furnishing a multitude of privileges for manufacturing purposes, which are being amply occupied. Watertown is located about ten miles up this stream from Sackett's Harbor. This latter place, during the last war with Great Britain, was the headquarters of our northwestern armies, and the randezvous of the American war-ships on Lake Ontario. Even at as early a date as that struggle (commencing in 1811) Watertown was a village of no inconsiderable magnitude and importance. And yet it has been comparatively unknown to the people of our country generally until of late years. But the building of the Rome, Watertown and Cape Vincent railroad, when the St. Lawrence river and its Thousand Isles became a fashionable summer residence and fishing resort, Watertown rose rapidly into importance and celebrity. Visitors to the beautiful regions of the St. Lawrence, when nearing them by railroad and crossing the Black river at Watertown, find themselves suddenly in the midst of a large and thriving town, filled with manufactories and rapidly advancing to the dimensions of a city to which point it has already attained. The settlement of this place commenced near the close of the last century, or about the year 1795. The people who originally located there were from the New England States, and were a much more than ordinarily intelligent, educated, industrious and enterprising class of citizens.

During the war of 1812 Watertown was a great thoroughfare for United States troops, militia, sailors and sutlers, and all the motley crowd which follow an army. Being in the vicinity of Sackett's Harbor, the headquarters of the northwestern armies, and in the vicinity of the Canada line, near which nearly all the hard battles of that war were fought, it was the scene of many bold deeds and daring adventures, and of exceptionally thrilling events.

Passing my early days in this vicinity of encounters, battles by land and water, soldiers, sailors, marchings, countermarching and encampments, my young mind became necessarily filled with the history of thousands of stories of slaughters, woundings and death, scalping and tortures by Indians, and the many wild scenes and transactions of which war is always the prolific source.

Among the many noted transactions which could be narrated, the most remarkable, in many particulars, was what came to be called "the Whittlesey robbery." Being a young and personal spectator of some of its most tragic events, I will narrate them as they were then deeply imprinted on my fresh recollection. In this effort my memory is strengthened and assisted by Dr. Hough's history of Jefferson county, and also by a pamphlet lately placed in my possession by a lady of Watertown (Mrs. Judge Strong, formerly Mrs. Norris M. Woodruff), an old friend of mine. This pamphlet is entitled "The Life and Character of Jason Fairbanks."

Samuel Whittlesey, Esq., a lawyer by profession, of fine abilities, settled in Watertown in 1807. He and his wife were members in good standing of the Congregationalist (now Presbyterian) church of that town. The office of first Judge of this county, and other appointments of distinction were conferred upon him, the duties whereof he discharged creditably and honorably.

At the close of the war of 1812, Gov. Tompkins conferred on Judge Whittlesey the appointment of Brigade Paymaster, for the purpose of paying off the militia belonging in that region of the State, who had served for longer or shorter periods during the then late war with Great Britain. As sureties for the faithful and prompt discharge of his duties, and as indorsers for whatever amount of moneys might come into his possession, Judge Whittlesey presented the names of Perley Keyes and Jason Fairbanks, both residents of Watertown. These were men of New England birth, and of strongly developed New England characteristics. Perley Keyes was an intelligent, shrewd, long-headed man, and Jason Fairbanks was possessed of more than ordinary courage, vim and energy, and both had the confidence of the community as men of integrity and honesty.

In due time Judge Whittlesey repaired to New York city, and drew from the Mechanics' Bank $35,000 of Government funds in bills varying from $1 to $10 each. Evidently he had an honorable and sincere intention to use these funds in a lawful manner for the payment of the militia. But unfortunately he allowed his wife to accompany him on his journey. Mrs. Whittlesey was quite an extraordinary woman. She was well educated, intelligent, thoroughly versed in politics, and a great lover of controversy on that subject; tyrannical, wilful, quick-witted, able to hold an argument with the distinguished men of that day, exceedingly proud and puffed up with family rank and distinction, but, as it proved at last, she was thoroughly destitute of moral principle! It was very generally believed that she was the prime and sole instigator of her well-meaning husband in those events which soon followed, and which filled that region with excitement, and finally resulted in a most fearful tragedy!

In the winter of 1815-16 Judge Whittlesey and wife made their journey to New York after the Government funds. They traveled by private conveyance, in their own sleigh, a very common method of journeying in those days. On their way back to Watertown Mrs. Whittlesey pretended to make the discovery while at Schenectady that their trunk containing the money had been broken open and robbed of $7,000. But in fact it afterward proved that she, herself, without the knowledge of her husband, had broken open the trunk and abstracted therefrom the missing money. And this was the commencement of an artful scheme to get possession of the whole amount drawn from the bank. Judge Whittlesey was confounded and overwhelmed at this robbery as he honestly supposed. What should be done in view of this loss? He feared, yea, clearly foresaw, it would be attributed by the world to his own unaccountable carelessness, even if suspicion went no farther. Then it was that his unprincipled wife commenced artfully to carry forward her plan to reason her husband into the keeping of the whole sum drawn from the bank. Her purpose is thus described in the pamphlet above named.

"By degrees she began to hint darkly that it mattered little what was done; that they were ruined without hope of escape; that it would be utterly impossible to satisfy a carping, uncharitable world they had not abstracted the money themselves; that it would seem so unreasonable and unlikely anybody would take that amount, and leave a large balance behind; that they would undoubtedly be charged with embezzling the money, and forthwith prosecuted for the amount, and that this would sweep away every dollar of their hard savings. In his distraction and perplexity this reasoning sounded so like logical deduction that Judge Whittlesey was obliged to assent to the terrible array of consequences, and thus she succeeded in getting him into her toils, and then fastening him to his destruction."

When the Whittleseys returned to Watertown, they forthwith declared they had been robbed in Trenton, a small village through which they passed on their journey. And, to confirm this story, they exhibited a pair of saddlebags in which they said they carried the bank bills, with several slits cut in the side, through which they affirmed their belief the robbers had extracted the money. At first their story was quite extensively believed. Their bail, Messrs. Fairbanks and Keyes, were amazed at the loss, and saw financial ruin staring them in the face—for at that period $35,000 was considered a large sum, the loss of which would swallow up the means of individuals in ordinary circumstances.

These men had many private consultations together in regard to the story of the robbery—listened often to the Whittleseys, and took into mature consideration all the alleged circumstances of the case. Their doubts grew apace, and they soon commenced a well-laid system of espionage. During dark nights they watched around the Whittlesey house and even, by turns, ascended the roof of the kitchen, where they could creep to the windows of the sleeping room, and listen to snatches of private conversation, when the guilty pair supposed no ear was open to their confidential talk.

In this manner both Fairbanks and Keyes became thoroughly satisfied, beyond the slightest doubt, of the guilt of the Whittleseys. They heard abundantly enough to convince them that Judge Whittlesey and wife had not been robbed at all, and that the money was in their possession, concealed somewhere about the premises. At the same time they pretended to believe with great sincerity the story of the robbery, and offered large rewards for the detection of the thieves.

Thus several months elapsed. Judge Whittlesey finally began to see that public sentiment was evidently turning against him and his wife—that the people were beginning to suspect that they might be guilty—that the family were annoyed by these doubts, and that to regain their peace of mind and retain their respectability it might soon be necessary for them to remove to some new locality in the Western States. Gradually this idea was developed by the Whittleseys and circulated, until it became familiarly talked of in the village, and the family began to make open preparations for removal. Indeed, the two daughters (innocent and estimable young ladies) were sent in advance to Sackett's Harbor, where they were to tarry a day or two until joined by the whole family, to embark on Lake Ontario for a new home in some Western State.

Fairbanks and Keyes had in vain endeavored to find the hiding place of the missing money. They saw clearly that a crisis had arrived, and that they must take some step immediately or the guilty ones would slip away and leave them to financial ruin. After much consultation, and many doubts as to the lawfulness of their proceedings, they formed a desperate plan to secure the stolen funds at all hazards, and proceeded to put it into execution at once.

The day of departure had arrived. Judge Whittlesey dressed himself in a new and costly suit of clothes for his journey—entirely unconscious of the net about to spring upon him. Mr. Fairbanks called in the early part of the morning, and invited him to walk over to the residence of Mr. Keyes, who lived on a farm on the then southern border of the village. He said he wanted to consult in regard to measures that could still be adopted to discover the robbers. Judge Whittlesey, who was a courteous gentleman, immediately consented to make the call. Of course he had not the slightest suspicion of the scene which was soon to transpire, and in which he was to bear so conspicuous a part.

On arriving at the residence of Mr. Keyes they learned that he was in a rear lot of his farm. This lot was on the borders of a small forest, and had in its inclosure a large and deep spring of water. On their meeting Mr. Keyes, a few moments were spent in talking the matter over. Judge Whittlesey was reminded of the liability of his bail for the missing money, and that unless it could be recovered they were ruined men. They asserted that they felt justified as bondsmen in taking any measures within their power however extreme to obtain the missing funds and save themselves from bankruptcy. Finally they said:

"Judge Whittlesey, we are entirely confident you were never robbed; that you have the money now in your possession, or on your premises, and unless you immediately produce it, or lead us forthwith to the place of its concealment, we have determined to drown you at once in this pool of water!"

In great perturbation Judge Whittlesey solemnly protested his innocence, and called God to witness the truth of his assertion. But the hour of retribution had come—as it always will come, sooner or later in this world or the future. In a moment they seized him, bound his arms behind him with a cord they had provided for the purpose, and plunged him at once into the deep, cold pool of water. After allowing him to struggle there a few moments, they drew him forth nearly exhausted by strangulation. They then questioned him anew, asserted their certainty that he had the money, and if he would restore it they would save his life.

With a positiveness most unaccountable, Judge Whittlesey again in the strongest terms asserted his entire innocence of the robbery. But Fairbanks and Keyes had become desperate, and once more assured him of their determined purpose to take his life on the spot unless he revealed the secret of the place of concealment of the funds. Again and immediately they ingulfed him in the dark and muddy pool; and, this time, they held him there so long that, to their great alarm, they thought him dead indeed! However, after long efforts, they succeeded in restoring him to life again. But when the power of speech was restored the Judge, to the astonishment of his adversaries, still marvelously re-asserted his innocence of the crime, and positively affirmed that neither he nor his family knew anything at all of the missing money.

His bondsmen were in an extremity, and knew not what to do. They really had no design to take the life of Judge Whittlesey, but purposed only to frighten him, and thus compel him to disgorge the stolen money. It is true they were in danger of drowning him, in which case their own lives would be jeopardized; and, indeed, they had in their harsh and violent measures already gone so far that unless they succeeded in causing him to acknowledge the robbery they were exposed to the extreme penalty of the law. And yet they felt entirely confident of his guilt; and, in their utter extremity, determined on another attempt to make him confess, even if his and their lives were lost in consequence of the effort.

Fairbanks was at that time a bachelor, and turning to Keyes, said, "Come, Keyes, help me put him in once more, then give me whatever money you have about your person and take care of yourself for your family's sake. I have no one dependent upon me and want no witness present to see the conclusion of this tragedy. I shall drown him! and then flee to Canada, and will address you from Kingston, and inform you where to write to me!" The two friends solemnly shook hands and took final leave of one another, and Keyes, turning, made a pretense of withdrawing from the scene of the apparent tragedy. Then facing Whittlesey again, who stood trembling with fear of immediate death, Fairbanks approached and exclaimed, "Now, Judge, this is your final hour, and death is at hand. If I put you in again and you still persist in denying the robbery, you will assuredly die."

He seized him abruptly again, and plunged him headlong into the deep pool before him. Judge Whittlesey finally becoming convinced, as he entered once more the cold waters of the spring, that these men were in right down earnest to take his life in their desperation, and that his last moments were gathering their darkness around him, struggled his mouth to the surface of the pool, and cried out vociferously: "I'll own it! I'll own it!" Whereupon Keyes returned and aided Fairbanks in dragging the Judge from what appeared to be his watery grave—fainting, struggling and exhausted. He owned up the whole robbery at once, and said the money was then undoubtedly in his wife's possession on her person, or under a tile of the hearth in a certain chamber.

After his confession it was agreed that Keyes should remain with the Judge near the spring, while Fairbanks should immediately repair to Mr. Whittlesey's mansion to obtain corroborative proof of the truth of Judge Whittlesey's acknowledgment. Rapidly, and without turning to the right or left, Fairbanks passed through the streets of the village with coat off, pantaloons rolled above his boots, covered with mud and dripping with wet, and his eyes wild with excitement, the people gazing and wondering on what errand he could thus be hurrying in such a strange plight. Rapidly entering the house, he inquired for Mrs. Whittlesey, and was informed she was in her chamber. He flew to the door and demanded admittance. Mrs. W. replied that she was dressing and he could not enter.

Without a moment's hesitation Fairbanks placed his heavy foot against the door, and it flew with rapidity from its hinges. Mrs. Whittlesey, on seeing him enter in that violent and unaccustomed manner, was instantly filled with alarm and threw herself violently on the bed. Without ceremony, Fairbanks dragged her to the floor, and, throwing the bedding apart, there discovered the long-lost and long-searched-for money. Mrs. Whittlesey, filled with alarm, cried out: "You've found it! You've got it! My God, have I come to this!" The bank bills had been deftly and slyly quilted in a pair of drawers, to be worn undoubtedly by Mrs. Whittlesey on their expected journey, for safety.

Fairbanks seized the drawers, rolled them up, and speedily returned to the spring where Keyes and the Judge were impatiently awaiting him. All three then in company started for the village and the Whittlesey residence. And truly a strange spectacle they presented to the citizens. Fairbanks and Keyes, dripping with wet and covered with mud and slime, and Whittlesey walking between them, his new black suit saturated and ruined with the dirty water of the spring, and his fine, glossy hat crumpled and wrinkled, and drawn down in shame over his face, the most mortified, miserable, ruined wretch in all the world.

On arriving at the stately residence, they were met by Mrs. Whittlesey, pale and wild with rage, who exclaimed, "Whittlesey! you coward, you idiot! Why did you disclose our secret and disgrace us before the world?" "I could only thus save my life," exclaimed the mortified Judge. "Save your life, you fool! I would have died a thousand deaths before I would acknowledge one iota of the deed!" And no doubt, from what immediately took place, she would have suffered drowning again and again rather than have revealed a word of her guilt.

In the meantime the tidings of the scene which took place at the pool of water, and the recovery of the stolen money flew like wildfire throughout the village, and the entire population—lawyers, doctors, merchants, mechanics, laborers, men, women and children—poured like a flood into the streets and made their way hastily to the Whittlesey mansion—a large, fine, white house—at that time the most elegant in the town or vicinity. Exulting vociferations and loud huzzas filled the air. Rejoicing to the fullest extent was everywhere exhibited throughout the entire community. Cannon were rapidly drawn from the arsenal, near at hand, loaded to the muzzle and dragged to the street in front of the house, to be discharged as an indication of the general gladness that the villainy had been discovered and the money found and restored. The relatives and friends of the guilty family, which stood high among the most wealthy and fashionable people of the place, crowded the premises, and in and around the dwelling.

The residence stood on one of the main streets, about 200 rods from the Black river. To approach the river from that point, one would be compelled to cross the street—pass through the village burying ground—descend a bank or hill, about 100 feet, and then approach a perpendicular precipice of lime-stone rock, of about thirty feet, to reach the surface of the stream. At that place, the river ran deep, dark and rapid, it being about a quarter of a mile below two falls of some forty feet each in height. Pandemonium seemed to reign around the Whittlesey abode. The streets in front and rear of the house were filled with excited people, just ready to fire the cannon, and make all other manifestations in their power of exultation at the turn which affairs had taken. Within, the dwelling was pervaded with weeping, and agony and cries of distress from friends were heard in nearly every room.

Suddenly Mrs. Whittlesey disappeared! On every tongue the inquiry was, Where is she, and whither has she gone? In vain the house was searched throughout; nothing could be seen or found of her. In a few moments a woman living upon the opposite side of the street suddenly appeared in great alarm with the tidings that a moment before Mrs. W. crossed her door-step on a full run, her eyes wild with rage, and her face pale as death. With swiftness she flew through the burying-ground, down the first bank and disappeared. "To the river! to the river!" was the shout from the general multitude. "Mrs. Whittlesey has run to throw herself into the stream!"

I, a little boy then of some 10 years of age, was mingling in the crowd full of wonder at the marvelous event then being transacted. And when the vast multitude rushed through the burying-ground, down the steep bank, and to the abrupt precipice at the river's brink, I was borne along with the crowd. Then, at a place which has always since borne the name of "Whittlesey point," commenced a rapid and sharp search to discover the missing and distracted woman. Passing along the stream by the bank to a turn in the river by which the eye could look some distance down the current, a voice was heard calling aloud, "There she is! see her floating in the middle of the stream."

A boat put out, and with a hook her body was drawn to the shore, just above a bridge which then crossed the river into the village of Pamelia. And, indeed, it proved to be the body of Mrs. Whittlesey. Although she could not have been in the water fifteen minutes, yet when drawn to the shore and taken from the stream she appeared to be dead beyond the reach of recovery. Physicians were sent for and every effort made to resuscitate her, but all in vain. She was stone dead! A butcher named Israel Whitney was returning from the country with a load of lambs. Beholding a multitude on the bank of the stream, a few feet lower than the bridge, he called out, "What has happened? What are you all doing down there?" Some one replied, "Mrs. Whittlesey has drowned herself, and we are endeavoring to restore her to life." "Endeavoring to restore her!" replied Whitney. "Hold on, hold on, I say; in with her again; I am afraid she is not quite dead yet. Make sure work of it!" But she was gone beyond all recovery. And such was the earthly end of Mrs. Whittlesey and of her wicked attempt at robbery.

Moral.—Sixty-one years have passed away since the events transpired which are above narrated. In connection with many others of a similar nature in later years, it has led me to see still more clearly the truthfulness of the scripture declarations, which I long since embraced and proclaimed, that "God judgeth in the earth," as well as hereafter, and that "though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished." However artfully they may devise evil, and form plans of escape from penalty, they cannot avoid divine retribution. Jehovah rules in all worlds, and in every state of being. Either in the earth, or the life to come, or in some state of existence, he will overtake them and inflict certain and just punishment upon them.—J. M. Austin.

"By their Works Ye Shall Know Them."

The Irishman who thought the druggist stingy because the emetic was so small is only surpassed in his parsimonious drollery by those who persistently adhere to the use of those nauseating, disgustingly large and drastic pills, while Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, which are sugar-coated, and little larger than mustard seeds, will, by their steady and gentle action on the liver, correct all torpidity, thus permanently overcoming constipation. In South America they have almost entirely superseded all other pills, and are relied on, fully by the people, and often used as a preventive of the various affections of the stomach, liver, and bowels, so prevalent in that climate. Pierce's Pocket Memorandum Books are given away at drug-stores.

A Card for Rational Readers.

Irrational people always reject good advice, and in nothing is their folly more frequently conspicuous than in ignoring precautions necessary for the retention of health. Forecast, on the other hand, is a notable characteristic of the rational, and it is the exercise of this quality which we would suggest to them. Protect the system against diseases which fasten upon the debilitated, the nervous and the dyspeptic, by bracing the physique, regulating the stomach, bowels and liver, and banishing despondency, with the purest and most efficient of botanic invigorants, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. That these effects follow its use, and that it prevents as well as annihilates intermittent and remittent fevers, are facts established by indisputable evidence. To enjoy the twin blessings of "a sound mind and a sound body" in all their plenitude, try a course of this sterling medicine.

Mothers Who Have Daughters That Have Weak Lungs

Should arrest the disease when it is in the incipient stage. It is indicated by a hacking cough, pains in the chest, difficulty of breathing, or oppression of the lungs. If this be permitted to run on, tubercles will form, and Consumption will be the result. A most valuable remedy will be found in Allen's Lung Balsam to cure and check this disease in its first stage.

ANOTHER WHISKY WAR.

Secretary Sherman Orders a Renewal of Hostilities.

[Washington Cor. New York Tribune.]

Secretary Sherman has already taken hold of the whisky ring in a very emphatic manner. The pending applications for release from civil suits in several parts of the West having been called to his attention, he was promptly refused them, and has ordered the prosecutions to proceed at once in all cases. This not only disposes of the efforts of the ring to avoid the penalties for their frauds, but also finishes the efforts of a crowd of strikers now here, whose business it is to sell so-called influence, on the pretense of being able to obtain decisions from the department.

Some gentlemen interested in the distillation of whisky who have recently arrived here from Cincinnati report that the manufacture of illicit spirits in the West is very great. They say that frauds upon the revenue by illicit distillers are now committed with great recklessness, and with as much success as before Gen. Bristow began his war upon the ring. The lack of energy which has characterized most of the prosecutions since Gen. Bristow's resignation, and the ease with which pardons have been obtained, together with the general belief which seems to have prevailed among those interested in the frauds that the vigorous prosecutions instituted by Secretary Bristow were not fully approved by the administration, have given immunity, so these gentlemen say, to illicit distilling. Honest manufacturers of spirits in Cincinnati are accordingly thinking of closing their distilleries until the Government does something to protect them by making whisky frauds impossible. At the present time, these gentlemen say, an honest distiller cannot compete with the manufacturers of "crooked" whisky. They said that the amount of illicit spirits in the Cincinnati market is very great.

The present indications are that a change in the policy of the Treasury Department toward this class of lawbreakers will take place at once, and that, profiting by Mr. Bristow's experience and the discoveries he made as to the methods of fraud, the war upon the "crooked" whisky ring will at once be renewed by Secretary Sherman with great vigor.

New York and the Grain Trade.

As a grain market New York is steadily losing while Baltimore is as steadily gaining ground. The cause is not so much Baltimore's wisdom as New York's folly. Enjoying for generations the great advantage of the main American point of export for cereals, New York's merchants imagined that their hold on the shippers of the West could not be shaken, and, presuming on their ability to control the grain movement, they levied grievous tolls upon shipments. Terminal charges were multiplied upon slight pretext, complaints were disregarded, and it was not until her merchants saw her receipts decreasing year by year that New York woke up to a realization of the fact that other ports were seriously disputing and one of them overcoming her supremacy.

The New York Tribune gives the following exhibit of the total receipts of grain, flour not included, at each of the ports named, for three weeks ending March 17, in comparison with receipts for the same period last year:

	1876.	1877.
New York	2,325,412	1,299,480
Baltimore	2,160,560	2,296,750
Philadelphia	1,814,028	1,027,100
Boston	858,924	1,010,437

The great increase in Boston's receipts is explained as not due to the export trade, "for during those weeks only about 140,000 bushels of grain went abroad" from Boston. Apparently the increased demand was for consumption in the industrial towns drawing upon Boston for supplies. The table quoted above does not so fully demonstrate Baltimore's gain and New York's loss as the following for a longer period, namely the eleven weeks last passed, as compared with a like period in 1876:

	1876.	1877.
New York	7,417,982	5,714,531
Baltimore	6,880,360	6,728,094
Philadelphia	5,309,250	3,360,000
Boston	1,707,180	2,149,544

The figures are sufficiently significant of the fact that New York no longer enjoys the advantages once almost wholly her own. Her merchants have to blame their own greed and shortsightedness. While in fancied security they failed to keep abreast of the times, and piled up tolls, and neglected to supply proper facilities, Baltimore was wide awake, bidding for the grain business of the West. Quick to see the advantages she held out, Western shippers abandoned New York, pouring the bulk of their stores into other and nearer granaries.—Chicago Times.

Another Black Hills History.

In April, 1876, Mr. John Robinson, a carpenter living in Fulton county, was advised by his doctor to emigrate to a mountainous country. He took his family to the Black Hills, where he found work putting up sheds for miners. On Oct. 26 he and five others went five miles into the mountains to do some work. The party not coming back, search was made. The six men were found dead. They had been killed and scalped by the Indians. Mrs. Robinson, thus left a widow with two children, one of 14 years, the other of 7, was equal to the emergency. She sold her household goods for $100 to some miners, and started East with her children. The little money she had took her but a short distance on her journey. By working at whatever she could get to do, and walking hundreds of miles, she finally reached her mother's home near Ellenville, Ulster county, a few days since, having been nearly five months on the way. She advises everybody to stay away from the Black Hills.—New York Sun.

The Potato Beetle in Germany.

Disagreeable news for agriculturists and the public generally has been received by the British Commissioners of Customs. The Colorado potato beetle has been discovered in a living state at Bremen upon goods brought from New York, and specimens of the beetle have been seen at other places in Germany. The Commissioners have issued a circular to the Collectors of Customs at the various ports in the United Kingdom, directing that instructions already given for detecting the beetle be at once applied to potatoes imported from Bremen or any other place in the German empire.

A Fine Legal Point.

The growing cunning of crime is being matched by equally increasing astuteness on the bench, as is evidenced by the recent decision of Judge Brady, of the New York Supreme Court, in the case of Connors, the Northampton (Mass.) bank robber. The theory of the defense was that Connors had never been in Massachusetts, and, that therefore he could not be surrendered on a warrant from the authorities of that State. The United States constitution recites that a person "shall flee from justice," in order to be subject to requisition between States. Technically, Connors did not "flee" from Massachusetts justice, but he was the master spirit of the burglary, and received the "plunder." So Judge Brady applied a little common sense to the case, and took the ground that essentially and really the man in New York who commits a crime in Massachusetts flees from Massachusetts though his body has never left Manhattan island. The case will be appealed, if necessary, until it reaches the Supreme Court of the United States.

Daniel Deronda.

I have recently been told a curious fact in regard to George Eliot's last novel, "Daniel Deronda." It is this: The heroine, Gwendolen, is a lady living in London, who some years ago was possessed of nearly $1,000,000. She went to the continent and became "an infatuated gambler," losing nearly all her money, and parting with her necklace, as the book states. During her infatuation she was narrowly watched by George Eliot, and also by a wealthy gentleman living to-day in Manchester. So interested did he become in "Gwendolen," that, as the book stated, he offered to make good her losses if she would cease play, but was refused. As I have said, the lady now lives in London on an income of about $1,000 a year, all that is saved from the wreck. She is 25 years of age, unmarried, and said to be very handsome, and what adds interest to the tale is the fact that she is the granddaughter of one of England's greatest poets. —Correspondence Cleveland Leader.

Chinese Drugs.

If blue glass be not a panacea, there are many curious Chinese remedies that can be tried. For instance: Dried lizards, dung beetles' skins, and armadillo scales, for cutaneous diseases; caterpillars, used as a purgative for bronchial complaints; hedgehogs' skin, a decoction for pulmonary complaints; snake skins, for small-pox and skin diseases; petrified crabs, for boils and sores; dried cow's gall, as an expectorant; glue from tigers' bones and asses' skins, as a tonic; salted scorpions, for small-pox, rheumatism and ague; deer horn jelly, as a stimulant; rhinoceros' horn, a decoction for small-pox; dried toads, a tonic and sudorific; dried maggots, for fever and dysentery; tiger's skull, for typhoid fever and hydrophobia; pearls, used in affections of the heart and liver, and powdered for ulcers and opacities of the cornea. These remedies are selected from a list of Chinese drugs exhibited at the Centennial. It reads like an invoice of the witches' caldron.

Centenarians Gone.

Five centenarians have recently died in Western New York, their ages being set down respectively at 110, 109, 108, 106 and 104 years. The oldest of these was a moderate but steady drinker and smoker, while the next oldest was an equally steady horseback-rider, the man of the whisky and pipe outstripping the man of the open air by a year. One of the five was a woman. All, of whose mental condition any note is made, seem to have kept their faculties unimpaired until the last, and the figures as to their ages are stated with all the positiveness of belief. If they are to be accepted as correct, this series of deaths, or rather of lives, in the same region, may well be called remarkable.

The Four-and-a-Half Per Cents.

There is good authority for the statement that the Treasury Department has reason to believe that the entire amount of the 4½ per cent. loan will be taken before the meeting of Congress in December. One hundred and thirty millions of the amount have already been placed, about half of which is subscribed to in Europe, leaving $170,000,000 to be placed. Only $20,000,000 of the five-twenties of May and November are now outstanding. After these are called in the treasury will commence on January and July, 1865, 6 per cents. About $150,000,000 of these will have to be called in to complete the placing of the 4½ per cents.—New York Tribune.

A Rush to the Black Hills.

Reports received in Washington represent the Black Hills territory as settling up more rapidly than Government officers had any reason to expect. It is now said by those familiar with the present tide of emigration that 50,000 people will go there this summer, attracted by the late gold discoveries. A daily line of stages has already been established from Cheyenne, and a tri-weekly one for the Fort Kearney line from Sidney, and one or two others will soon be established from other points. The travel is already so great that passengers have to engage their seats at least a week in advance.

Serfs in Russia.

According to some statistics on serf emancipation which have been published in the Golos, there are still 2,000,000 of serfs in Russia, their emancipation not having been effected, either in consequence of the high price of land or their own unwillingness to accept the new state of things. In the eastern provinces of the empire the annual number of serfs emancipated is rapidly diminishing. From 1851 to 1865 it was over 500,000; from 1865 to 1870, 350,000, and in 1876 it was only 110,810.

The Christian missions employ 220 agents and spend $350,000 a year to convert Jews in Europe. The most successful work has been done in London, where there have been 1,395 baptisms, but the mission at Rome, which has been open several years, does not count a single convert. This country, Northern Africa and Russia, which have large and growing Jewish populations, are especially destitute of missions.

The whole population of British India is close on 239,000,000. The density of population varies from five to over 750 inhabitants per square mile.

FEMININE SCIENCE.

What She Said on the Way Home from the Lecture.

Yes, I think it was perfectly splendid!
I'm sure I feel awfully wise,
With my head full of glaciers and icebergs

BEAUTIFUL SPRING.

'Twere the first bird of spring:
He attempted to sing;
But ere she had uttered a note,
A dead bird was him;
He fell from the limb,
For the music had friz in her throat.

Ladies' dresses will fit more closely than ever this spring. Their dresses will be made so tight, indeed, that lovely woman will lose her last relic of superiority over man—she won't be able to put her clothes on over her head any more.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

An old bachelor never mourns his blessed singleness so much as when he is awakened at midnight by a masked burglar, and painfully realizes the fact as he "scrouges" over against the wall, that there is no loving heart lying on the outer edge of the bed to discuss the situation with the intruder.

He was the son of a Bishop, and had been carefully educated, but he had his wild oats to sow, nevertheless, and when the old man sharply asked him how long he thought the door of salvation would stand open, he said he couldn't tell, but he didn't want to be jerked over the threshold.

The imperishable affection of a child for its mother is equaled in no other phase of animal nature. A bright Nevada boy of 16 summers has the extracted teeth of his maternal ancestor manufactured into cribbage pegs, and now, when he holds a five and ten, it doubly reminds him of his deceased mother's maternal smile, and brings tears to his youthful eyes.

"Did you ever break a yoke of 4-year-old steers?" asked a farmer of a young chap who wished to marry his daughter. "No, I never did," was the meek reply, "but I have rode a mule in a circus, and had a good deal of other experience in the world." "No other experience," said the farmer, "could qualify you, young man, for trying to handle that girl," and the sad youth departed.

The Rinderpest.

The prevalence of rinderpest in Germany, and of that malady and the foot and mouth disease in England, has led the Treasury Department to issue a circular prohibiting the importation of neat cattle and the hides of neat cattle from those countries and Belgium, Holland and Ireland into the United States. It is suggested by the department, furthermore, that horses, sheep and swine coming from any of the countries named be examined by experts, and, if necessary, quarantined for a reasonable time; to which it is apprehended importers, as a rule, will offer no special objection, as it is to the interest of all concerned to prevent the spread of this disease in the United States.

USED IN HEALTH PREVENTS DISEASE.

TERRY'S SALICYLIC SOAP

(PATENT APPLIED FOR)

A Perfect Anti-Septic and Disinfectant Bath and Toilet Soap.

Takes the Place of all other Soaps for Daily use in the Family.

Manufactured from the purest vegetable Oils with the addition of that greatest known Anti-Septic and disinfectant

SALICYLIC ACID,

Making the most healthful, the most perfect, and the most economical Bath and Toilet Soap ever offered to the public.

Indorsed by the the medical profession and attested by thousands.

AS THE GREAT PREVENTIVE

In all cases of blood poisoning whether arising from malarial or miasmatic exhalations, defective sewerage, or any other causes.

Its constant use prevents the contracting of contageous diseases, typhoid, scarlet and all malarial fevers. It is invaluable, and should be used in all districts where fever and ague prevails as it is the greatest known preventive to that disease. It is of immense value in the cure of all skin disease; a trial proves it, and its use prevents contracting them. It is a special boon to school children who are constantly exposed. It is the most healthful bath soap for infants, worth its weight in gold in the nursery. It is no more expensive than other toilet soaps of good quality It goes further and its great superiority is bringing it into universal use. It has no disagreeable odor and is absolutely pure.

Extensively used in hospitals and sick rooms by order of physicians.

For sale by all druggists and grocers. Sample box containing three cakes sent post paid on receipt of 75 cents. Liberal terms to the trade.

Every indication goes to show that we will have better times after harvest. Wheat never looked better, and the prospect of war in the old countries has already began to tell the story of better times in this country. The news from the seat of war raised wheat to [illegible] and we shall soon see it up to $2.00 per bushel. Let them fight and we'll feed them.

Connecticut has taken a step in advance of all other states in its legislation for women. The acts of this year's legislation place the wife on an equality with the husband. She is secured the absolute control of her own property during life, and on the death of either party to the marriage contract the survivor inherits one-third of the real and personal estate of the deceased.

The attempt to maintain a State government by military force has been faithfully made and has miserably failed. It is time to try something else. The people are weary of such a state of affairs. They want peace and conciliation. They are willing to forgive and forget much. They recognize many brave and true men in the ranks of their late enemies. They are ready to accept the word of honor of their Southern brethern—especially those who advocated their cause on the field of battle—that they will be faithful to the Union as it was and the constitution as it is, and move forward with them in the effort to build up the waste places of our land.

When the renowned Mrs. Siddons was playing in Dublin, she, as "Lady Macbeth," came to that part where a drum sounds, and she exclaims, "A drum! a drum! Macbeth doth come!" There was some difficulty or neglect in obtaining the necessary instrument, and so, to her amazement, a trumpet sounded. She imediately saw how absurd it would be to say "drum," while the well known sound of the other met the ears of the vast audience, so she said, "A trumpet! a trumpet!" and stoped short amid breathless silence, not knowing how to rhyme it!" When a voice from the gallery called out, "Macbeth doth stump it!" at which the house broke into one peal of laughter and applause, and the tragedienne advanced to the foot-lights and bowed her acknowledgement for the relief.

"Personal Sacrifices, Sah!"

An applicant for the San Antonia Post office is absolutely certain that Hayes will give it to him. As there are about twenty in hot pursuit of the office, we had the curiosity to know what made him positive:

"Are you the widow of a deceased army officer, with a family to support?" we asked.

He replied that he had never tried to be anybody's widow.

"Did you stump for Hayes, or were you on the returning board, or did you serve the Union in the same regiment with Hayes, or did you go to singing school with Wheeler, or how is it, anyhow, that you know Hayes will appoint you?"

"Well, you see, I've made personal sacrifices for Hayes."

"How so?"

"It's confidential, remember."

"Certainly; honor bright."

"Well, I've lost 5 gallons of whisky and $50 worth of cigars, betting on Tilden. I have sent on the receipted bills with my application."

"Old Si."—No Faith in Blue Glass.

"Hit's de trufe, 'cordin' to Marse Willium. "He says dat blue glass is got mo' raisin' pow'r dan all de guwanner and souperflosgates in de country."

"Well, now, you'se stewart in de coutch, ain't yer?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, now, you jes git er blue glass sa'sser next Sunday an' see de 'feckt ob it when yer go ter rise de collecshun—ef dat succeed I'se agwine ter b'leeb in de sience ob blue glass, but not befo'!"

The New Dog Law.

Plymouth Democrat: This law is tough on dog owners. Every person owning or harboring a dog must return it to the assessor for taxation. He must pay $2 for a male and $5 for a female. He must obtain from the assessor a brass or copper tag, and keep it on the dog. If he fails, he shall be fined $10 for each day he neglects. If a dog is found on any person's place without a tag, that person shall be held guilty of harboring that dog, and shall be fined $10. If the dog loses the tag, the owner shall procure another from the assessor, and be fined $10 for every day he leaves the dog without a tag. Any person knowing of another person who keeps an untagged dog must prosecute him; or he shall be liable to a fine of ten dollars. Any person may kill an untagged dog, and it is the assessor's duty to do so. There is no provision preventing tramps from selling tags, but the tag bears the state arms.

The law is a scorcher, and will be enforced. The law was opposed on good grounds, but it passed.

K. K. K. Beware.

CINCINNATI, April 13, 1877.

To the Editor of the Enquirer:

Perhaps you know that times are very hard just now, and it seems as though they are not getting better. If something is not done for the poor and laboring classes soon there surely will be trouble in the land. There are a great many men on the brink of starvation, and it has been asserted that if times don't get better soon the business men of the city will find their houses burned to the ground some morning. It is positively asserted that they will burn Cincinnati to ashes, for they claim that this Government is run by the politicians and rich men of this country, and that they use the poor man at the ballot-box for their special advancement on the road to wealth. If things go on in this way, I earnestly hope that there will be a war between the rich and poor Rich men, look out, for when a man applies for work he is often hooted away.

PENN.

The above is from the Cincinnati Enquirer, written by a lunatic who ought to be led to a tree and stretched over a limb. How much better would it make the times to burn and destroy all the rich men's property. It is very plain to be seen that such an act would make the poor man a pauper.

English Enterprise.

Commercial enterprise in England takes many forms. A soap boiler sitting in his counting house a short time since, was waited upon by a drummer, and was asked what use he made of some particular refuse from his factory.

"Get rid of it," said the soap boiler, "in the easiest way I can. I generally pay to have it taken away, and am very glad to get rid of it on those terms."

"Well, then, I suppose," said the traveler, "you would have no objections to let me have it upon a cotract for three years at a small payment?"

"Certainly not," said the soap boiler, "if you will garantee to take it away at my time."

The two came to terms, and the contract was drawn up and signed in due form. Payment for the first quarter was made, and over a glass of sherry the soap boiler asked his visitor, out of mere curiosity what he did with the rubbish.

"Well, in confidence," said the traveler, "I don't mind telling you. We want it to make cheap butter."

To Consumptives

Consumption, that scourge of humanity, is the great dread of the human family, in all civilized countries.

I feel confident that I am in possession of the only sure, infallible Remedy—now known to the profession—for the positive and speedy cure of that dread disease, and its unwelcome concomitants, viz; Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Nervous Debility, &c., &c. Twenty-eight years experience, as a busy practioner, in the best Consumption Hospitals of the Old and New World, has taught me the value of this Medicine in the cure of all Throat and Lung Complaints.

Those suffering with consumption or any of the above maladies, by addressing me, giving symptoms, they shall be put in possession of this great boon, without charge, and shall have the benefit of my experience in thousands of cases successfully treated. Full directions for preparations and use, and all necessary advice and instructions for successful treatment at your own home, will be received by you by return mail, free of charge, by addressing

The Blue Ribbon.

The telegraph announces the organization all over the north-west of "Red Ribbon Clubs." These are simply Total Abstinence Leagues.—The badge is a tie of red ribbon worn in the button-hole, which is a notification to the world that the wearer is a [illegible] that he does not drink liquor at all. More recently the Blue Ribbon Clubs are springing up—the movement, it is said, organizing at Jackson, Michigan. There is a dispute, it seems, as to the real aim and purpose of the same. Some charge that the blue knot is sported in defiance and burlesque of the red—really meaning that the wearer will take a nip whenever and wherever invited.—On the contrary, those who belong, aver that the blue ribbon clubs are anti-treat leagues; that the blue badge is a sign that the individual will neither treat himself or ask to be treated—though he does not pledge himself not to drink at all. If this is true, the blue is really an auxiliary of the Red; for the senseless, abominable custom of treating has done as much as anything else to fill our land with drunkards.

One of our Indiana exchanges expresses the opinion that "a good road law efficiently executed would in ten years benefit Indiana to the extent of many millions of dollars. It would increase the value of farms, the price of products, and in the saving of time, damage to teams and harness alone, prove of incalculable benefits to the farming interest. There are great sections of splendid farming country, whole ranges in townships, in Indiana, that for six months in the year are practically cut off from the world—this too, when railroad stations and cities are within twenty miles. But we suppose this must continue to be so until farmers learn to send to the legislature something else than nascent congressmen, anxious only to distinguish themselves by sophomoric speeches, or heavy-headed old pumpkins, without either the intelligence or the capacity to represent their constituency." No improvement need be looked for in this particular until the people at large, not farmers alone, determin to look more to qualification than to personal fancy and imaginary popularity.—Ligonier Banner.

What Will Surprise an Indian.

The Indian has actual and common experience of many articles of civilized manufacture, the simplest of which is as entirely beyond his comprehension as the most complicated. He would be a simple exclamation point did he show surprise at everything new to him, or which he does not understand. He goes to the other extreme, and rarely shows or feels surprised at anything. He visits the states, and looks unmoved at the steamboat and locomotive. People call it stoicism. They forget that to his ignorance the production of a glass bottle is as inscrutable as the thunder; a piece of gaudy calico is a marvel, a common mirror a miracle. He knows nothing of the compartive difficulties of invention and manufacture, and to him the machanism of a locomotive is not in any way more matter of surprise than that of a wheelbarrow. When things in their own daily experience are performed in what to them is a remarkable way, they do express the most profound astonishment. I have seen several hundreds of Indians, eager and excited, following from one telegraph pole to another a repairer whose legs were encased in climbing boots. When he walked easily, foot over foot, up the pole, their surprise and delight found vent in the most vociferous expressions of applause and admiration. A white lady mounted on a side-saddle, in what to the Indian woman would be almost an impossible position, would excite more surprise and admiration than would a Hoe printing press in full operation.

Scarcity of Money.

There is no doubt but the present condition of all kinds of business and industry is fearfully depressed, and it behooved every family to look carefully to their expenses. Spring is coming on when children are liable to Croup, Whooping Cough, etc. Coughs and Colds will prevail everywhere, and Consumption, with other throat and lung diseases, will carry off many.—These diseases should not be neglected. Doctor's bills are expensive, and we would advise our people to use Boschee's German Syrup. It never has failed One bottle at 75 cents will keep your whole family well during the winter. Two doses will relieve any case. Sold in all towns in the United States, and by your druggist F. E. Davenport.

Davenport says blue lamp chimneys are death on blue spectacles.

The Remains of Washington Petrified.

We visited Washington's tomb to-day, at Mount Vernon, Va., some twelve miles from this city, down the Potomac, and we had the unusual privelage of beholding the mortal remains of the immortal Washington. Visitors to the tomb will remember that the [illegible] wall of the same has for several years been in a falling condition and in great need of repair. A few days since part of it tumbled into the tomb, completely covering the sarcophagus of Washington, and also that of Martha Washington. In order to repair the damage in a competent manner, it was found necessary to remove them a few feet from their resting-place. The one containing the remains of Martha Washington was removed first, but attracted no attention. But the unusual weight of the one containing the remains of Washington aroused the curiosity of the official who was superintending the work of the removal, and it was decided to open the sarcophagus in order to ascertain the cause. This was done, and the remains found to be petrified, in fact, a solid stone resembling a statue, the features perfectly natural, with the exception of the eyes and ears, no trace of which can be seen. The body is of a dark leathery color, and may be said to be a soft sand stone, which would likely break should an attempt be made to remove it from the sarcophagus. Edward Baker, an aged colored man, who has resided upon the farm since he was a boy, and who assisted in removing the remains from the old tomb to the present one, inform us that it is thirty-eight years since their last re-moval. At that time they had rested in the old tomb thirty-eight years, and were exhumed in a state of preservation beyond all expectation, being a solid compact mass, with the skin drawn tightly to the bones, petrification, no doubt having commenced its work. The repairs to the tomb will be completed to-day, and the sarcophagus is not likely to be opened for a century to come, unless, indeed, in the case of an accident, as in the present instance, and petrification will complete its work, and the remains of the immortal Washington will then be as eduring as his memory is dear.

The Boss Rat Killer.

A tall man with a nose like a muffin, went into a Main street boarding-house one day last week and asked for a dinner.

'Owing to the general depression of business, and consequent scarsity of the rhino, said the proprietor, looking the tall man over, 'a dinner will cost you thirty-five cents in advance.'

'I have nothing with me but a check on a Boston bank,' observed the tall man.

'Checks on Boston banks ain't worth a copper,' remarked the landlord; 'I guess you'll have to dine more sumptuously elsewhere.'

'Can't I do nothing for my dinner?' asked the tall man, as a hungry pang griped him.

'You can pay,' said the proprietor, impressively.

'You give me my dinner,' said the tall man; 'I'll agree to clean your house of every rat in it. I have performed the feat in many hotels throughout the country, with most satisfactory results.'

The proprietor accepted the bargain as a most advantageous one to himself, and the tall man seated himself at the table, where he did fearful execution among the victuals. He finished his dinner in half an hour, picked his teeth with a fork, called for a cigar, and proceeded to enjoy it.

'Now then,' said the proprietor, when the tall man had finished his smoke, 'let's get to business. Go for the rats.'

'Ah, yes,' returned the tall man; 'with pleasure. Procure me a light iron bar, about four feet in length, and I will proceed to business.'

The bar of iron was procured, and the loafers gathered around to witness the interesting proceedings.

'Now begin,' said the proprietor. 'Where will you commence first?'

'Right here,' repled the tall man as he carefully rolled back his cuffs, spit on his hands, and grasped the iron bar firmly, while the proprietor stood by with great anxiety depicted on his countenance.

'Now,' said the tall man, impressively, as he slowly elevated the bar, 'are you all ready?'

'All ready,' returned the proprietor, excitedly.

'Then,' said the tall man, 'bring on your rats.'

For the space of five minutes the excitement of an entire Presidental election filled the room. When it subsided the tall man was nowhere to be seen, and the proprietor was standing before a glass tying an oyster over his left eye. The rats still revel in their native freedom.

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1877.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE LOUISIANA COMMISSION.

THE commission was in executive session most of the day on the 13th, but nothing as to the nature of their deliberations was allowed to leak out. They sent a long cipher dispatch to the President relating the result of their [illegible] up to date. They stated that they found the Nicholls party indisposed to make any concessions, while the Packardites were ready to enter into an arrangement for a joint Legislature to determine the pending questions; but, this being rejected by the Nicholls party, the Packard party desire the President to decide which is the legal Governor. The commission received a dispatch from the President, but declined to make known its contents.

NEW ORLEANS dispatches of the 16th state that the Nicholls Legislature adopted the proposition of the commission to unseat seven members seated on contest, and install an equal number of members from the Packard Legislature, thus giving to the former body a legal quorum, and a small Democratic majority in both branches. The Nicholls Legislature also adopted resolutions recognizing the obligation resting upon the State Government to carry out in good faith the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the constitution of the United States; guaranteeing to the colored people complete protection and equality in rights and privileges of person and property, and the enforcement of the laws without discrimination on account of color; and proffering the olive branch to all political enemies.

ADVICES of the 18th from New Orleans, are to the effect that Packard had flatly refused to accede to the terms proffered by the Nicholls Legislature; ex-Gov. Warmoth had seceded from the Nicholls Legislature and again joined his fortunes to those of Packard, carrying with him a few colored members: and, upon the whole, the prospect of an amicable settlement of the disagreements was regarded as exceedingly slim.

THE Packard Legislature, on the 18th, formally defeated the proposition submitted from the Nicholls body through the commission, and the latter were officially notified of such action. The commission reported to the President the failure of all attempts so far at an adjustment, but added that they had not wholly abandoned hope of bringing about a peaceable settlement of the matters in dispute.

SEVERAL members of both branches of the Packard Legislature seceded on the 19th and joined the Nicholls body, thus giving the latter a legal quorum. A caucus of the former was held, at which resolutions were adopted bitterly denouncing the commission and the President for sending them to Louisiana. Packard addressed the caucus, expressing a determination to continue the contest to the end. The members of the commission expressed the opinion that the end was drawing nigh, and that in all probability a few days more would witness Nicholls in undisputed possession of the gubernatorial office, including the State House.

THE EAST.

THE verdict of the Coroner's jury investigating the cause of the deaths of the two Jewetts, in the recent "bombshell" tragedy in New York, was to the effect that the elder Jewett lost his life by the explosion of the hand-grenade thrown by Orville D. Jewett, and that the latter died from the effects of a pistol shot fired by himself.

NO LITTLE excitement has been produced in New York city by the publication of the confession of William M. Tweed, revealing the operations of the notorious ring of which he was the head. Tweed says he has suffered much and suffered long in silence, and has borne the burden of what others should have shared. Afflicted with disease, feeble from age and confinement, and ill at ease in mind, he seeks for the rest and relief he so much and so sorely needs. He adds that the only basis upon which he has a right to apply for leniency and pardon is, that he will make a complete surrender of his property and full disclosure of his criminal companions. The proposition is a long and exhaustive document, and assumes the nature of a confession, which goes back as far as 1867, when the ring first began to assume form. It gives in detail the story of various conferences between the writer, Peter B. Sweeny, Richard Connolly, Henry Genet, A. Oakey Hall, and others, by which Tweed was elected to the State Senate, Connolly Comptroller in 1867, and Hall Mayor, Jan. 1, 1869. Tweed, according to the story, transferred to State Senator Winslow in person $200,000 to secure the charter of 1870, which gave to the ring the control of the city through the support of several influential Republican members of the Legislature. The confession gives the circumstances of the division of the spoils between himself, Sweeny, Hall, Connolly and Woodward. It implicates Garvey, Ingersoll, Davidson, Watson, and a majority of the Board of Supervisors. Mayor Hall's proportion was 10 per cent. He shared throughout in all the profits. He was in full collusion with the fraud in its various details, and was fully aware of the fraudulent nature of the contracts presented for his signature. Hugh Hastings, of the Commercial Advertiser, is mentioned as having received a check for $20,000, and checks for smaller amounts at various times. Tweed says money was also paid to Judge Purser, of New York city.... A formidable band of counterfeiters has been broken up in Pennsylvania. Among those arrested is Hon. Thomas W. Marion, an ex-member of the Pennsylvania Legislature. He sold a quantity of counterfeit money to one of the agents of the service, and he represented he had frequently addressed the State House of Representatives when he had his pockets full of the bogus stuff.

A YOUNG man named Levi Thomas met with a frightful death at a coal mine, near Wilkesbarre, Pa., the other day. He endeavored to step aboard the carriage of the elevator, which he evidently thought was in waiting to descend, when he was precipitated into the shaft, striking the bottom 900 feet below. His remains were so mangled as almost to preclude recognition.

THE President has selected Bedloe's island, in New York harbor, as the site for the location of the grand French statue entitled "Liberty Enlightening the World."

THE SOUTH.

HEAVY rains have seriously injured the growing crops in South Carolina.... Two young men, named Jones and Wakely, fought a duel at Little Rock, Ark., the other day. The seconds loaded the pistols with blank cartridges and nobody was hurt, though the two principals were badly scared. All the parties were arrested and fined.

THE office doors of all the State officials in the Capitol building at Columbia, S. C., have been sealed up, and will not be reopened until the Supreme Court decides the question as to who are the legal officers.

A TERRIBLY destructive tornado swept over the village of Lavergne, Tenn., a few days ago, sweeping everything before it. A little girl lying in bed with her brother had her brains dashed out, while he escaped with a few bruises. A negro man and a negro boy had their thighs broken. An old lady was carried forty yards amid timbers, deeply gashed in the back of her head, and had her arm twice broken, while a piece of some unknown substance went entirely through her wrist, making a ghastly wound. She died the next day. Others were rescued from underneath logs which laid heavily across their bodies. Sticks of timber were blown three-quarters of a mile. Rails from fences were blown four feet into the ground.... The suits of Myra Clark Gaines, for several millions of dollars' worth of property, situated in New Orleans, have ended after a struggle in the courts of the land for over forty years. From one court to another the case has been chased—prosecutrix, defendants, lawyers and Judges growing old in the contest—until a week ago, when a final decision was rendered by District Judge Billings, of New Orleans, in favor of the woman whose tenacity of purpose has pushed the matter to this termination.

THE WEST.

BY a cave-in at a mine Yuba county, Cal., a few days ago, seven men, B. F. Henderson, James H. Monk, Michael Sweeny, David Hotham, Michael McWilliams, Thomas McDonald, and Samuel Sleeman, were instantly killed. Six others were more or less injured.... A dispatch from Deadwood City says that 100 of Crazy Horse's band of Indians have taken the field again. The cause of this renegade movement is supposed to be the [illegible] only the arms taken by them in the Custer fight would be demanded of them upon their surrender at Red Cloud, when, in reality, the Government demands of them all arms and ponies.

ADVICES from Southeastern Kansas state that the grasshopper eggs have failed to germinate. Farmers are jubilant in consequence, and a big crop of everything except locusts is looked for in that region.... Advices from Camp Sheridan report the arrival there of a large number of the hostiles of Crazy Horse's band. They were fairly loaded down with arms, even the women and children carrying pistols, but had little ammunition, and were in that condition of physical emptiness in which the gentle savage most readily turns to thoughts of peace. They were supplied with provisions, and then entered the camp with great parade.

THOUSANDS of Indians are availing themselves of Gen. Crook's plan of amnesty and disarmament at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies. .... The Chicago Daily Courier, after many ups and downs, has been laid away in the sepulcher of dead newspapers.

SEVERAL persons have been arrested in the Black Hills for manufacturing bogus coin. It is believed large quantities of counterfeit gold coin have been turned out there.... D. M. Richardson, match manufacturer, of Detroit, has failed. Liabilities, $200,000.

WASHINGTON.

IT is said ex-Congressman Kasson, of Iowa, will probably be appointed Minister to Spain. .... In view of the certainty of a European war, it is not unlikely that Horace Maynard may be retired from Constantinople, and a very much broader man put in his place.

MAJ. RENO, recently tried by court-martial on a charge of insulting the wife of a brother officer, and sentenced to be dismissed from the service, has forwarded to the War Department a request for delay in the presentation of the case to the President, claiming he has additional evidence which will tend to a mitigation of the sentence. The request has been granted.... A delegation of Friends called on the President, a few days ago, and presented a petition from the Universal Peace Union, asking him to continue the Indian peace policy. The President said that he was in favor of peace everywhere, as fully expressed in his inaugural address, which indicated what his course would be for the next four years. He, however, was not so far advanced as the Quakers, and there might be occasion sometimes to resort to military operations.

IT has been determined at the Treasury Department to issue an order prohibiting the payment of ten hours' wages for eight hours' work on Government jobs hereafter. This determination is in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court that the Eight-Hour law constitutes merely a direction to Government officers, not a contract with Government laborers.... The President has appointed ex-Congressman John A. Kasson, of Iowa, Minister to Spain, vice Caleb Cushing, resigned.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: "Department officers do not agree in the popular belief that the extra session will be a short one. On the contrary, the indications are that a great deal of business aside from the Army bill will demand the attention of Congress.".... The Grand Dukes Alexis and Constantine, with the Russian Minister and others of the royal party, called upon the President one day last week, and were hospitably received."

POLITICAL.

IT is given out from Washington that the President does not intend to recall Mr. Pierrepont, but that he will remain at the Court of St. James for some time to come.

THE official canvass of the vote cast at the recent New Hampshire election reveals the fact that the constitutional amendments were all adopted except those striking out the word "Protestant" from the Bill of Rights, and prohibiting removal from office for political causes. The amendment abolishing the religious test as a qualification for office had a narrow escape, receiving but thirteen votes over the requisite two-thirds.

GOV. WADE HAMPTON, in a speech to the negro militia at Columbia, S. C.: "I want you to remember one fact: that I recognize in your race the right to enjoy precisely the same rights enjoyed by every other citizen of the State. Negro equality is to be maintained. I recognize your equality, and I intend to uphold it. As soon as we can get in harness I will enroll you in the militia, and will take great pleasure in commissioning such officers as you may designate. When the Militia law is enforced, and when the military of the State is all enrolled, I want the only emulation between the companies to be as to who can obey the laws best, who can be the best soldiers, and who can best protect the public peace."

GENERAL.

JOHN F. TRACY has resigned the Presidency of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad, on account of ill health.... Gen. G. W. Custis Lee has brought an action for the recovery of the celebrated Arlington estate, near Washington, formerly the property of Gen. Robert E. Lee. It was forfeited to the Government during the late war, by the non-payment of taxes, and turned into a national cemetery. .... Twelve persons are known to have lost their lives by the burning of the Southern Hotel, in St. Louis, namely: The Rev. A. R. Adams, of England; George Frank Gonley; Henry Hazen; Mrs. W. S. Stewart; Charles Tiernan; Andrew Eisman; H. J. Clark and wife; Kate Reilly, Kate Dolan, and Mary Moran, servants; William Felix Munster, of England. The latter was a suicide, committed under derangement brought on by intense excitement. Mrs. Scott, mother-in-law of Andrew Eisman, and Frankie McClellan, the actress, who was dangerously injured, are slowly recovering. One, two, or three others had broken limbs or were otherwise more or less hurt, but the above list comprises all who are known to have been killed.

IT is said that the large fortune of John F. Tracy, late President of the Rock Island railroad, estimated as high as $4,000,000, has been swept away. He has been afflicted for some time with softening of the brain, and his unfortunate stock speculations are attributed to this cause.

THE amount of grain in sight in the United States and Canada is stated as follows: Wheat, 8,641,036 bushels; corn, 10,044,059 bushels; oats, 2,570,306 bushels; rye, 798,626 bushels; barley, 2,223,965 bushels.

HON. ASA B. FOSTER, the railway king of Canada, has suspended, with liabilities of $2,500,000.... R. A. Hill and R. W. Martin, New York gold brokers, have failed; liabilities, about $75,000 each.

BE careful and examine every piece of coin you receive, if you don't want to get sold. The Treasury Department at Washington reports that the counterfeiting of coin is rapidly increasing. A number of arrests for manufacturing and shoving the queer have lately been made in the West. Some of the new counterfeits are said to be exceedingly well executed. .... More than 3,000 tons of American fresh beef were shipped to the other side of the Atlantic in March, representing probably 11,000 or 12,000 head of average cattle. The foreign demand exhibits a steady increase from month to month, at a ratio that will probably take from the herds of Texas and the West at least 200,000 animals during the current year.

FOREIGN.

A ST. PETERSBURG dispatch says that, at a grand council of war, the Russian Cabinet had decided to accept the Turkish circular as a complete rejection of the protocol. Roumania has called out her reserves. Turkey has declined to renew the armistice with Montenegro, and is pushing her forces toward the Danube. Russia has called in all her furloughed soldiers, and everything betokens war. .... Reports from Servian sources represent that the Turkish forces in Bosnia are threatened with starvation, and that there are apprehensions of a massacre of the Christians if the Moslem savages become desperate through privation.

[illegible] England has abandoned all [illegible] as well as any intention to interpose further diplomatic effort in behalf of pacification. Lord Derby recently addressed a note to the British representative at Constantinople, in which he stated that the divergence between the views of Russia and the Porte appeared so wide as to render further discussion useless, and that he could not see what further steps England could take to avert the war which appeared inevitable. The Paris Moniteur (semi-official) declares it is the inflexible resolve of France to remain neutral.

A PARIS telegram to the New York World says the defiant attitude of Turkey is explained in private letters from Constantinople. The Ottomans are rendered confident by assurances that Poland, the Crimea, the Caucasus, Persia, and even India will furnish moral and material aid against Russia in the course of the impending war.... A dispatch from St. Petersburg says: "The war feeling here is intense. There never was such a popular war as this one will be. We have no brag, no bluster, no excitement in the streets, no processions, no singing, no shouting, but a quiet resolution is depicted on every face, and is manifest in everybody's language."

THE friends of the Tichborne claimant made a formidable demonstration in London the other day. A procession numbering 60,000 marched to the office of the Home Secretary and presented a plea for the pardon of the great fraud.... The Czar of Russia has left for the front. In obedience to the summons a number of young Germans have left England to join their regiments.... Tennyson, poet laureate of England, has for the second time declined the honor of knighthood.

NEWS comes from Italy of a growing discontent among the commercial population with the policy of the Government, and a movement is on foot against a too close intimacy with Russia, whose competition in the Mediterranean is feared.... The Cabinets of Vienna, London and Paris have notified Roumania that the privileges she enjoys by virtue of the treaty of Paris would be considered null and void should she actively co-operate with Russia.

IN debate on the budget, the other day, the Italian Finance Minister expressed the hope that the Eastern war would be localized, but intimated that, in the event of the Russians marching on Constantinople, complications might arise which would involve the active participation of Italy in the struggle.... The European powers are defining their position in regard to the Turco-Russian complications. France will observe the most rigorous neutrality. Italy declares that the situation can only be considered grave when the Russians march on Constantinople. Official Austrian papers say that the Government will only remain neutral so long as its interests in the East are not menaced. Germany's position is well known. It now remains for England to define herself.

The Sewing-Machine Monopoly.

A number of lobbyists representing an immense sewing-machine combination interest have made their appearance in Washington. Their object is to procure by some means not now apparent a renewal or extension of the patent upon the feed motion. The patent has already been extended and will expire on the 8th of May. It was the original intention of the great sewing-machine pool to go to Congress and purchase an act enabling the patent office to again extend their monopoly, but the excitement of the electoral count prevented them from putting this plan into operation. The enormous benefits to accrue to the public in the event the sewing-machine pool fail to get an extension will be seen when it is considered that the manufacturing cost of an ordinary $65 sewing machine is about $6.25, while an $85 machine from the Bridgeport shops costs in the frame ready for shipment something under $10. As thing are now, a $65 machine is put to the local agent at $25, and the agent gets $40 for his time and labor in selling and instructing. An $85 machine costs the agent $35, so on up to the fancy full cabinet pearl-inlaid article which costs the customer from $150 to $200. The same rate applies in about the same proportion to all machines in the combination. The breaking down of the monopoly which sustains these ruinous figures will enable any machine shop in the country with proper appliances to turn out sewing-machines with the lock stitch and wheel or ratchet feed. Competition will thus bring down the price of machines to a legitimate figure, about one-half the present rates.—Washington Cor. Chicago Times.

France's Debt.

The public debt of France is the largest of any country in the world, amounting to $4,634,500,000, while the sum necessary to be annually raised by taxation to meet the expenditures of the Government largely exceeds that in any other country. The sum asked for the current fiscal year is 2,785,616,713 francs, or about $557,123,342. This is about $200,000,000 more than the annual expenditure of Great Britain, and about double that of the United States. It speaks well for the resources of France and for the administration of its finances that, notwithstanding the enormous burdens necessarily imposed upon the people, the country is in a fairly prosperous state, and the paper currency of the republic is at par with gold, and the Bank of France will not exchange it for gold except at a premium.

AT the opera: "Is not the music," gently suggested Miss Dartle, who herself slings a mild mezzo-soprano in private life, "Is not the music rather high?" "Well, yes," rejoined Smoothchin, toward whom she had arched an inquiring eyebrow; "perhaps so, but then you know 'The Flying Dutchman' was almost always at C."

TURKEY AND RUSSIA.

Text of the Former's Note in Reply to the Protocol—Turkey Will Stand Firmly by the Treaty of Paris, and Will Disarm when Russia Sets the Example.

The Turkish note in reply to the protocol of the European powers, the text of which is transmitted by cable, uses very strong language. The five points of Count Schouvaloff's declarations are answered seriatim, as follows:

In reply to the declaration of His Excellency the Russian Ambassador, the Sublime Porte, on its side, notifies to the signatory powers the following declaration:

1. Adopting toward Montenegro the same line of conduct which brought about the pacification of Servia, the Sublime Porte spontaneously informed the Prince, two months ago, that it would spare no effort to arrive at an understanding with him, even at the price of certain sacrifices. Considering Montenegro as an integral part of the Ottoman territory, the Porte purposed the rectification of the line of demarcation which secured advantages to Montenegro, and it henceforward depends entirely upon moderate counsels, which the Porte hopes will prevail at Cettinje, whether this affair may be considered as terminated.

2. The Imperial Government is prepared to apply all promised reforms, but these reforms, in conformity with the fundamental provisions of our constitution, cannot have a special or exclusive character, and it is in this spirit that the Imperial Government in its full and entire liberty will continue to apply its instructions.

3. The Imperial Government is ready to replace its armies on a peace footing as soon as it shall see the Russian Government take measures to the same end. The armaments of Turkey have an exclusively defensive character, and the relations of friendship and esteem which unite the two empires inspire the hope that the St. Petersburg Cabinet will not, alone in Europe, persist in the idea that the Christian population in Turkey are exposed to such dangers from their own Government that it is necessary to accumulate against a neighboring and friendly state all means of invasion and destruction.

4. With regard to disturbances which might break out in Turkey and stop the demobilization of the Russian army, the Imperial Government, which repels the injurious terms in which this idea has been expressed, believes Europe is convinced that the disturbances which have troubled the peace of the provinces were due to foreign instigation; that the Imperial Government could not be held responsible for them, and that, consequently, the Russian Government would not be justified in making the demobilization of its armies dependent upon such contingencies.

5. Concerning the dispatch of the special envoy to St. Petersburg to treat on the question of disarmament, the Imperial Government, which would have no reason to refuse an act of courtesy reciprocally required by diplomatic usages, perceives no connection between this act of international courtesy and disarmament, which there was no plausible motive for delaying, and which might be carried into effect by a single telegraphic order.

The following is the concluding and most emphatic section:

Maintaining, with other friendly states, relations regulated by international law and treaties, Turkey cannot allow foreign agents or representatives, charged to protect the interests of their compatriots, to have any mission of official supervision. The Imperial Government, in fact, is not aware how it can have deserved so ill of justice and civilization as to see itself placed in a humiliating position without example in the world. The Treaty of Paris gave explicit sanction to the principle of non-intervention. This treaty, which binds together the powers which participated in it, as well as Turkey, cannot be abolished by a protocol in which Turkey has had no share; and if Turkey appeals to the stipulation of the treaty of Paris, it is not that that treaty has created in her favor any rights which she would not possess without it, but rather for the purpose of calling attention to grave reasons which, in the interests of the general peace of Europe, induced the powers, twenty years ago, to place the recognition of the inviolability of this empire's right to sovereignty under the guarantee of a collective promise.

With regard to the clause which, in the case of the non-execution of the promised reforms, would seek to confer upon the powers the right of recurring to ulterior measures, the Imperial Government perceives therein a fresh attack upon its dignity and its rights; a measure of intimidation calculated to deprive its acts of any merit of spontaneity, and a source of grave complications, both in the present and future.

No consideration, therefore, can arrest the Government in its determination to protest against the views enumerated in the protocol of the 31st of March, and to treat it, as far as Turkey is concerned, as destitute of all equity, and, consequently, also, of all obligatory character.

Exposed to hostile suggestions, to unmerited suspicion, and to violations of international law, Turkey feels that she is now contending for her existence. Strong in the justice of her cause, and trusting in God, she determines to ignore what has been decided without her and against her, resolved to retain in the world the place which Providence has destined for her. In this regard she will not cease to encounter attacks directed against her with general principles of public right and the authority of the great European act which pledges the honor of the powers that signed the protocol of the 31st of March—a document which in her eyes has no legal claim to exact compliance. She appeals to the conscience of Cabinets which she has a right to consider animated toward her by the same sentiments of equity and friendship as in the past. Immediate and simultaneous disarmament would be the only efficacious means of avoiding the dangers by which the general peace is threatened. The reply which the Imperial Government has made to the declaration of the Ambassador of Russia furnished the powers with suitable elements for bringing about this result, which they most assuredly will not seek to obtain by persisting in imposing upon the Ottoman empire sacrifices of rights and honor to which it will not consent.

PRESIDENT HAYES.

He Defines His Policy and Intentions—A Free Talk with the Press Agent.

The President has submitted himself to a formal interview, and is reported as follows by the Associated Press agent at Washington:

The President said, in the course of the conversation, that he had no concealments regarding his Southern policy, which, however, had been foreshadowed in oral and written utterances, and in this connection he adverted to the gubernatorial campaign in Ohio in 1875, which resulted in his election over Gov. Allen, the people of that State having a full knowledge of his sentiments on national questions, including, of course, those which related to the South. The opening speech of a gubernatorial candidate is generally considered to be the keynote of a campaign, and in such a speech, as early as the 31st of July of that year, at Marion the freely and distinctly expressed his opinions.

This speech was published at length in all the Republican and many other newspapers, and therefore, his views were generally known. In that speech, after congratulating his fellow-citizens on the complete triumph over those who sought to destroy the Union, and the grand results of the war, he alluded to the coming together again of Northern and Southern men in a spirit of harmony and friendship, including those who had fought against one another, and, as a prominent feature in this evidence of good feeling, he, on that occasion, spoke of the kindly manner in which Vice President Wilson was received on his visit to the South.

In this era of good feeling and reconciliation, he further said there were still persons who talked of bayonets, and who sought to revive the prejudices of the past. This was much to be regretted, but there was enough to fill every heart with gratitude, the house being no longer divided, and all its inhabitants having a fair start in the race for life. In this and in all his other speeches he earnestly condemned the reopening of old issues between the North and the South, assuming that the time had come for complete reconciliation. The President, in further conversation, referred to the fact that the National Republican Convention which nominated him for the Presidency passed a resolution sacredly pledging the Republican party to protect every citizen of the United States in all his civil and political rights, and declaring that permanent pacification of the South should be effected by removing all causes of discord. The spirit of this resolution was in perfect accord with his own views previously expressed, and he repeated them in his letter of acceptance of the nomination, and more fully elaborated them in his inaugural address, consistently maintaining a policy of reconciliation and local self-government apart from military support; and, when he entered upon the duties of the Presidency, he intended that this policy should not be one of sentiment merely, but of actual administration. He spoke with emphasis when he said: "My belief is that this course tends to give good government to the South; it tends to secure peace between sections and between races and parties at the South, and it tends to secure the rights, interests and safety of the colored people. Therefore, I am in favor of the policy. I do not know whether I shall succeed in carrying it out, because there are Northern and Southern men who, in various ways, may possibly thwart me; but of one thing I am confident, namely, I think it my duty to try to carry out the policy, and I am going to do it."

THE SOLACING WEED.

Indications of Hard Times in the Consumption of Tobacco Cigars.

[From the Boston Commercial Bulletin.]

Next to abandoning the use of tobacco altogether is the adoption of some cheaper substitute for cigars. Every smoker is well aware that no decent weed can be had for much less than 10 or 15 cents; but, as 10 or 15 cents are not picked up so easily nowadays, your inveterate smoker must of necessity make some compromise, by way of economy. This of late has been effected by the use of cigarettes. Retail dealers state that their trade in this line has increased 200 per cent. during the past year. They believe that the habit of smoking tobacco in this form is resorted to as a matter of economy, as is also plainly shown by the fact that old customers who were wont to purchase cigars of a superior quality are now content with those of an inferior grade. Cigar manufacturers, on the contrary, deny that cigarettes are taking the place of cigars, and, while admitting the great increase in the sale of cigarettes, regard it as a fashion among smokers, and not as a matter of economy. They further declare that the greatest economy is shown by the trade in the purchase of inferior cigars. The high-priced cigars, once largely sold, are now manufactured in smaller quantities, owing to the hard times. This does not include the very finest quality of Havana cigars, which were heretofore obtained almost exclusively abroad. Their manufacture is now carried on in this country, and to a great extent has usurped the trade formerly confined to Havana and Key West, because here they can be made and sold much cheaper. The manufacturers at those places are said to have become greatly alarmed at the increasing trade in fine cigars in this country. Domestic manufacturers affirm, in relation to the prevailing custom of cigarette smoking, that it is injurious, because certain poisonous ingredients are used in preparing the paper of which the outer covering is made. Statistics at Washington show a very large decrease in the manufacture and importation of cigars this year in comparison with that of the previous year. According to the Bureau of Statistics, the total number of cigars and cheroots upon which the internal revenue tax was paid during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, was 1,828,807,396. This is a decrease of nearly 98,000,000 cigars from the year previous. The amount of cigars, manufactured and imported in this country during the year 1875, reached nearly 2,000,000,000. The value of the imported cigars consumed in the United States during 1876 amounted to $2,289,712.89 and of snuff to $18,470.

A Graveyard Joke.

A man noted for his close-fisted propensities was showing an old coin to a neighbor, when the latter asked: "Where did you get it?" "I dug it out of my garden," was the reply. "It is a pity you didn't find it in the cemetery," said the neighbor. "Why so?" asked the coin owner. "Because, you could have saved the hole to be buried in," was the somewhat unexpected reply.

Telephonic Mysteries.

In a New Jersey house the other morning there was an echo like that of a hand gently nickel-plating a boy with pain, and another echo which spoke of a mouth stretched from ear to ear and two legs paddling the air. When the fond mother was asked why this was thus, she simply replied that she was teaching her darling the mysteries of the telephone.

The excess of receipts over expenditures for the nine months ended March 31, 1876, was $96,379,722, while the excess of receipts over expenditures for the last nine months is $87,053,040, showing the actual falling off in revenue for this year thus far over the same period last year to be $9,326,682.

AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

The Man Who Presides Over the Card Basket—A Hard Row for Office Seekers.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

I went up to the White House to see how the executive machine is run under its new management. The old door-keepers and ushers employed by Grant are still there. The old proverb, "Like master like man," is exemplified in their cases, for they are now all smiles and politeness, whereas under the old regime they were rather surly and disobliging. In the ante-room, at the top of the stairs, where brother-in-law Dent presided over the card basket in Grant's first term, sits a tall, sandy-bearded Western man, with a big inkstand and a stack of blank cards before him.

Every morning this apartment fills up with a miscellaneous crowd, so large that it overflows into the adjoining halls. The scene is worthy the pencil of a great character painter. Nine-tenths of the people are evidently office seekers. These are easily recognized by their anxious look, restless, nervous manner, and the pallor of their countenances. They reminded me somewhat of the gamblers at Baden-Baden, who sit around the green tables and silently watch the turning of the cards, but they embrace a much wider range of social position. These eager applicants for places are of all ranks, from the ex-Senator in black broadcloth seeking to conceal the humiliation which he evidently feels under the haughty air with which he used to stalk about the Capitol, down to awkward countrymen, after village postoffices, dowdy widows in rusty black, and weak-faced young men longing for department clerkships—yes, even lower, for in the throng are fellows so shabby and forlorn that they would probably be glad to get a pair of the President's old boots.

The tall man with the sandy beard is little better than a snare for the unwary. Few of the cards which he so politely asks the hopeful callers to write ever reach the eyes of His Excellency. The truth is, this patient and considerate master of the ante-chamber is a breakwater to keep the crowd away from his chief, while they think he is put there to help them to the wished-for interviews. Across the hall, guarding a door, is a dapper little fellow of unmixed Ethiopian descent. In his keeping are entrusted such cards as come from persons who appear to have any business that the President might reasonably be called on to give ear to. He takes them in and delivers them to Mr. Rugers, the private secretary.

Mr. Rugers is the second breakwater. He told me that his orders were to keep all officeseekers away from the President, and that, if any slipped passed him, it was by strategy.

Occupying a desk at Mr. Rugers' elbow is usually to be seen Webb Hayes, the President's oldest son, a smooth-faced young man, with a large nose, who wears glasses and looks like a divinity student. A third desk in the room is used by a hard-working clerk, who attends to the correspondence under the private secretary's direction. On one side of this room is a smaller apartment, where other clerks are on duty. On the other side three or four steps lead from an open door down to the President's reception room, a large square room, with heavy green rep curtains, hung over lace, at the two windows, a bright carpet, two desks, numerous bookcases and an abundance of velvet-cushioned chairs. At a large desk in the middle of the room the President receives his visitors. Mr. Hayes has a chair placed facing his, to which he motions each caller by turn, rising to shake hands with him as he advances, and then resuming his own seat. Sometimes when the conversation is designed to be especially private he gets up and takes his visitor aside into a window-alcove, and sometimes, but very rarely, he goes out with him into his retiring room, adjoining.

The Foundry Church—Origin of the Name.

The "Foundry" Church, which the President sometimes attends in Washington, derives its name from one of its early benefactors, who made his large fortune in a foundry.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

This is a mistake, set afloat by Mrs. Mary Clemmer. The name is derived from "The Foundery," an old building in London in which "Methodism" was born, and of which we present an outline sketch:

John Wesley's friends had been worshiping with the Moravians in Fetter lane, London, but Wesley (disliking some of their fanatical teachings) determined to procure some other place of worship. Upon a corner, in a suitable locality, stood an old cannon foundry, where, through several English revolutions, cannon had been cast by the English monarchists. This building Wesley secured and fitted up as a "meeting-house," thus converting it into a spiritual armory. Here the Methodism took its rise. For thirty-seven years this was the scene of the labors of the Wesleys, and it is no wonder that the name "Foundry Church" is dear to the Methodist heart, and is adopted as a amily name, just as Plymouth, Pilgrim and Puritan have been taken by the Congregationalists. It is an humble-looking place of worship by the side of the Metropolitan in Washington.—Oberlin (Ohio) News.

The Public Finances.

The identity of the financial situation roughout the world appears in the de-cits in the balance sheets of all the ading nations. The fiscal year has ist closed in Great Britain with an un-tpected shortage in the receipts, and e same kind of a gap has arisen in the st nine months of the current fiscal ar between the receipts and expendi-res of the United States Government. e aggregate receipts of the three arters past have been $15,714,932 less an for the corresponding period of the ceding fiscal year. At the same time t expenditures have decreased from $1,000,000 in the first nine months of t fiscal year 1876 to $114,500,000 for t same period of the present fiscal ar—a saving of $6,500,000. These figures do not include the disbursements on account of interest on the public debt. The reduction made is in the ordinary expenditures for the administration of the Government.

The following recapitulation will show the gross receipts for the nine months ended March 31 last, as compared with the same nine months of the preceding fiscal year:

	1876.	1877.
Customs	$114,711,093	$ 98,406,979
Internal revenue	82,972,933	85,302,905
Miscellaneous	19,369,262	17,884,672
Total	$217,306,288	$201,591,556

Pedestrianism—O'Leary Defeats Weston.

O'Leary and Weston, the American pedestrians, have been giving our British cousins some fine exhibitions of pedestrianism during the past winter; but by far the finest bit of walking either of them had shown was displayed in the match between the two Americans, which was concluded on the 7th of April. It was a six days' contest, for £1,000 a side, and resulted in a brilliant victory for O'Leary, who eclipsed all previous achievements at long-distance walking. The London correspondent of the New York Herald chronicles the closing incidents of the contest: "Twenty thousand persons, comprising many noblemen and ladies, crowded Agricultural Hall, Islington, all day to witness the completion of the Weston-O'Leary walk. The excitement was such as has never been witnessed at an exhibition of the kind in London. O'Leary completed his 500 miles at 2:40 p. m. Tremendous excitement followed. Weston accomplished the same distance at 8:15, appearing much the fresher of the two at the completion of this distance. At 9 o'clock O'Leary had made 520 miles to Weston's 503. O'Leary retired amid great excitement and cheering. Weston continued until 11 o'clock, making 510 miles, and then retired. Weston was loudly cheered for his endurance, and, although beaten, left the track fresh and happy.

"O'Leary walked from 10 to 11 o'clock on the course for exercise, leaning on a friend's arm. He was evidently determined that his vanquished rival should not alone receive the applause of the multitude. He remained in the field although he had had enough. He was evidently deeply fatigued, but may have found some compensation in the tremendous applause which he received. O'Leary's walking has been much admired, and he has astonished even his backers in thus performing a task which only a few years ago would have been regarded as incredible. The Standard says that "although Weston was defeated, the British people respect his pluck and sympathize with him in what is probably the bitterest disappointment of his life, namely, being vanquished at the moment when he had surpassed all his previous performances.' The difference in the style of the two men is much noted. O'Leary walked in good, upright form, with his body thrown back, holding in each hand a piece of wood. Weston, on the contrary, walked with a riding whip in his hand, jesting with his friends and trying to keep pace with the music."

Laying for Him.

It having come to the ears of the United States officials at this point that Big English, the boot-black, had a handful of lead nickels in his possession, the boy was yesterday interviewed on the subject.

"Yes; I've got nineteen bad nickels in my trousers pocket," was his prompt reply.

"And what are you doing with them?"

"Holding right to 'em. You needn't think you've got a case again me, for you haven't."

"How did you get those bad pieces?"

"Rich man, who shall be nameless—black his boots every morning—hands me out a lead nickel—thinks he's got a soft thing on me, but I'm layin' for him!"

"How?"

"Why, he's got a daughter 'bout my age. I'll be thinking of marrying in two or three years more, and I'll shoulder a bag of his nickels, walk into the parlor, and gently say, 'Mister man, I love thy fair daughter, and I demand her hand in marriage. Behold the proofs of your vile perfidy, and come up to the rack or go to the jug!' You just keep still and let him shower out his bogus coins. I ain't handsome, but I'm a terror to plan!"

Melancholy Episode of the St. Louis Fire.

Our readers will remember the particulars published in all the daily papers of an aristocratic wedding, the parties being Lord Munster, of England, and the daughter of Dr. Henry C. Lynch, which took place three months ago. The happy couple traveled until within the past two weeks, when they returned to the city, and have been stopping at the Southern, and were occupying rooms there when the alarm of fire had been given. In the din and confusion of the fire Lord Munster and his wife became separated, the husband escaping, leaving his wife in the burning building. A report soon after reached his ears that his wife had perished in the flames, and the poor fellow at once lost his reason. He procured a pistol and went up into Mr. Conroy's sleeping-room, which is on the fourth floor of the building on the northeast corner of Fourth and Olive streets, and, placing the muzzle of the pistol against his right temple, fired the shot which sent him into eternity without a struggle.—St. Louis Republican.

The Burden of City Indebtedness.

A writer in the Cincinnati Commercial figures up more than $540,000,000 of municipal debts owed by forty-one cities in the United States, aggregating about one-fourth of our immense national debt. On every $100 worth of property in these cities the annual tax, respectively, is thus presented:

Albany	$2.49	Boston	$1.37
Baltimore	1.97½	Brooklyn	3.24
Bangor	2.50	Buffalo	3.55½
Chicago	1.80	Charleston	2.00
Cincinnati (1875)	2.86	Cleveland	1.81
Detroit	3.92	Elizabeth	2.69
Indianapolis	1.35	Jersey City	2.68
Louisville	2.33	Memphis	2.00
Milwaukee	2.56	Mobile	1.80
Nashville	2.00	Newark	1.90
New Orleans	3.96	New York	2.65
Norfolk	2.00	Philadelphia	2.35
Portland	2.50	Providence	1.45
Rochester	1.08	San Francisco	2.12½
St. Louis	3.42	Toledo	4.44

The Cherokee and Creek Indians are setting out thousands of apple trees.

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

Southern planters who went to Brazil in such numbers just after the civil war are straggling back home again. The ruling idea is to educate their children in their own land.

The panic of 1873 has brought a priceless compensation to the people it has afflicted. It has taught economy at home and enormously enlarged the sale of their goods abroad.

The American Steamship line from Philadelphia to Liverpool made money during 1876. Its total receipts were $1,065,048. Its ordinary operating expenses were $791,516, and the clear profit of the year $144,914. Nothing blue in that picture.

The Sheffield steel trade is receiving another depressing blow. Most of the orders from Australia and other British colonies are now coupled with the requirement that the articles ordered shall be manufactured from American iron. This applies not only to the finer class of cutting tools but to all articles of general hardware. This is a severe blow to the iron interest in that country, and the organs of that interest are bemoaning the fact almost in sackcloth and ashes.

Contrary to general expectation, the number of failures in the United States for the first three months of the present year show a slight increase over those of the corresponding quarter of 1876, though the amount of liabilities is somewhat less. The quarterly circular of R. G. Dun & Co. furnishes the following comparisons:

	FIRST QUARTER.
YEARS.	No. of failures.	Amount of liabilities.	Average liabilities.
1875	1,962	$43,176,362	$21,740
1876	2,806	64,644,156	23,038
1877	2,869	54,538,074	19,040

The increase in number for the quarter appears to be only sixty-three, and is only significant because any increase at all was unexpected. The falling off in the average of liabilities, however, is a good sign, and ought to atone for the small addition to the numbers.

The average prices for domestic fleece wool in the United States from 1824 to 1861 were: For fine, 53 3-10 cents; for medium, 42 4-10 cents, and for coarse 34 5-10 cents per pound. The average for the four years, from 1861 to 1866, during the war, were: For fine, 75 6-10 cents; for medium, 74 cents, and for coarse, 70 7-10 cents. In 1864 and 1865 fine and medium wool sold for $1.15 a pound, and even coarse wool sometimes sold for $1 a pound. The average prices for eleven years, from 1866 to 1876 inclusive, were: For fine, 55 cents; for medium, 53 cents, and for coarse, 48 cents. The prices in October, 1876, were: For fine, 45 cents; medium, 40 cents; coarse, 33 cents a pound, and the average for the year was: For fine, 44¼ cents; for medium, 44 cents, and for coarse 36¼ cents.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The shipment of American apples to Europe, which was only begun in 1867, is now developed into a large business. From the middle of October almost every steamer leaving New York for Liverpool or London has carried shipments varying from 500 to 3,000 barrels. The extent of the business can be judged from the fact that the sales of American apples at Liverpool alone reached 90,000 barrels in the month of December last. The English people have received the large quantities shipped this season very favorably, and from Liverpool the other cities of Manchester, Birmingham, Hull, Bristol, and, in fact, almost every town in England, have been supplied, and "American apples" have become literally as familiar there as "household words." The greater portion of the apples shipped from New York were raised in the western counties of that State. The Canadian apple crop of 1876 was also large, and the shipments from Montreal and Quebec last fall, and from Portland, Me., this winter, were quite heavy, and the quality of the fruit good. Boston was the outlet for the heavy crop of nearly all the New England States.

Mr. L. J. Jennings, the London correspondent of the New York World, writes about the great increase in the sale of American cottons in England, and says that the finer cottons we export cannot be matched on the other side at the same price. The growth of the trade is amazing, and no one yet sees where it may end. Mr. Jennings would not be surprised to see the shops of Lancashire towns advocating American goods, and the people there going about clad in the same. The following, taken from the trade and navigation returns of the United Kingdom, tells the story very briefly.

	Feb. 1876.	Feb. 1877.
Imports of raw cotton, cwt.	1,704,183	1,309,399
Exports of cotton piece goods, yards	303,511,700	287,694,000

With this statement comes the report of the American Bureau of Statistics, showing our domestic export trade last year compared with 1875. From this it appears that our exports aggregated $637,452,168, as against $567,011,818 for the year before—an increase of $70,440-350, which is a pretty good showing for a country in our condition, and that a few years ago had the balance of trade against it.

A Costly Present to Mr. Washburne.

The German Government, through its Ambassador at Paris, has tendered to Minister Washburne the decoration of one of the high orders of German knighthood as a recognition of his distinguished services to the suffering Germans in Paris pending the siege during the Franco-Prussian war. Mr. Washburne has informed the German Minister there that under the constitution of the United States he cannot accept this decoration, but the Minister retains it for him in case he should decide to retire from office. The decoration is said to have cost $50,000, and to contain costly diamonds and other precious stones. This information comes to Washington by a letter from a gentleman attached to one of the European legations in Paris.

An Unexpected Answer.

"Salt" was the subject of the speech of a solemn and spare-faced clergyman before a Sunday-school, on an anniversary occasion, the text being, "Ye are the salt of the earth." He explained to the youthful hearers the preservative qualities of salt, and especially its power to keep eatables from decaying. Then he told them how Christians, and especially ministers, were of advantage to the world as a purifying influence against the corruption of modern society. Then he asked a few questions. To "What are the ministers useful for in this world?" a lively youngster gave the ready answer, "To keep wittles from spiling."

No More Immigrants Needed.

The English press records, with ill-concealed satisfaction, the decline of immigration to the United States, which the official statistics of the Board of Trade reveal. During 1876 the number of emigrants from England to the United States was 54,554, and the number who returned 54,967. The surplus population of Ireland has been drained off, and the island is prospering, for since 1865 emigration has steadily decreased. During the same period emigration from Scotland has remained stationary. Emigration from Great Britain has been in the direction of Australia and New Zealand rather than to the United States. The English papers accept very cheerfully the logic of the statistics. "There is misery and destitution," they say, "in the land of the free." "There are other and more promising parts of the world." "A country where people either starve to death or are burned alive in theaters or railway carriages." "A good field for Chinamen." Well, this country doesn't need any more immigrants at present. It is no easy matter to find work for all who are now here, and it costs a good deal to educate the children of those who have come over. Let them stay where they are, and live and grow fat on—American beef.—New York Tribune.

A Vermont Tragedy.

Hiram Arbuckle, of East Montpelier, Vt., in a fit of passion or insanity, shot George Short, a lad of 16, twice. He then left him, went to the blacksmith shop of his brother-in-law, George Bancroft, aged 50 years, and shot him through the arm while he was shoeing a horse. Bancroft started to run, when he was shot again in the back, and, as he was going through the grist-mill door, he was shot in the ear, when he fell dead. Arbuckle then went to his house and waited till the officers came. He then said that he would not be taken alive, and shot himself through the heart, killing himself instantly. Arbuckle was 30 years old, and unmarried. Short is still alive, and may recover.

The Cost of War.

The wars of this century have been the most bloody and costly since the palmy days of Rome and Greece. For its ten great bloody periods, viz., the Napoleonic, Grecian, Crimean, Italian, Danish, Austrian (1866), Brazilian, American, Abyssinian and Franco-German wars—leaving out minor expeditions and skirmishes—the figures foot up $38,667,600,000 expended, and 11,708,-600 men destroyed from 1800 to 1871. Two-thirds of this aggregate outlay of men and money are to be charged on the ledger to Napoleon I. up to his closing battle fought at Waterloo.

Revenue Service Consolidations.

In consolidating internal revenue districts so as to reduce the number to 126, as required by law, the consolidations will be made in the South, Southwest and West. A careful investigation has shown that consolidation cannot be made in the Eastern States without injury to the public service. The law requiring the reduction does not take effect until the beginning of the next fiscal year. But the order for it will be promulgated in time to enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prepare for the change in the districts affected.

The Modocs.

The Modoc Indians, now numbering fifty-four males and sixty-three females, are located on a very fertile tract containing 4,000 acres in the northwest corner of the Shawnee reserve, Indian Territory. They have engaged energetically in labor during the past year, and as a result have a large and valuable crop on their farm. The Government has expended $1,882 for their schooling for ten months, which is under the supervision of the Society of Friends.

Kicked to Death by a Horse.

Charles W. Perry, son of Hon. John D. Perry, late President of the Kansas Pacific railway, was recently kicked to death by a vicious stallion at his fine ranche near Larkspur, Col., on the Denver and Rio Grande railway. He died in intense agony. Mr. Perry, with his father, owned one of the most magnificent ranches in Colorado, stocked with the finest blooded cattle and horses, and was well known, hospitable and generous.

French Cities.

There are now eight towns in France, exclusive of Paris, which have a population of more than 100,000. These eight towns have not, however, collectively, a population equal to that of Paris, which slightly exceeds 2,000,000. The names of these towns and their populations are: Lyons, 342,800; Marseilles, 318,900; Bordeaux, 214,200; Lille, 162,-700; Toulouse, 131,600; St. Etienne, 126,000; Nantes, 122,300; and Rouen, 104,900.

Indian Rations.

Orders have been issued by the Indian Bureau to provide rations for the 1,500 hostile Indians recently brought in by Spotted Tail. These Indians come in on the same terms as other hostiles. Their arms and horses will be taken from them, but in other respects they will be treated the same as Indians who have remained at the agency.—Washington Telegram.

Homesteads and Grasshoppers.

A law was passed by Congress last winter, allowing pre-emption settlers on public land on Indian reservations to be absent from their farms until October, 1878, should the grasshoppers reappear in 1877; and should they reappear in 1878 the settlers may leave their lands till October, 1879, without impairing any of their pre-emption rights.

A facetious physician, an old bachelor, said the other day to a single lady: "How can you with a clear conscience answer St. Peter when you shall reach heaven's gate, for your heartlessness in refusing so many marriage offers?" The lady archly replied, "I shall tell the Apostle that Dr. ——— did not ask me."

POPULAR SCIENCE.

PUTTING DEAD MEN TO SOME USE.

The paint-makers are grinding up Egyptian mummies for the fine brown color which they make when powdered. The color is due to the asphaltum with which the cloths wrapped around the mummies was impregnated.

HAY AS FUEL.

The proprietors of a large steam flouring-mill in Minnesota are using hay as a cheap fuel. In that region hay can be put in the stack at each man's door at a cost of $2 per ton, and ten tons, it is said, will furnish fuel for one stove during a winter season. Hay-burning stoves and machines for twisting the hay into knots or sticks have already been patented. In sections where hay ranges from $15 to $20 per ton the new fuel will not be found so cheap as in Minnesota.

PROTECTING BRICK WALLS.

For the protection of soft-brick walls against moisture, it is recommended to make a paint by dissolving about 250 grams (½ lb.) of mottled soap in 4 liters (1 gallon) of boiling water, and to apply the solution while hot with a soft, flat brush. When this coat is dry, it may be covered in the same manner with a solution made by dissolving 100 grams (¼ lb.) of alum in 8 liters of water. The alum and soap are designed to decompose each other, and thus to form an insoluble varnish that will resist rain.

CONDITIONS OF INSANITY.

M. Meyer, of Hamburg, asserts that all mental diseases fall in two great classes. In one of these, the mental action exhibits a state of the intellect below the normal intelligence, and here there is evident weakness or confusion of mind; this diseased condition is idiopathic—comes from the brain—and if, in case of any patient of this class, there appears a state of excitement, this excitement indicates at once fever. In patients of the second class, Dr. Meyer says the mental strength is not below the normal standard, but the intellectual activity is wrong in direction; the insanity in a case of this class is sympathetic or reflected, that is, it does not arise from a diseased brain, but the cause is to be sought in some other organ and part of the body—the organs of generation, the digestive organs, etc.

WEIGHT AND HEALTH.

The weight of the body, as is well known, has often been assumed as an infallible proof of the maintenance of the condition of the body, or of a deposition of tissue, and the food which keeps up a man's weight has been regarded on that account as satisfactorily nutritious. Remarking upon this, in his recent address, at Munich, Prof. Voit says that the weight of the body is really no criterion of the value of the food taken, because, while the weight remains constant or even increases, water may increase in the tissues and albumen and fat diminish; or there may be an increase of weight and deposition of fat, while there is also at the same time a diminution of the albumen of the body—the fact being that badly-nourished people are usually not lighter than others, but their bodies contain more water and less albumen and fat than those who are well nourished. Prof. Voit also adds that the subjective feeling of satisfaction is equally deceptive; that the Irish peasant who consumes ten pounds of potatoes in the day feels quite satisfied, and yet is badly nourished, in point of fact, though not conscious of it.

BURIED CITIES IN ASIA.

An expedition to explore the buried cities of Central Asia is talked of in Bombay and elsewhere in India. That treasures like those at Mycenæ may be found in the sands of Mongolia is at least possible. If tradition be of any value—a tradition, too, which has persistently clung to one locality through the lapse of centuries—the tomb of Ghengiz Khan is yet, with its fabulously rich treasures, to be found (as Col. Prejevalsky was told by the Mongols) to the south of Lake Tabasun-Nor. Your readers may remember the quaint legend about the last resting-place of the great Khan. Within the tomb lies a man who seems asleep. Every evening a sheep or a horse is tied near to the spot, and lo! in the morning the animals have been eaten. In 300 years, says the Mongols, the sleeper will awake and lead countless hosts of his children to victory and dominion. The old story is said to be circulating more and more widely every year. Then the Mongols say that constantly the drifting sands disclose, here and there, gold and silver treasures which they have a superstitious dread of touching. The buried cities under the sands of the Gobi are affirmed to be mines of incalculable wealth, guarded by gnomes and fearful spells, while all the deserts around the hidden ruins are peopled by myriads of howling ghosts. Dr. Bellew established the fact some time since that we shall probably have several of these buried cities revealed shortly, in a similarly natural manner to that in which they were primarily concealed from the sight of man. The sands of the deserts of Central Asia regularly move and drift from east to west, and even now the eastern borders of the deserts are being denuded widely of all soil that can be torn away and borne westward by the violent winds that rage with incredible fury many months of the year in those regions. Will Russia be the first to avail herself practically of the knowledge of this?—London Athenæum.

The Speakership.

Gen. Banks appears to be gaining some strength as a compromise candidate for the Speakership. Gen. Williams, of Detroit, who is here, who is friendly to Banks, has intimated that if the troops are withdrawn from Louisiana, as they have been from South Carolina, and the same policy is to be consistently pursued by the administration, he (Williams) and a good many other Northern Democrats may, in certain contingencies, vote for Banks. Gen. Garfield, too, is understood to have several Southern Democratic votes pledged to him.—Washington Telegram.

A woman at Mystic, Conn., who cut her throat a few days ago, had her windpipe drawn together and still lives. Her only inconvenience is a slight leakage where the wound was drawn up, which makes a sound like a steam valve when she takes a heavy breath.

THE BLUEBIRD.

When ice is thawed and snow is gone,
  And racy sweetness floods the trees—
When snowbirds from the hedge have flown,
  And on the hive-porch swarm the bees—
Drifting down the first warm wind
  That thrills the earliest days of spring,
The bluebird seeks our maple groves,
  And charms them into tasseling.

He sits among the delicate sprays,
  While mists of splendor round him drawn,
And through the spring's prophetic veil
  Sees summer's rich fulfillment dawn,
He sings, and his is nature's voice—
  A gush of melody sincere
From that great fount of harmony
  That thaws and runs when spring is here.

Short is his song, but strangely sweet
  To ears aweary of the low,
Dull tramp of winter's sullen feet,
  Sandaled in ice and muffled in snow.
Short is his song, but through it runs
  A hint of dithyrambs yet to be—
A sweet suggestiveness that has
  The influence of a prophecy.

From childhood I have nursed a faith
  Of bluebird's song and winds of spring;
They tell me, "After frost and death
  There comes a time of blossoming."
And after snow and cutting sleet
  The cold, close-[illegible]
To tender warmth, when bare pink feet
  Of children press her greening fields.

Sing strong and clear, O bluebird dear!
  While all the land with splendor fills,
While maples gladden in the vales,
  And plum trees blossom on the hills;
Float down the wind on shining wings,
  And do thy will by grove and stream,
While thro' my life spring's freshness runs,
  Like music through a poet's dream.

Substantial Relic.

A gentleman visiting the widow of a poet was exceedingly anxious to obtain some relic of the bard, to be kept as a memorial of the deceased. The lady replied to all his entreaties that she had already given away everything that was remarkable, or that she could think of parting with, so that she had no relic left. Still the visitor insisted, and still the lady declared her inability to satisfy him, till at last a happy thought struck her, and she exclaimed, "Unless you take myself, I really can think of no other relic [relict] of him that it is in my power to give or yours to receive."

THAT EXTRA SESSION.

Hayes is afraid of it. There are several potential reasons for his timidity. The need of an extra session of the Congress is imperative if all the Departments of the Government are to run smoothly on. The army must disband—no unendurable calamity—or wear the uniforms without pay, unless an appropriation is soon made for its maintenance. The naval appropriation has been exhausted, and there is need of a naval deficiency bill, owing to Robeson's deficiency. There are no elections for the Navy Deptrtment to carry just at present, but while the Navy Department could have been spared from our politics at almost any time within the last decade, and while its drafts upon the National exchequer could have been spared without any loss of National complacancy, it is barely possible, in view of a little commotion in Europe that is attracting some attention, that it might be convienient for the United States to have a Navy Department during the next few months.

Why Hayes should fear the early assemblage of Congress is obvious. In the first place, he is anxious to complete the execution of his Southern policy, without the interference of the House of Representatives. He has sought to build up a party for himself upon this policy, which consists simply in withdrawing troops from the Southern States, to be administered by their own people. If he withdraws the troops only at the command of the House of Representatizes his Southern policy is his no longer. If he should carry out a policy on compulsion it would profit him not. The Blaines and the Mortons and the Butlers of the Republican party are boiling with indignation as they contemplate this Southern policy, and the vials of their wrath would be unsparingly emptied if Congress were in session. The question could not be kept out of the Congressional debates, and these men could not be muzzled. The family quarrel would be exposed to the public gaze, and Hayes dreads this. He fears the discussion of his policy by his own party. Still further, Mr. Hayes is aware that the American people still wildly and angrily remember that he holds his high place by a title damnably false. He would much prefer that a little time be given to sooth the passions of the people, to calm the deepseated and righteous indignation before the Democratic members of Congress are permitted to pour their philippics into the ear of the nation. A people yet hot with wrath will listen eagerly to just attacks upon the claims of His Fraudulency, while half a year might lift other things into the public thought. It is not strange that Hayes should desire to delay the fire as long as possible, to move the batteries as far away as he may. But if the Congress were called together in extra session it would be necessary for the de facto President to announce the policy of the Administration touching the public question of the future—the financial issue, the tariff question, the question of internal improvements. The leading journals of the country, mirroring the popular sentiment, are demanding that the Administration do something at once, or at least immediately declare an intention to do something to relieve the suffering industries of the land. This clamor is imperious. An extra session would compel Mr. Hayes to definitely make known the purposes of the Administration in these respects, and this Hayes dares not do at once. He wishes to feel his way. His position is tentative. He has no positiveness and no force of character. He really has no policy of his own to impress upon the National affairs. The trimmers about him are not ready to advertise their policy, and herein lies another reason why an extra session would be dangerous to Hayes. Will he venture to call it?

For years past we have been fighting for a recognition of the rights of the Southern people, and during the the last four years we have dealt our hardest blows against the bloody shirt spirit that has animated our Radical friends since the war. But at last we have triumphed through the action of Mr. Hayes in his recognition of Hampton and Nichols.

Light has broken in Louisiana. Hayes has sent the command over his sigumanual to take away the soldiers. There were not many soldiers, but they were the emblems of government by force. They were not in the State-house, but they were barracked in an adjacent building, and passages were cut to communicate between their drill-room and the Legislative halls of Louisiana. The feudal days of the mailed hand and of clanking armor and subterranean galleries has passed in Louisiana. The squadrons are to march away from the quadroons with fifes piping "The girl I left behind me," and though they do not go so far that there need be tears of parting, yet it is enough Louisiana is not in the guard-house, and the soldiers among them as their soldiers will be welcome. It is strange that these should not be glad tidings to every body, but such is the fact. Packard and his depleted Legislature of camp-followers will weep more than the quadroons, and here in the North there is a class of politicians who bear the same relation to politics that contractors bore to the war, who will wring their hands to see jocund Peace stand tip-toe on the misty mountain tops. Among these are all the straight Republicans, with such organs as the New York Times and the Chicago Inter-Ocean. They are already gnashing their teeth. They feel their occupation gone marching away with the plumed troops, the neighing steed, the spirit-stirring drum. These made ambition virtue, and henceforward the only material they will have to manufacture the virtue they do not posess will be necessity. Just at present this class is engaged in throwing wads at Hayes while his back is turned and looking innocent when he turns around; and they would slip bent pins into the Presidental chair if they could get a chance. But they ought to get over all this nonsense and give him a cordial support, for, when Packard goes out to camp with the soldiers outside of New Orleans, Hayes will be the only Executive fraud in the United States. They will be bound to support him, or utterly cease to advocate the active Republican principle of usurpation.

The letter of Ben Wade is interesting reading. He is not a candidate for office, and he has long been recognized as a wheel-horse in the Republican party. He remembers with "indignation and bitterness of soul" that he labored to procure the nomination of Hayes in the Cincinnati Convention. The sturdy Wade says that he has been "deceived, betrayed and even humilated" by the course of Hayes. He is filled with indignation that he can not express. If Mr. Wade, who has long been honored by his party, stood alone in the party, his utterances would be of less significance, honored though he has been by that party. But the commanding men of the Republican party agree with Ben Wade. One-half of the Republicans in the country agree with Wade, and it is this that troubles Hayes.

It is something to say in favor of Daniel H. Chamberlain that he spurned—as he surely did—the bribe of a foreign mission offered him by the wonderful civil service reformer who now occupies the White House. It tends to dispose one to doubt the scandals against Chamberlain when we see him rise superior to the allurements of lofty official position set before him by Hayes.

Chamberlain, to day, enjoys deservedly much more of the respect of the country than falls to the lot of Hayes.—N. Y. Sun.

John A. Kasson, of Iowa, has accepted the position of Minister to Spain.

The lightening-rod fiend is abroad in the land, and is getting in his work at a rapid rate. The South Bend Register ventilates him in this way: We are requested by a number of citizens of the county to warn the public against the manner of proceeding of agents of Thos. West & Co., lightning-rod men, of Chicago, who have been canvassing the country and are now in the county. They have swindled quite a number of persons, and their manner of proceeding is like this: They go to a property owner, and after inducing him to invest in their rods, get him to sign a contract reading as follows: 'Please erect on my house and barn a system of circuit conductors, in accordance with the rules of your company, for which I agree to pay you sixty-seven and one-half cents per foot; three dollars each for points; three dollars each for vanes; two dollars each for balls; and the price of three feet of rod for each galvanized iron brace, either in cash or by note upon completion of work.' They first give the applicant to understand that it will only take a given number of feet to rod the building. The cost looks small and he goes in. But he has signed a contract, that does away with verbal understandings, to have the rods put on in 'accordance with the rules of the company,' and these rules enable these men to put on a three hundred dollar rod on a two hundred dollar building, if they want to, the bill of expense being regulated only by what the agents think they can get out of their customer. The whole manner of proceeding is a gouge, and people should be cautioned against them."

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but natural that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

A TILT

"It may be so but I don't see it."

"It's because you don't use your eyes; you're prejudiced."

"Perhaps I am."

"I know you are. It would be foolish to talk against custom-made clothing. Those who prefer it, and can afford it, have a right to it, but I won't listen to your slurs against 'ready-made;' my experience is all against you. I have bought ready-made of SAM PETE & MAX, and found it to fit as nicely, last as long and look quite as well as custom work, and for much less money."

"You seem, interested in the Star Clothing House."

"I am, but not in the sense you mean. I think a house that has done so much to raise the tone of ready made clothing business, and at the same time reduce the prices for the people, deserves a good word."

"But you detract from the custom trade."

"Not a bit of it! It is not that I love Cæsar less, but Rome more. The truth is, custom work has not become poorer, and gone down but ready-made has become better and risen up! Now do you see it?"

"I wouldn't acknowledge it if I did."

"Of course you wouldn't. Those beaten in arguments seldom do. Good morning."

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES.

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

Our greatly elongated friend, John Bunch, in describing the toughness of a certain tree that he had to make into rails, said the lightning struck all around it, but never once went for it, well knowing that it could not knock off the bark even. John is very practical is his allegorical allusions.

The old Presbyterian church is now owned and occupied by the English Evangilical Lutheran church congregation of which Rev. L. Rice is pastor. They have services every two weeks, next Sabbath being regular service day, at 3,30 p. m. Sunday school every Sabbath at 2,30 p. m.

When a certain high-toned gent at Corunna wants to communicate with us we hope he will not try to swindle the Government out of two cents, by writing on the margin of a news paper, which he ought to know is a criminal offense. We think some of presenting the facts to the Grand Jury. The initials of the aforesaid gentleman are Eli Meyers.

We have been making garden. What jolly work it is to bend your back to the yielding soil, until its about broke. We were disposed to rest a good deal at first, but there was our better-half, shoe brush in hand, peeping through a half open door, and we didn't feel like taking any chances. Some people don't know when they are well off until they try it.

Next monday week is an election day, and town officers are to be selected for the coming year. The present board have done very well, and we believe our citizens have been satisfied with the way they have managed things, especially as to the finances. The Marshal has collected all the taxes but about $250, now due for the past year which we believe s considered pretty close collecting.

Miss Margiana Rainier was immersed in Cedar Creek, last Sabbath, by Mr. Welsh. The attendance was very large. There were several others baptized in a milder way at the church, and it looked brave for this little lady to submit all by her lone self to a bath in the cold waters. In baptism, we are an out and out Baptist,—we believe in a regular plunge, in the pure rippling water.

WANTED.

100,000 lbs of wool wanted at the New York Store, Auburn, Ind., for which the highest market price will be paid. We have in exchange all kinds of woolen goods, such as Jeans, flannels, blankets, &c. We will also pay cash if desired. 3m no16.

The following are some of the improvements and additions which we expect will be made to our town this season: One good grist mill, which will cost over $12,000; one National Bank with a capital of over $50,000; elevators for storing and loading grain; cattle yards for the loading of stock, and many other improvements, such as the building of a car shop, foundry, wheel house, etc. In addition to these there will be, or ought to be, the erection of many dwellings for families.—[Garrett News.

Warsaw is making an immense effort to have a grand soldiers' re-union there on the 6 and 7th of June. We have spoken of this before, but not of the extensive preparations which have been commenced, for one of the greatest occasions of this character ever held in the State. It is a good point for such demonstrations, and we know from the style and "get-up" of the people there, that it will not fail of success.

While Mrs. Quivey, of this city, was in one of the back rooms of her residence, yesterday, she heard the movements of some person in the front room, but supposing it to be one of the children, she paid no further attention to it at the time. After awhile, she went to the room where the noise had been, and discovered that her pocket-book was missing from its accustomed place. It contained one note of $150, about $5 in money, and some valuable papers. A tramp called at her house on the day previous, to whom she gave something to eat, and who worked awhile to pay for it. It is probable that he is the individual who took the pocket-book.—Plymoth Democrat.

MARRIED.—On Sabbath eve. April 22, 1877, by Rev. J. W. Welch, Mr. A. K. Grubb, of Pennsylvania, and Miss Mary F. Miller, of Auburn.

The marriage was a brilliant affair and the church was packed to its utmost, to witness the consummation of the happiness of our friends. Mr. G. has won a rare prize—a bride whose loveliness of person is only excelled by the sweetness of her disposition, and we are glad to know she has secured a true, kind and handsome husband. We join with a host of friends in wishing them prosperity and happiness, and with hat in hand we thank them for their kind remembrances of a most tangible character.

Some of our great scientists are reviving the story that this earth will not be an abiding place for man very long, as she's gwang ter bust up soon. It is said that the earthquakes are splitting open the crust of the earth, and that the waters of the ocean will soon get to pouring in upon the liquid fire in the center, and the steam there from will blow us all to Jerico. Don't you believe it. They just want you to get careless-like, and sorter give up so that they can make a large fortune, and then laugh to see you work hard in your old days. You just watch your corn and wheat, run your business same as ever, and shave all the notes you can. Old mamma earth is solid for us yet.

The play of K. Mavourneen by the Garrett Dramatic troupe was not largely patronized last Saturday evening, generally the usual result in Auburn, especially in the dramatic line. We cannot speak very flatteringly of the manner in which it was rendered, owing doubtless to the noisy demonstration of the audience. The ladies sustained their parts very well, as also did Knoder and Marvin. The comical farce of "A load of wood" written by Johnny Picker, with the author in the principle character, brought down the house, and came very near finishing Sam Puff. [illegible] you dare not repeat.

The Albion "New Era" says the dismissal of the case of Donn Piatt, for publishing an assassination article shows that our people are far in advance of other nations in respect to such things, as such sentiments, had they been uttered in any European capital against the ruler of the country, would have cost the incautious writer his head.

This case don't show anything of the kind, although such may be the fact. It was simply a case of blackmail, and the parties bringing suit saw they had not the ghost of a chance to convict Mr. Piatt, as he no more meant to encourage assassination than the editor of the "Era."

FIRST NATIONAL BANK.

The First National Bank of Auburn Indiana tenders to the citizens of De-Kalb county its facilities for the transaction of business. We loan money, receive deposits subject to check at sight or payable at a fixed date with a stipulated rate of interest. Sell exchange on New York, Chicago, Toledo and Fort Wayne procure such foreign exchange as may be desired, buy exchange and make collections on all available points, and do all usual and ordinary business done by first class banks. We will also take on deposit for safekeeping valuable papers such as deeds mortgages, notes bonds, agreements etc., guardians, administrators, trustees and all other handling trust funds together with merchants, manufacturers and farmers are solicited to open an account with us. Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touaist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine" It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. With the Tourists, the San Juan Guide keeps fitting company, and the two publications are mailed free to all writing for one or both to T. J. ANDERSON, Topka K.

"No man worthy of the office of President should be willing to hold it if counted in or placed there by fraud."—U. S. Grant.

And yet Tilden made a desperate effort to be placed in the presidential chair by fraud.—Kendallville Standard.

And yet the Standard had no word of complaint when Hayes succeeded by the grossest fraud in gaining the position, so much so that two of the best Representatives from Massachusetts, Seely and Pearce, protested against the count. But if anybody can be mean, politically, it is Myers. He is to some extent excusable, as he is working for his master.

FARMERS READ.

OFFICE OF ST. JOSEPH REAPER AND MACHINE COM'Y,
SOUTH BEND, IND., April 21st, 1867.
MESSRS. N. & GEO. ENSLEY, Auburn, Indiana, Gentlemen:—

We have your favor of the 19th inst., calling our attention to an article published in your county paper last week, from the South Bend Iron Works of this place, and we must express our surprise at Mr. L. Pine, representing that company, writing for publication that which he knows to be UTTERLY FALSE, as this company have the same right to manufacture the "South Bend Chilled Plow," that the South Bend Iron Works have to manufacture the "Oliver Chilled Plow," having been granted a patent for same by the United States Government, on the 9th day of March 1875, and we might with just as much propriety, advise purchasers of the Oliver plow, to demand a bond, guaranteeing them indemnity for damages as Oliver has to give such advice to purchasers of the "South Bend Chilled Plow." We therefore take this opportunity of notifying the farmers of DeKalb county that the "South Bend Chilled Plow" manufactured by the St. Joseph Reaper and Machine Co., of South Bend, Ind., is NOT an infringement on the Oliver or any other plow, and we publicly DARE and DEFY any man or company to prove the contrary, and our confidence in the intelligence and integrity of them is such, that we feel assured they cannot but condemn the course pursued by Jas. Oliver and his representatives towards us during the past year and a half, as it is unworthy of an honorable business man and a fellow citizen. We further GUARANTEE any purchaser or user of our plow against ANY and ALL damages that Mr. Oliver or any representative of his or the South Bend Iron Works may sustain against them, for purchasing or using the "South Bend Chilled Plow."

Very Respectfully,
ST JOSEPH REAPER AND MACHINE CO.

We call attention of the farming community, to read the above letter carefully, which shows conclusively that other parties besides Mr. James Oliver and John L. Davis, have the right to manufacture and sell Chilled Plows. We were surprised at Mr. John L. Davis writing an article for publication with his name attached, which we consider damaging to us and our trade, simply because we have introduced a Chilled Plow to the public, that will compete with his in every particular, both in COURT and in the FIELD. We have patronized him in "his business" for the last ten years, and have paid him up in cash, between TWO and THREE THOUSAND dollars, which he has realized a profit from 20 to 40 per cent. Now we say that no good business man can afford to attack any of his patrons in the newspapers, simply because they start in business to compete honorably with his, which is a public benefit to every one concerned, and stops the spirit of monopoly, and we hope never again to be called to the painful necessity of answering an article of any of our brother business men. All that we want is fair and honorable competition in business.

Now we say to the farmers, all those that are wanting a No. one Chilled Plow to call on us and you can be accommodated. Further, we have reduced the prices of our plows for the next 30 days in order to make room for a large stock of heavy farm machinery. Farmers please call and see us, and get a good plow at reduced rates.

NICHOLAS & GEO. ENSLEY.

Ladies and Gentlemen of Auburn and Vicinity.

I am aware the usual notices of selling at cost is stale, obsolete and even doubtful yet I frankly confess I will sell my entere stock at actual cost. I am truthful when I assert this. To convince yourself please call and examine goods and prices.

Ladies' gold chains, 14 karat solid, $1.10 dwt; gent's golds vest chains, 14 karat solid, $1.10 dwt; 18 karat solid plain rings $1.10 dwt; ladies' gold watches, formerly $65 at $45; gent's gold watches at factory prices; american silver watches at cost; silver plated castors 3, 4, 5, and $9; silver plated cake baskets 4, 5, 7 and $8; silver plated tea spoons $1.50 set; silver plated table spoons $3.50; silver plated steel table knives $6.50 dozen; solid silver table spoons—also do. forks, $17; solid silver tea spoons, twist, &c., $8@$9; solid silver timbles, 45c; all other goods sold in same proportionate reduction. Endless variety of clocks at actual cost. Vienna regulators, at $20 and $23. Superior quality of spectacles, at makers prices. Diamond rings, cameo, do., set rings and all others at wholesale prices. Also ladies' fine gold sets at manufacturers' prices.

I will give each purchaser of $5 worth of goods a chance ticket in the drawing for a clock valued at $200, first prize; also as a second prize, a beautiful $100 music box. Each ticket entitles the holder to a chance in both prizes.

Also, I wish to inform the public that I have made arrangements with the various manufactures of watches, jewelry, silver ware &c, to send any goods on selection, so that those who wish anything in this line, and not in stock, will have an opportunity to buy of me at the small commisson of 10 per cent, and in every instance goods warranted as I represent them, as the reputation of the firm is sufficient guarantee to all.

Respectfully, GEO. J. E. MAYER,
19 E. Main St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

The price of wheat is steadily increasing, having advanced 25c. Tuesday over our last quotations. The receipts at this station have been very light thus far for the present week,—farmers, evidently, are holding back for a still greater advance. Yesterday buyers were offering the following: For wheat, Amber No. one, $1.90c., No. two, do $1.70c.; White, do, No. one, $1.91c., No. two, do $1.70c. Oats, 44c.; corn, 50c.; potatoes, $1.25c.; butter, 11c.; eggs, 8c.; hogs, live weight, 5½c@5¾c., dressed, 6@6½c.; hides, green, 5c.

It was rumored in town Monday that [illegible] Banks, a well known freight conductor on the Air Line, died suddenly of heart disease while on his way to the hot springs of Arkansas for medical treatment. Mr. Banks had been in the employ of the Lake Shore Company for many years, and in that time had gained a large circle of friends on the line, by his gentlemanly deportment.

The lumber traffic is quite an item of commerce in this village. The mills of P. N. Calkin and Messrs. Kline & Osborn have been running on full time for the past month, and the lumber is readily picked up and shipped east by R. M. Lockhart, of Waterloo, and L. Hudson, of Ligionier. At the former mill there is one of the best head sawyers in the State, Mr. Lew. McDonald, and but a small portion of the lumber turned off by him is condemned.

The latest move on the matrimonial chess-board in this village is that of our townsman, Mr. O. Raber to Miss Josie Johnson. Now, Mr. Raber, inasmuch as you have settled down,—if you would be happy in the jog over the rough and rugged stones to eternity, subscribe for the COURIER. You can't keep house without it.

They came, two portly chaps, into the village on Tuesday—one of them representing himself to be a physician, and the other chap a lawyer, looking for a location. After taking a stroll [illegible] any morning, they left town on the 'plug' forgetting to embrace the landlord of the Union Hotel.

The champion egg packer lives in Corunna, and handles hen fruit for John Lipsett. His name is Bob Hays, and on last Thursday he put up five barrels of eggs in one hour and a quarter.

In our rounds to-day we notice a new sign hanging to a building on the north side of the railroad. It reads, "A. H. Arhend, Merchant Tailor," fresh from the classic precincts of Garrett.

The Corunna Brass Band are deserving of worthy mention. The band has been organized only eight months, and the members play as well as some bands of greater pretentions.

Bill Adams, the democratic Iron-clad, appeared upon the streets Saturday last with a bang-up pair of blue-jeans and an abbreviated army coat to match.

LOVELAND.

CEDAR CREEK.

Ross says he dont like to attend school meetings for they bulldoze to much.

E. B. Ross, our merchant is still on the war path, buying grain of all kinds for which he pay the highest market price.

Mr. Jones our freight and ticket agent is always on hand, and he buys all kinds of timber for which he pays the highest market price. He is one of those good honorable men, who let his light so shine that men can see his good work.

We held one of the largest school meeting ever held in the part, there was a good deal of bulldosing a going on. We polled the largest vote that ever was polled in this district, it was equal to the presidental election, but no blood shed.

We noticed our old and well esteemed farmer David Stonestreet, driving a fine lot of fat cattle through town the other day which he sold. He is one of our best stock dealers, and takes a great pride in good stock. We notice he has bought a much larger drove.

Cedar Creek is the banner town yet. There was four lots sold last week in one day. This is one of the nicest localities for a town in this section. We have a good store and sawmill, shoe shop and blacksmith shop—Cedar Creek running within a quarter of a mile of town. Let others come and purchase. We have orginized a good Sabbath school here and have church every two weeks.

Father Hallman says that the people says he is getting too old to vote at school meetings, but he says he is of age and capable of voting and cant be disfranchised by legal process.

JOHN HARVEY.

GARRETT.

The weather begins to look a little hazy. Organ grinders were furnishing music for the boys last night.

Our custom house is up to the second story. Frank Clark will be collector for the part of Garrett, as we must have a non-resident of the place.

We see that smiling face of Chris. Kenecht again on our streets. Garrett must be the center of attraction for those who leave, can't stay away but a short time.

Sodding lots and setting out shade trees seems to be the order of the day here. That is right friends, it is such improvements that add to the beauty of our town.

Some of our citizens who were in favor of a big school house, begin to kick about high tax. But gentlemen you must not squeal, for you were in favor of taking this elephant on your hands, and now you must bear your part of the burden; and yet this is only a drop in the bucket of what is yet to come. We were not in favor of such an expensive building. If this was to reach some of the Garrett COURIER readers, they would look in astonishment and say who are they that were not in favor of such a school house. We will answer that question here. That term includes four-fifths of the tax-paying people of the town; it includes those who have been working for the best interests of the place and not trying to run it by high taxes. It includes those whose voices were raised to deaf ears, and not a small ring who had very little tax to pay and who went ahead regardless of the voice of the people, regardless of public sentiment, and imposed upon the people a debt which they never can pay. Look at it; here is a tax of one per cent. already, and not even the interest on any large debts to pay. Next year we will have the interest on those school bonds to pay in addition to other necessary expenses, and in three years the bonds begin to come due. Now we would like to know where this thing is going to end. In conclusion we would ask some good mathematition of Garrett to figure this up and give us an answer in the next issue of the News.

JUNCTION.

Charles, the pugilist, has returned.

Sabbath School at ten a. m., each Sunday.

Episode of the feminine gender at Thos. Conner's.

Mr. Koontz moved in the house for[illegible] Joe Davis.

Fred Sammons has been on the sick list, but is able to be around again.

Mr. Gillispie has commenced the erection of his stave factory.

Charles Eldridge has purchased a lot of Mr. John Smith and is setting out fruit trees and fixing it up, preparatory to building a dwelling thereon.

Our old friend N. King, of Syracuse, gave the Junction a flying visit last Sunday, and brought some very nice fish with him. Come again, Noah, and don't forget the editor next time.

Mr. J. A. Wherrett, agent for the Ft. W. J. & S. R'y, at this place, has tendered his resignation, taking effect Apr. 30th. Mr. Wherrett is a hard-working clever fellow, and does all in his power to solicit freight for the company he is working for. Mr. Williams, of Jackson Mich., will succeed him.

A PETITION.

BY M. S. BROPHY.

Mr. Clerk of the Weather, greeting:
  Sir, we honor your office and you;
But we citizens have just held a meeting,
  Without any fuss or ado.
No reporter was admitted nor scribe;
  No, sir, we excluded the press;
That quill-driving, ink-bottle tribe
  Of our meeting dared not hazard a guess.

Well, sir, you must be aware
  That amendments are now all the style;
The constitution will soon make you swear,
  To say nothing of raising your bile.
The laws made a century ago
  (You remember you were in office then)
As applied to those times are "no go"—
  We are now rather different men.

But, sir, to come to the object point,
  Permit us to say, the weather, as we see,
The past season is quite out of joint,
  To which with you we do not quite agree.
This [illegible]
  Was so plentiful as to overrun our shores,
And place us in a position to scold and blow,
  Which, in the end, gives us the "blues."

You are silent—no word of dissent.
  'Tis well, sir, we know what that means.
For silence is, everywhere, consent,
  Now we know which side your mind leans.
No matter; the charge could not be refuted,
  For our minds are made up on that score,
So the citizens have me deputed
  To say, we need you no more.

No, sir, you've an uncertain temper;
  To put it mildly, and say but the least,
We might say, "Tyrannus sic semper;"
  But we choose not the part of a beast.
You sneer at my Latin? I changed it.
  Change is the order of the day—
Elections, laws, rapid transit
  Are bearing the old tides away.

So, sir, we respectfully beg you'll step down
  And out—plain English, I hope you'll perceive
We wish to pay no more heed to your frown,
  And beg you gracefully to leave.
You must be quite a respectable age—
  Pre-historic your birthday, I'm sure;
Rest will suit such a venerable sage—
  'Tis wonderful how long you endure.

This the citizens wished me to say,
  With "they wish a new man in your place,"
And "your weather would soon turn them gray,
  If kept up at this beastly pace."
So, Mr. Clerk of the Weather, 'twere well
  If you give this your speedy attention.
I have the honor, sir, to bid you farewell;
  I have no more just at present to mention.

BELLA AND BABY.

"Will you lift your head, Isabel, and listen to me? We must see what is to be done for you as quickly as possible."

The speaker, Caleb Arno, was a grave, careworn-looking man of 55. He had come to New York with his three sisters to attend the funeral of a younger brother, and "to inquire into the state of his affairs." Their rage and astonishment, when they learned that of the property they had counted on sharing with his widow, not so much remained as would furnish a shelter for herself and child, can hardly be described. Outraged as they felt with "Charles," all united in laying the principal blame of his ruin on her. Her extravagance in dress, her love of society and pleasure—all this was brought up against her, and her youth and inexperience (for she was scarcely 19) seemed no excuse in their eyes. Even Caleb, who had his feelings more under control, could not help an added shade of severity in his voice as he addressed her.

Bella raised her head quickly. Poor thing! She looked too young and tender to meet such trials. And yet the resolution with which she choked back her tears showed that the little creature had considerable spirit after all.

"It is best you should understand the state of affairs, Bella," Caleb went on. "Charles has left absolutely nothing behind him—not even the house belongs to you. Now what are you going to do? As you have lost your aunt—"

"And a nice one she was to bring up a girl!" broke in Mrs. Cotton. "I don't believe Bella can so much as hem a pocket-handkerchief! And me with my seven daughters slaving our lives out on that miserable farm! And the little money I expected in return for all I had done for Ch—"

"Gently, Sarah, gently," interposed Caleb, and his calmly authoritative voice acted as a sort of stop-cock on Mrs. Cotton's effervescing wrath, for with one indignant gulp of protest she was silent.

"Such talk does no good," he went on. "Bella understands our circumstances, and that sister Wright is the only one who hasn't a family on her hands——"

"No family!" put in "sister Wright," an acid-looking little woman. "And well for me I haven't—it's all Job an' I can do to live now. Many's the time I've gone to church in a calico dress, when those no better'n me were rolling about in their carriages, dressed up in silk and feathers. No thought of sister Wright then! But when trouble comes, and there's no one else to turn to——"

"I don't want to be a burden; you don't understand me if you think so," Bella broke in. "And I know I've been extravagant and foolish, though I didn't realize it before. But I'm willing to do anything if I can only earn a living for my poor baby." Tears welled up into her eyes at the thought of her child, but she brushed them hastily away.

"You needn't worry about the baby," said a voice that had been silent till now.

All eyes turned toward Mrs. Buell. She had had time for reflection during the last few minutes, and had concluded that matters might have been worse for her. Her husband was wealthy, able to supply her and her three daughters with every luxury. Absorbed in these reflections, she scarcely noticed the conversation going on around her, till the baby's name fell upon her ear. This recalled to her mind a talk with her husband, and she unfolded her "plan" with the air of one conferring an unexpected favor.

"You needn't worry about Archie, Bella; I have a beautiful plan for him. I think the best way I can help you will be to take the boy off your hands. Robert will be willing, I know. Of course it will be quite a care, but we sha'n't mind that if we can only be of service to you. He shall have every advantage; we won't make a bit of difference between him and our own children. Of course you could come to see him now and then"—for Bella looked petrified. "I would ask you to stay with us, but you and Robert never did get on well together, you know. And then it would be better for the child."

"Give up my baby!" cried Bella, springing from her chair. "Do you think I have a heart of stone? Oh, it's too much!" A gush of passionate tears choked her voice. "I may 'come to see him now and then.' Oh, how kind you are, Mrs. Buell! how well you understand a mother's yearning over her child!"

"Bella," said Caleb, gravely.

She turned and caught his hand, as if hopeful of his sympathy.

"Oh, Caleb, wasn't it wicked to ask me to give up my child? I've been a vain, foolish girl, but I always did love my baby so! That she should think of such a thing, it hurts me, Caleb."

She wept passionately, her head upon his shoulder. Caleb waited till she was quiet; then he said, in his grave, moderate tones:

"Bella, be reasonable. If you really love your child, you will put his happiness before your own."

"You want me to do it!" cried Bella. She would have pulled her hands away but he held them firmly in his.

"Be quiet, and let us talk it over sensibly."

"I was going to say, when Bella interrupted me," said Mrs. Buell, "that Robert and I would offer her a yearly sum—"

"Thank you; I wouldn't sell my own flesh and blood for all the money in the world."

"Let us bring this to an end, Bella," said Caleb, decidedly. "Harriet has made you a most reasonable offer, and, if you persist in declining it, we must conclude that you wish us to interfere no further in your affairs. We will give you half an hour to consider," dropping her hands.

"And I don't want five minutes," said Bella, firmly. She stood quite erect now, with scarlet cheeks and a defiant light in her large blue eyes. "I won't give up Archie, and you can do as you please."

"Think a moment before you turn your back on the only ones who can help you," said Caleb's warning voice, arresting her.

"God can help me," said Bella, a pathetic tremble in her voice. "He gave baby to me, not to any body else, and He will help me take care of him I'm sure."

She passed from the room without another word.

"No, ma'am, we cannot give you a cent more. The watch isn't worth it."

There was a touch of insolence in the jeweler's tone that called up a faint flush into the pale face regarding him. Bella—for it was she—stood hesitating a moment.

"Well, you may have it on your own terms, then, though I'm sure it's worth more," she said, with a sigh.

"You're in no danger of being taken advantage of in this store, ma'am," said Mr. Marble, sharply, as he counted eighty dollars into her hand.

Bella went out of the store, her heart heavy as lead. The day when she and Archie would be turned homeless into the street was put off, but only for a time.

"My wedding ring—that will have to go next," thought the poor child. "And then!"

A look of despairing anguish came into her eyes, and she clasped the little she held more firmly.

"It would kill me!" she murmured, in a husky voice.

"Do 'lone, mamma, do 'lone!" cried Archie. She released his hand, and he trotted on before her. Though scarcely eighteen months old, he was so large of his age he seemed like a child of two years. His bronze hair curled tightly over his head, he had his father's ample forehead and splendid black eyes. A princely boy! No wonder Robert Buell coveted him, and would have been proud to call him his son.

"Bull! Bull!" cried the little fellow, pausing before a shop window, wherein were displayed children's toys and a few jars of candy.

"No, dear, not to-day."

"Bull! Bull!" repeated Archie, imperiously, and his mother yielded, as usual.

Mr. Bull, a little round-faced Englishman, came in smiling from an adjoining kitchen. He was glad to see the pretty lady, who had come into his store like a beneficent fairy some months ago. Archie, too—his nurse had taken him there once, and from that time the child would never let her pass the door without going in. The old man learned to watch for him, and his round face would dimple with pleasure at the sight of the boy.

"A pleasant day, Mrs. Arno," a sympathetic gentleness softening his voice as he noticed her careworn looks. "You are quite a stranger. And how's curly-head?" laughing down at the child.

"Give him a chocolate mouse, Mr. Bull," said Bella, laying a penny on the counter. "And how is Aunt Nancy to-day?"

"Oh, much the same as usual. Wouldn't you like to go in and see her, ma'am?—it would do her good."

"And me too," thought Bella, who felt comforted somehow since she entered the little store. "Yes, indeed," she said, aloud, as she followed the old man. Archie trotted after, nibbling at his mouse.

In a chamber adjoining the kitchen lay the old woman propped up by pillows. She would never walk another step, but her hands were busy knitting stockings from morning till night, and the sale of these added considerable to their household store. Her sweet, pale face was framed in silvery hair; there was an air of refinement about her that her husband lacked. Her eyes brightened at the sight of Bella, for the latter's good nature and sociable ways had made her as great a favorite with the old couple as her little boy.

"Dear Mrs. Arno, how glad I am to see you! And the darling baby too!" pressing a warm kiss on the uplifted mouth, with its impromptu mustache of chocolate and cream. Erasing her salute in the manner peculiar to childhood, he followed his particular friend, "Uncle Joe," into the store.

"Are you well, Mrs. Arno? You don't look so," said the old woman, after they had talked a few moments.

The tender sympathy in her voice fairly overcame poor Bella. She struggled a moment; then, hiding her face on the bed, she broke into a passion of tears.

"Poor child! what is it?" asked the old woman, laying her hand on the bowed head.

That gentle, motherly touch made Bella's tears flow the faster. It was some minutes before she could look up.

"It's too bad of me to trouble you," she said; "but you spoke so kindly. Nobody has spoken to me so since——"

"Poor child!" repeated the old woman; "tell me your troubles. It'll ease your heart, perhaps."

Thus encouraged, Bella took heart and went through her story, not without many tears. The old woman cried with her.

"That they should want to take your baby from you—that darling baby! I don't wonder you felt heart-broken. And so you thought the Lord had forsaken you? Ah, you'll know Him better when you've lived as long as me, poor child!"

"Yes, aunty, I was wrong; but I felt so discouraged. I thought I had so many friends; but when the time of trouble came——"

Bella's voice faltered. The old woman lay silent, stroking the hand she held in hers.

"And you want me to advise you?" she said at last.

"Yes. I thought you might hear of something I could do. I don't sew nicely. I'm very sorry about that. But is there's anything else——"

"Poor dear lady! To think of your having to work for a living! Why, you look as if a breath would blow you over now."

"Oh, I'm stronger than you think. I can work," said Bella, earnestly.

The woman reflected.

"I've a plan in my mind," she said, looking up. "I wish I could think of something better for you; but— Would you mind asking my husband to step here a moment, Mrs. Arno, please?"

What the "plan" was will be shown hereafter.

"Yes, sir, I call it the firm of Bella and Baby, and I'd like to have it put on the sign. There's a blessin' follered us ever since they come into the house."

Mr. Bull, or "Uncle Joe," as he is generally called, leans forward in his chair, his eyes fixed affectionately on Bella. It is three years since we saw her last, but she looks little changed, except that the bloom has returned to her cheek.

"The blessing came because you and Aunt Nancy were so good to us, Uncle Joe," she says, looking up from her work.

Something glistens in her blue eyes and the young man watching her from an opposite corner feels more in love than ever. He is Frank Darrow, an old friend of Bella's, who has visited here so often he seems like one of the family.

"And so you were in Europe at the time of Bella's trouble?" said the old man, musingly. He is never weary of talking about Archie and his mother, and one of his hearers at least finds the repetition of the theme an unending delight. But Bella seems rather uneasy.

"Did you ever think she'd turn out such a little business woman, Mr. Darrow? Why, the store 'as prospered as it never did when I was running it alone. But I was always sorry about her watch, and she insisted so on our taking the money"—

"Of course I did," broke in Bella. "A pretty thing it would have been to come upon you with my baby, and never offer to lighten the burden a little! Oh dear, how warm it is!" she added, rather pettishly, pushing back a bronze ripple of hair. Frank saw she felt uncomfortable, and rose to go.

"Will you come into the store with me a moment, Bella?"

"Oh, I guess I'll say good-night here," said Bella. "I must finish my work."

"Just five minutes," pleaded Frank, and "Go, dear, go," added the old man. Bella hesitated a moment, then did as was told.

"Good-night, uncle," said Frank, clasping his hand. Then, in a whisper, "You know what I'm going to ask her, Uncle Joe?"

"Yes, yes. God bless you, my boy! She loves you, I know."

"He's worthy of her," he muttered, as Frank walked off. "I'm glad of it; but, Lord help us, how we shall miss her and the boy!" brushing away a tear.

Bella was waiting in the store, a troubled but resolute look on her face. Closing the door, Frank stood silent a moment.

"Bella," approaching her, "you know what I wanted to ask you?"

"I suppose so, Frank," said Bella, quietly, but looking rather pale. "I wish you wouldn't ask it, though."

"Oh, Bella, if you knew how I love you!" pleaded Frank. "Can't you love me a little, dear?"

"Listen to me, Frank," said Bella, forcing back the tears. "It's impossible for us to marry; it would make too many people unhappy. Think of your family. What would they say," a faint smile crossing her face, "to your making a poor shop-girl your wife? And on my side are dear Uncle Joe and his wife."

"Bella, you don't know my mother and sisters. Worldly as they seem, they have warm hearts, and they couldn't help loving you and your dear little boy. As for Uncle Joe and his wife, they shall suffer no loss. Our home shall be theirs, my darling; we will care for them together."

"Frank, Frank, that generous heart of yours is always getting the better of your head. If my conscience would let me bring such a burden on you, do you suppose Uncle Joe and Aunt Nancy would be willing to give up their little home and live dependent on another?"

"Then they needn't leave their home, Bella," persisted Frank. "I will find some one to take your place in the store, though that shan't hinder your being with them as much as you please. We will both help them in every way."

"Frank, I tell you it is impossible. If we are to be friends you must never mention the subject again. And now," in a softer tone, "I really cannot stay any longer. Good-night, Frank; I shall always wish you well."

There was a slight break in her voice, and, turning, she went quickly out of the room. Frank looked after her a moment, then, with a white, set face, he picked up his hat and walked off.

"Heartless little thing!" he muttered, as he strode fiercely homeward through the rain. "I'll never give her another thought. Ah, well! I can't help loving her; she's the only woman in the world to me. Poor Arno [illegible] it in him to love her as I do. Oh, my darling, how can you be so hard to me?"

Could he but have seen Bella half an hour later, as she sat crying in her own little room!

"I do love him—I do!" she sobbed out. "The dear, generous-hearted, noble fellow! Oh, I wish he hadn't gone away so angry with me!"

"There, darling, take this from mamma. So, now; she will sit by you and hold your hand."

Nearly two weeks have passed since Frank and Bella parted. She has not seen him since. It cost her many tears at first, but for the last three days she can think of nothing but her boy.

Archie has diphtheria and is very sick, the doctor says. He has gone away now for a while, and the child lies exhausted on his pillow. How livid and sunken he looks! You would scarcely know the blooming face that lay here a few nights ago.

Poor Uncle Joe! He could not keep still a moment, but hovered about the mother and child in a nervous flutter of fear.

Whose step is that at the door? The old man looked up, and a flash of joy passed over his face. Going hastily toward the new-comer, he seized both his hands.

"Thank God you've come, Frank! The child's been very sick, but I think he's a little better," following Frank to Bella's side.

She looked up, with her white face and the tearless anguish in her eyes. "Oh, Frank!" she said, faintly, putting out her hand.

Clasping it gently, he said, in a tone of mild reproach, "Why didn't you send me word, Bella?"

"It's diphtheria; you mustn't stay," whispered Bella, motioning him off as he bent over the crib.

"But I am going to stay, Bella," he replied, with such mild decision that she felt remonstrance was useless.

Wearily the time passed by. The doctor came and went, leaving little consolation behind him. The old man, worn out with grief and anxiety, slumbered heavily in his chair.

Bella felt she could hardly have gone through that night without Frank. She scarcely knew her ardent, impetuous lover in him who sat by her side, so strong, yet so gentle, quick to anticipate her slightest wish, and ministering to her and Archie with the tenderness of a woman.

"Can't you close your eyes a few moments?" he whispered once. "I know just what to do now, and you look so exhausted."

"No, oh no," said Bella, resolutely; and he urged her no farther.

Midnight was approaching, and a great hush fell upon them both, for the doctor had said there might be a change at that hour. Bella sat, her eyes fixed on the child, never stirring except to give him his medicine or the stimulants the physician had ordered. Frank, motionless as a statue, watched the little face with her.

At last Bella raised her eyes inquiringly to his. There was a gleam of hope in her look and in the one that answered her.

"His breathing seems a little easier," she whispered. Frank nodded silently, and there was another long pause.

A gentle moisture was breaking out over the child's face and body; his breathing seemed easier and his expression more natural. Frank and Bella hung above him, scarcely daring to indulge the sweet hope that had sprung up in their hearts.

About 3 o'clock the doctor came in. His tired, jaded face brightened the moment he saw the child.

"Yes, he seems better," said he; "but we mustn't venture to hope yet. Now let us look at the little throat again."

"His throat looks better," said he, as he rose to go.

Bella followed him to the door. "The symptoms are favorable," said he, in answer to her imploring glance. "I will call in again before noon."

Bella turned to go back to her seat. As she did so she met Frank's anxious, loving glance. It was almost more than she could bear.

"Oh, Frank," she said, "if God will only let him live!" and for the first time the tears fell over her cheeks. Frank put his arm gently around her, and she laid her head on his shoulder. They felt from that moment that nothing could ever part them more.

Once more let us enter the little chamber. The blinds are open now, and the sunset light is streaming in. Archie lies in his crib, looking like a little spirit, his mother thinks with half a sob, as she watches his pale, wasted face, with its halo of gleaming hair. But he is gaining strength daily, and will soon be running round, the doctor says.

Closing the blinds, his mother takes a chair beside him, and sings in a low, gentle voice. In a few minutes he is fast asleep, and she slips away for a while. She knows who is waiting for her below.

"Bella," said Frank, after they had talked a few moments, "I received a letter to-day. Guess from whom."

"I'm sure I don't know," said Bella. She was setting the supper table, and paused with a half-startled glance. "From your mother, Frank?"

"You little coward, how pale you've turned all of a sudden! But you've no reason. I was a true prophet, I tell you," shaking the letter playfully at her. "I have told her the whole story, and she is prepared to love you and receive you as a daughter. Is that table ready? Then sit down by me, and we'll read the letter together. You'll find out what a warm, loving heart my mother has, you little infidel, you!"

"And what shall we call the firm now?" asked Uncle Joe, as the happy little party sat down to the table. "It's admitted a new member, you know," he went on, roguishly. "Come, I'll give you a name; one it'll bear before long, and we'll drink to the health of the firm in this bottle of wine."

"Uncle!" said Bella, laughing and blushing, while his old wife beamed indulgently upon him from the arm-chair where Frank's strong arms had placed her.

"Bella, baby, and husband!" said Uncle Joe, rising with a beaming face, though something like a tear twinkled in his eye. "Long life and prosperity to the firm, and may God's blessing be on it for evermore!"—Harper's Bazar.

Thousands of Affidavits.

Many having used "patent" and prepared medicines and failed in finding the relief promised, are thereby prejudiced against all medicines. Is this right? Would you condemn all physicians because one failed in giving the relief promised? Some go to California in search of gold, and, after working hard for months and finding none, return home and say there is no gold there. Does that prove it? Many suffering with Catarrh and pulmonary affections have used the worthless preparations that crowd the market, and in their disappointment say there is no cure for Catarrh. Does that prove it? Does it not rather prove that they have failed to employ the proper remedy? There are thousands of people in the United States who can make an affidavit that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery have effected their entire cure. Many had lost all sense of smell for months, and pieces of bone had repeatedly been removed from the nasal cavities.

Irreconcilable Conditions.

Debility and health are irreconcilable conditions. Weakly people, that is to say, people who lack the vitality requisite for a vigorous discharge of each and all of the bodily functions, are invariably afflicted with some, though it may be a trifling, disorder of the system. Atony, or a want of nervous and muscular vigor, is accompanied by poverty of the blood and the [illegible]. A certain way to overcome it and prevent the aggravated maladies to which it must ultimately lead is to use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which promote digestion and assimilation of the food, and thus are the means of furnishing the body with a supply of blood of a quality essential to its proper nourishment. Invigoration through the instrumentality of the matchless tonic protects the feeble from a host of bodily ills which lurk in ambush for the debilitated. The Bitters are an article which it is most desirable to keep constantly on hand.

Five Thousand Books Given Away for the Asking.

While Dr. H. James was attached to the British Medical Staff in the East Indies, his high position enabled him to call about him the best chemists, physicians and scientists of the day, and while experimenting with and among the natives, he accidentally made the discovery that CONSUMPTION can be positively and permanently CURED. During the many years of his sojourn there, he devoted his time to the treatment of Lung Diseases, and upon his retirement he left with us books and papers containing full particulars, showing that every one can be his own physician and prepare his own medicine, and such information as we have received we now offer to the public without price, only asking that each remit a three-cent stamp for postage. Address CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa.

COLGATE & Co.'s Cashmere Bouquet Soap has acquired a popularity hitherto unequaled by any Toilet Soap of home or foreign manufacture. A reputation begun early in the century made it easy for this house to impress the public. The peculiar fascinations of this luxurious article are the novelty and exceptional strength of its perfume.

Trouble in the Household.

We would advise every one interested not to buy Yeast or Baking Powder, loose or in bulk. They are usually made by unskillful persons, and have frequently proven totally unfit for use. There is no guarantee or responsibility attached to loose powder. DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER is always put up in cans, warranted full weight, and absolutely pure.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

Remove the covering over strawberry plants, especially if it be thick, as it may pack and smother the plants.

Potatoes which are to be planted had better be cut a few days before and placed so the cut part can be dried before planting.

In laying out the garden devote no more to flowers than you intend to take care of and to do it well and scientifically. And if you do not know what that means let the flowers alone and devote the space to potatoes and onions.

The editor of the Hamilton Freeman recommends the following list of apple trees as being valuable fruit, and reliably hardy, to-wit: Wealthy, Duchess of Oldenburg, Willow Twig, Fameuse, Talman Sweet, Ben Davis and Red Astrachan.

Harrowing Wheat.—It is a good plan, both for the wheat and the catch of clover seed, to harrow wheat in the spring. Select some day when the ground is dry enough to pulverize freely, and, if possible, just before a rain. Where wheat has been drilled in a common, heavy drag will only break down the ridges between the rows and cover exposed roots.

Top Dressing for Grass Lands.—A top dressing of clay on a light loamy soil will render it much more productive, and its beneficial effects will soon be observed. A top dressing of swamp mud, after it has been exposed to the atmosphere for a time, is equal to the best manure for grass crops. Sand spread over a clay soil, or on swamp muck, constitutes an excellent fertilizer, and its application to such land is a permanent benefit.

Bone Spavin Cure.—Muriatic acid, eight ounces, pulverized cantharides, one ounce. Fill a drachm vial about one-third full with the medicine, and, after greasing below the lump with lard or oil, apply it upon the lump, covering a space the size of a five-cent piece. Apply it once every day for four days, then keep the sore well greased with lard or oil until it heals up. If one course of this treatment fails to cure, apply the medicine as before; the second never fails.

Farm Labor and Profit.—Col. Scott, in the last Producer, wisely attempts to inform the public what a farmer sells when he disposes of a load of corn at a railroad station. He has marketed thirty bushels of corn, for which he gets $7.50. With it he has sold one day's labor of himself and team, hauling it to market, and another day with the same force gathering and cribbing it. Behind this is the preparation of the ground, the rent of an acre, the seed and planting, cultivation, interest, taxes, wear and tear of tools, risks and failures from floods, droughts, and careless culture. Besides all these, he is selling in that load of corn the cream of his land, which is probably already mortgaged to some other man; and, above all, he is selling his independence as a farmer. These are some of the things a man sells for the paltry sum of $7.50.

Jerseys and Alderneys.—There is constantly a difficulty in the minds of the mass of the people relative to the above-named breeds of cattle. The editor of the Country Gentleman defines the matter as follows, which is plain and easily understood: "The Jerseys are the cattle of the island of Jersey; are quite uniform in size and deer-like appearance, and are rather small. The Alderneys are from the island of that name, and are said to be a cross between the Jerseys and the coarser Guernseys. They are therefore uneven in size, coarser, and more broken in coloring, often having considerable white, red or brown, which colors are bred out of the Jerseys as far as possible. Both breeds are noted for rich milk, and golden butter—the Guernsey cross increasing this quality in the Alderney. In this country, however, the two names have been used indiscriminately for precisely the same animal, and the number of 'Alderney' cattle, strictly speaking, that have ever been imported is very small indeed!"

Sheep Washing.—Washing sheep previous to shearing, or leaving them unwashed, is a question that, like deep or shallow plowing and thick or thin seeding, has caused much difference of opinion among farmers. It is probable that the most profit will be found to result from carefully washing sheep and putting up the wool carefully without the slightest attempt at deception of any kind. By a little attention to the destruction of burdocks and similar weeds in sheep pastures the fleece will not be disfigured by burs. Sheep should be carefully tagged before being let out to grass in the spring. This is indispensable in the management of breeding ewes, and is necessary for all other sheep. Shearing time affords an excellent opportunity for "drafting" or "culling" sheep—removing all those that are in any way unprofitable, and filling up their places with better stock. Weakness of constitution, predisposition to disease, wildness, barrenness, the production of inferior wool, etc., are among the causes which render culling out of the flock necessary.

Around the House.

French Loaf Cake.—One pound of flour, one pound of sugar, one pound of raisins, half a pound of butter, one cup of new milk, five eggs, and spice to suit.

To Pot Fish.—Cut up choice pieces of fish, season with pepper, salt and clover; put them into a dish; cover closely; bake one hour. When cold press them into the pot and cover well with butter, etc.

Cure for Chapped Hands.—One part of glycerine, four of Pond's Extract, or witch hazel, four of water; put in a bottle and shake well; it is ready for use immediately; it is well to shake thoroughly each time of using.

Graham Tea-Cake.—One cup sugar, two eggs, beaten together, one cup sour cream, two-thirds teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful salt, two slightly heaped cups Graham flour, one teaspoonful lemon extract or half a nutmeg. Bake in a moderate oven.

Lamps become incrusted inside with settlings from the oil, and ordinary washing will not remove them. Take soap-suds and fill the lamp about one-third full; then put in a little sharp sand, and shake vigorously. A few minutes will remove every particle.

To Fry Eels.—Skin, empty and wash the eels as clean as possible; cut them into short pieces and dry them in a cloth; season with salt and pepper, flour them thickly and fry them a fine brown in boiling lard; drain the eels and send them to the table with melted butter and a lemon.

Fish Pudding.—Take cold boiled fish and mashed potatoes, an equal quantity; mix well together, breaking the fish very fine; add two ounces of melted butter; season with salt and pepper. Butter a pudding-dish, put the mixture in, and bake in a moderate oven until the top is nicely browned.

To Keep Green Vegetables.—Green vegetables must be kept on damp stones, covered over with a damp cloth. Beetroots, parsnips, carrots and potatoes are best kept in dry sand during the winter. Never wash them till they are wanted for use. Onions should be tied up in bunches, and hung up. Take and bury parsley in a jar during the winter, or dry it by hanging it up in a warm room.

To Cook Onions.—Put them into salted boiling water, with a little milk added, and boil them until tender. Then put them into a baking-pan with a little pepper, salt and butter thrown over them, and a little of the water in which they were boiled in the bottom of the pan. Brown them in the oven and serve hot.

Burns.—For this class of difficulties, white-lead paint seems to meet the indications of treatment as satisfactorily as any material which has been employed. This is interesting, from the fact that almost every plan of treatment which has ever been devised has been employed, and the leaning is toward the paint dressing. Mix as for painting, except considerably thicker, and apply with a brush.

Cleaning Walls.—Walls that have been whitewashed and need cleaning can be much improved in looks by passing a soft brush broom back and forth over the surface of the wall. To clean wall paper—tie a small bag of bran over the brush end of a broom and pass it up and down over the wall. Shake up the contents of the bag occasionally and remove the dust from the bag by brushing with a small brush broom.

Lovers of house plants will be sorry to learn that the oleander is a dangerous plant. But so it is. Children have been poisoned by eating the flower petals; cattle have been killed by browsing on the foliage; a single drop, it is said, of the milky, acrid juice that exudes when a twig or leaf is broken off is sufficient to produce the death of an infant. The odor exhaled from the blossoms is also deleterious to the health.

English Ambassadors frequently suffer for the necessities of life, through the contemptible salaries allowed them. Lord Lyons, as British Ambassador to France, has a salary of $50,000. The British Ambassadors to Germany and to Rome have each a salary of $35,000, and the latter receives an allowance for rent of $6,000. The Ambassador at Vienna gets $40,000, and the one at St. Petersburg $39,000. Sir Henry Elliott had, at Constantinople, $40,000, and Sir Edward Thornton entertains at Washington on a salary of $30,000.

A Fearful Death.

A special from Conyers, Ga., states that the jail at that place was burned today and three negro prisoners perished in the flames. The door to the jail was on the second floor, the first story being a solid dungeon which opened from the top by a trap door. Before the fire was discovered it had burned away the steps and cut off all communication with the prisoners. There was no engine in the town, and the fire had its own way. The heat was so intense that it was impossible to approach the building. At length an axe was forced through an aperture to the prisoners, and they commenced to cut through the heavy logs that made the dungeon walls. The flames, however, swept downward rapidly, and soon burned through the upper floor and sent a shower of embers and lurid blaze on the wretched men below. In this horrid illumination they could be plainly seen by the crowd outside. Crazed with pain and fear they capered about like mad men, dashing themselves against the walls and screaming in the most fearful manner. Their attempts to cut through the walls, while furious, had no intelligent direction. They hacked about wildly, frequently fighting like brutes for the possession of the ax. At length the whole upper floor gave way, and the three wretched men, clutching the outer logs, stretched their hands to the crowd outside and were lost in a blinding sheet of flame.

The prisoners talked with the crowd during the progress of the fire, and said they had heard a match struck up stairs an hour before the fire was visible and supposed it was the jailer. It was certainly incendiary, and is believed to have been done by friends of the prisoners. It commenced at the door on the second story. The prisoners were put in jail just a day and a half before the fire occurred, and were sentenced to a few years each in the penitentiary.—Atlanta (Ga.) dispatch to New York Herald.

Hoarded Wealth.

The Bank of France has had in its vaults during the past year the largest sum of gold and silver money, probably, that was ever collected in one place. It exceeded at times 2,200,000,000 francs, or $440,000,000.

This would be more than enough to redeem every greenback and every piece of fractional currency in this country, and leave a balance of $50,000,000 after our paper money debt had been wiped out. But perhaps the vastness of the sum will be better understood if we say that, if it were all gold coin, it would weigh more than 312,900 pounds, avoirdupois, or more than 156 tons.

As a matter of fact, about one-third of the money is silver. A French silver five-franc piece weighs fifteen and one-half times as much as a gold piece of the same value. So it follows that the weight of coin in the bank vaults has exceeded 1,825,000 pounds, or more than 900 tons.

A Sunday-school boy gave his teacher this illustrative definition of "responsibility:" "Boys has two buttons for their s'penders so's to keep their pants up. When one button comes off, why there's a good deal of responsibility on the other button."

Where the Benders Are.

The Bender family, found as often as Charlie Ross, and last found at Alma, Ark., proves to be the Keafer family of Wisconsin. It is rather curious that all of the discoveries should have created so lively an interest everywhere except among the folk whom we might think most concerned in the capture and bringing to justice of the murderers. It is just four years since the almost incredible crimes of Cherry Vale, Kan., were made public, and three since the authorities of Utah captured in the Wahsatch mountains a family fully identified as the Benders, whose head, indeed, confessed that he was John Bender, and gave a thrilling description of his deeds of blood, which subsequently proved to be wholly imaginary. The Benders lived, as we have just said, at Cherry Vale, in Labette county, Kan., and in May, 1873, were said to have fled to Texas or Mexico because of the disappearance of Mr. Yorke, brother of Colonel A. M. Yorke, whose dramatic exposure in the Kansas Legislature of Senator Pomeroy's attempt to bribe him with a $7,000 package of bills made such a sensation at the time, and ended in the return of Mr. Ingalls. Their house proved a literal shambles, as in it were found the corpses of five men and a child, all of whom had been destroyed in the same manner, being first knocked on the head with a hammer or mallet, and having their throats cut while insensible. How many strangers Bender and his wife and his daughter Kate had induced to partake of their hospitality and then done to death must ever remain a secret. About a week after the disclosures a confederate of the family, one Nicholas Marion, was captured in Indian Territory. He promised to make important disclosures affecting the gang, but committed suicide while he was being conducted homewards. Since then innumerable Benders have been discovered in the far West, but curiously enough the relatives of their victims have taken no interest in them. The most reasonable solution of this is to be found in the belief that is almost universally maintained in the vicinity of Cherry Vale that the father, mother and daughter were captured by the Vigilantes, brought back with all secrecy and drowned by night in the pond near their house which probably had received the corpses of many of their victims. We do not know that this theory has ever been made public, but are moved now to publish it as explaining what would otherwise appear unaccountable. If it is correct, one awful mystery will have been avenged by another mystery as awful.—New York World.

National Bankruptcy.

M. De Girardin has recently prepared an essay, entitled "The Question of Money," in which he takes the ground that all existing Governments, except those of England and America, are hurrying into bankruptcy, and he finds the principal cause in the immense amount of money spent upon their respective armies. The statistics which he furnishes are very interesting. The six powers of Europe spend $500,000,000 annually upon their armies. He calculates in detail that England's military expenditure per annum is $53,256,160, each soldier costing over $503. France spends $112,913,298, each soldier costing over $254. The total cost of the Russian army per annum is $137,034,935, or $238 per man. The cost of the German army is $92,764,603, or $225 per man. Italy pays less than $181 a head, the total cost being $37,176,686. The Austrian army is the cheapest of all. Each man costs $174.30, which, for an army of 273,800, gives a total of $47,705,914. Adding to these sums the annual amounts expended for naval armaments, which amount to $60,000,000 for England, $35,000,000 for France, $24,000,000 for Russia, $7,500,000 apiece for Germany and Italy, and $5,000,000 for Austria, and the sum total expended upon the military camp of Europe foots up $635,000,000!

The Growth of San Francisco.

The new San Francisco Directory, just published, contains 100,850 names, which, estimating that each name represents three in population, would give the population of the city at 302,550. Of this number 22,000 are Chinese, and the increase in population during the past year has been about 11 per cent. There were 1,600 new buildings erected during the past year, thirty-three of which cost $8,500,000. The aggregate amount expended for improvements during the year, including parks, streets, etc., was $10,000,000. There are now 27,000 buildings comprised within the city limits, of which 4,390 are brick. The postoffice delivered last year 455,846 letters, and received 5,452,838 letters, and 800,000 postal cards were collected, and 850,000 delivered. The average daily attendance on the public schools last year were 22,761, an increase over the previous year of 2,901, while 34,029 scholars are enrolled in all the schools. The total expense of maintaining these schools was $867,754, an increase of $160,309 over the previous year, and the estimate for the ensuing year is placed at $870,000. The total value of school property is $2,505,500.

Death in Life.

The most strange occurrence of the time is the death-in-life of Miss Annie Goodale, the actress. It has not yet been mentioned in any of the newspapers. She died three weeks ago. Up to yesterday she was not buried. The corpse is warm and limp, and the features as soft and mobile as when in life. Several doctors have examined her, and have ordered that the body shall be watched night and day. The poor lady is evidently in a trance, but whether she is destined to come to life it is impossible to say. Not long ago a General in France lay in a similar condition for three months, after which time decomposition set in, with every other indication of death, and without any token of life all the time save the warmth and flexibility of the body. It is an awful thing to contemplate the possibility that Miss Goodale is at this moment conscious of all that is passing around her, without the power to communicate with her sorrowing friends, for such consciousness is not uncommon in some conditions of catalepsy, which paralyzes the body and suspends volition, but leaves the senses untrammeled. Many an unfortunate person has been buried alive in this condition.—London Letter.

READ CAREFULLY.—If you prefer as a Premium our $7.00 CASTOR, or $5.00 set of SIX FORKS, we will furnish you with the Castor on receipt of $1.50, and the Forks upon receipt of $1.00; this includes the cost of packing, boxing, postage, and express charges; or we will furnish you any of the other goods named on same terms. Thus delivering to you the goods free of any expense, as a Premium, at cost of packing and express charges, etc.

PREMIUM SILVER ORDER.

Premium Silverware: Warranted Extra Silver Plate.

To the Eagle Gold and Silver Plating Co., Cincinnati, O.: This is to certify that I am a subscriber of the paper from which I have cut this Order, and am entitled, under your premium arrangement, to a full set of extra-plated Silver Spoons, with my initials engraved thereon, or other Silverware which I may order herewith. I inclose herewith 75 cents, to pay express, packing, boxing, and engraving charges.

On receipt of this Order, we hereby agree to return to the sender, express or mailing charges prepaid in full, a full set of six of our extra-plated Silver Spoons, with the initials of the sender, or any other initials desired, engraved thereon, or our $7.00 Castor on receipt of $1.50.

This Order will be honored by us for ninety days from the date of this paper, after which it will be null and void. [Signed] Eagle Gold and Silver Plating Co., Cincinnati, O.

At no time in the history of manufactures has Silver Plated Ware attained so high a perfection as at the present day. These goods, in appearance and for practical use, are as good as solid Silverware, and much preferred by many families. This offer can not long be held open. Those who desire them are urged to immediately send and secure to themselves the immense advantages offered by this company for securing the best Silver Plated Ware yet offered on such favorable terms. Address all orders to Eagle Gold and Silver Plating Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

FOR NINETY DAYS FROM THE DATE OF THIS ISSUE OF THIS PAPER

Elegant Table Silverware

Can be secured by all who receive a copy of this week's paper, on compliance with the following conditions:

JAMES B. DREW & CO., No. 250 West Fourth St., Cincinnati, Ohio,

Manufacturers of Pure Coin-Standard Silver-Plated Ware, will send to any one entitled to receive the same a SET OF DOUBLE EXTRA-PLATED SILVER SPOONS. You are required to cut out the following Silverware Coupon, and send it to the above Company, with your name and address, as a guarantee that the order comes through this paper. You are also required to inclose with your order the nominal charge of 50 cents, to pay cost of packing, boxing and express charges. The Spoons will be sent by express (or mail, if you have no express office), and delivered in your hands without further cost. As the 50 cents barely covers carrying and boxing charges, the Spoons will cost you nothing. These Spoons are guaranteed to be of the best material, and sold at retail at from $3.00 to $4.00 per set, as the following letter from James B. Drew & Co. will testify:

Office of James B. Drew & Co., 250 West Fourth St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

To Whom it May Concern.—The Spoons sent out under this arrangement we guarantee are of best quality, first heavily plated with pure nickel (the hardest white metal known), and a double-extra plate of pure Coin Standard Silver added on top of the nickel, thus rendering them the very best Silver-Plated Ware manufactured. In no case will they be sold at retail by us, and cannot be secured from general dealers for less than $2.50 to $4.00 per set. Our lowest wholesale price is $60 per gross (twelve dozen). We will honor no order which does not contain the Silverware Coupon, and we will not honor the Coupon after ninety days from the date of this paper.

(Signed) JAMES B. DREW & CO.

SILVERWARE COUPON.

On receipt of this Coupon, together with 50c. to cover express or mailing and boxing charges, we hereby agree to send to any address a set of our Pure Coin-Standard double-extra plated

SILVER SPOONS.

All charges are to be prepaid by the 50c. sent in, and the Spoons will be delivered at destination free of any other charge.

Good for ninety days from date of this paper, after which this Coupon is null and void.

(Signed) JAMES B. DREW & CO., 250 W. Fourth St., Cincinnati, O.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

By the terms of this contract this liberal arrangement holds good for only ninety days from the date of this paper; therefore it is to the interest of all who are entitled to its benefits to see to it that they are not debarred by reason of the expiration of the time specified. All letters ordering Silverware should be addressed direct to JAMES B. DREW & CO., 250 W. 4th St., Cincinnati, O.

Scarcity of Money.

There is no doubt but the present condition of all kinds of business and industry is fearfully depressed, and it behooved every family to look carefully to their expenses. Spring is coming on when children are liable to Croup, Whooping Cough, etc. Coughs and Colds will prevail everywhere, and Consumption, with other throat and lung diseases, will carry off many.—These diseases should not be neglected. Doctor's bills are expensive, and we would advise our people to use Boschee's German Syrup. It never has failed One bottle at 75 cents will keep your whole family well during the winter. Two doses will relieve any case. Sold in all towns in the United States, and by your druggist F. E. Davenport.

In the Sweet By-and-By.

Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touaist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine " It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. With the Tourists, the San Juan Guide keeps fitting company, and the two publications are mailed free to all writing for one or both to T. J. Anderson, Topka K.

A New Game.

[Virginia Chronicle.]

A man came into a restaurant last night, and mounting a high stool leaned over the counter and ordered a porterhouse steak with eggs on the side, and some ale and oysters to begin on. In about half an hour he had finished his repast and was beginning to deliberate on what kind of desert he would wind up on, when a man walked in, and tapping him on the shoulder, remarked:

"Is your name Billy Hicks?"

"Yes, that's my name," said the man on the stool, as his hand stole down to his hip pocket, fumbling for the handle of a barker; "what do you want?"

"We had a little troube once before in White Pine, and now I guess I've got you dead to rights," continued the new comer, pulling out a large sized six-shooter.

"If you'll just step into the street and pace off your distance. I'm your man, said the feeder, who had just finished his pie, and whipping out a revolver, he sprang off his perch and rushed after the other into the street.

The frightened restaurant man got down behind the counter and bent his ear to listen to the shots and the rush of the mob; but he didn't hear anything unusual, and in about five minutes he recollected that there was $2.50 owing on the meal. Then he went out on the sidewalk to investigate.

"Was there a row out there a few minutes ago?" he inquired of a star-gazer on the sidewalk.

"Didn't see any, I've been here for the last half hour or so."

"See two fellows with ulsters and revolvers come out?"

"Yes, they was talkin' about swappin' guns, and there're over acros the way now, takin' a drink."

The restaurant man went back to clear up the dirty dishes.

OAKEY HALL'S MAGNANIMITY.

[From the Sun.]

In one of the last cases he tried he represented a widow whose husband had been killed by carelessness. The defendant was represented by a man eminent in his profession. The defence proved by an employe that all that could be done to insure safety was done. He was a fine-looking man, and his story had weight with the jury Oakey felt that the witness was hurting him, so he questioned him, and asked him if he had ever been convicted of a felony. He said "No." "Are you certain?" "Yes, sir." "Were you never arrested?" "Yes, I was arrested for hitting a man, but the Judge let me off. Meanwhile Oakey sent to the records and secured a transcript of the man's trial and conviction of a felonious assault, sentence being suspended. He showed it to the opposing lawyer, and that gentleman at once saw the force of it. They agreed that a verdict must be given for Hall in any event, and it was only a question of how much. Oakey paused for a moment, put the paper into his pocket, leaned on his hand awhile, and then turning to the other lawyer, said: "Brother——, I don't think this witness has done me so much harm that I can't win my case. With this, of course, I would win, but it would ruin him. He seems to be a well-meaning man; he has a family, and stands well with his employers. He probably thought he told the truth when he said the Judge let him off. I can't bear to use this. His employers would doubtless discharge him, and his companions would twit him. I'll put it in my pocket."

And he did.

How Far Will a Greenback Go.

Mr. Brown kept boarders. Around his table sat Mr. Brown, Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Andrews, the village milliner, Mr. Black, the baker, Mr. Jordan, a carpenter and Hadley, a flour, feed and lumber merchant.

Mr. Brown took out of his pocket book a ten dollar note, and handed it to Mrs. Brown, saying:

"Here, my dear, are the ten dollars toward the twenty I promised you."

Mrs Brown handed it to Mrs. Andrews, the milliner, saying:

"That pays for my new bonnet."

Mrs. Andrews said to Mr. Jordan, as she handed him the note:

"That will pay you for your work on my counter.

Mr. Jordan handed it to Mr. Hadley, the flour, feed and lumber merchant, requesting his lumber bill.

Mr. Hadley gave the note back to Mr. Brown, saying:

"That pays ten dollars on board."

Mr. Brown passed it to his wife, with the remark, that, that paid her twenty dollars he had promised. She in turn paid it to Mr. Black, to settle her bread and pastry account, who handed it to Mr. Hadley, wishing credit for the amount on his flour bill, he again returned it to Mr. Brown with the remark that it settled for that month's board. Whereupon Mr. Brown put it back into his pocket-book, exclaiming that he "never thought a ten dollar bill would go so far.

Thus a ten dollar greenback was made to pay ninety dollars indebtedness inside of five minutes. Who says greenbacks are worthless.

Danbury New: One of our Danbury lawyers was in his office Saturday reading the political news from Cincinnati, when a visitor entered. The new comer was a cadaverous person in dilapidated attire.

"Well, what do you want?" inquired the legal gent, in a testy tone.

"I would like to borrow a quarter from you to get something to eat," said the visitor, in a sepulchral voice

"I've got no money to throw away on tramps."

"Tramp!" exclaimed the stranger indignantly. „I ain't no tramp. Perhaps you do not know who I am?"

"No, I don't, and I don't care."

"You don't care, eh? Let me tell you sir, that the party you address is not the party you think you address"

"Ah!" said the lawyer, derisively.

"No, sir," said the stranger. "I am the man," he added, drawing himself up with impressive dignity, "who first nominated Mr. Hayes for the Presidency."

The words were scarcely out of his mouth when he became aware of being seized by the collar, turned around, and propelled out of the room by vigorous kicks, while an indignant voice was shouting in his ear:

"Oh, you are the scoundrel that did the infernal act, are you? Take that, and that, and THAT!"

Picking himself up at the foot of the stairs, the stranger was heard to gloomily soliloquize:

"Yes, they told me that old rooster was a red-hot Republican, the cussed liars."

The Delinquent Colored Witness.

[From the Virginia Chronicle.]

Yestefday an old negro who had been subpœnaed in the case of Rice, who was on trial for murder, did not put in an appearance at the appointed time, and an officer was sent after him. In about three hours the old fellow was brought into court, and his comical appearance caused a smile to spread over the audience. He looked for all the world like a Louisana Returning Board struck by lightning. He was brought up to the rail, and holding his hat in his hand, stood trembling from head to foot.

The Court—Can you give any explanation of your absence from this court-room?

Witness—'Fore God, Judge, I didn't git no su-pe-nys.

The Court—Did not the Sheriff serve the papes?

Witness—Well, ye see, Judge, whenebber I'se been su-pe-nyed deyallers gib me a paper. Dis time de Sheriff reads de paper, but didn't gib it up. Guess I knows de law on su-pe-nyas.

The Court—The law does not require the subpœna to be delivered.

Witness—'Fore de Lord, Judge, I s'posed it did. Nebber ment no disrespect for de court. Down in Louisiana de sheriff always handed me de su-pe-nya pussonally. 'Fore de Lord, Judge, I'm tellin' you de truff.

The Court—Wh atwere you doing all this time?

Witness—Judge, I wouldn't tell ye a lie for twenty dollars. I was playin' poker. I had four queens wid de ace high and sixteen dollars in de pot. I was jus' agoin' to quit when de Sheriff come in. 'Fore de Lord, Judge, I was jus' thinkin' about comin' up.

A general laugh went up, the Judge's face relaxed into a smile, and after giving the witness a sharp reprimand he let him off without the fine.

LUXURY ON THE RAIL.

The Difference.

We have been frequently asked; What is the difference between a railroad dining car and a Pulman Hotel car? That there is a vast difference is well known by those who have occasion to use either; But the untraveled public are not fully advised as to the points of difference. The old-fashioned railroad eating-house is, alas! too well known its peculiar, hastily-eaten meals have been partaken of by too many thousands to be forgotten. The dining car, then, is the well known eating-house placed on wheels, attached to the train at the usual meal hours, and hauled along for thirty, forty or sixty miles, until the meal has been served, when it is set off on a side-track, and is by the next train hauled back to its starting point, and so it runs a few miles for each meal. To get meals in this car the passenger has to work his way through the train while it is under full motion—pass from car to car, running the risk of falling between the platforms, and finally finding the car at the rear of the train Then comes the meal which must be hurried through with to give chance for other hungry passengers to take your place, and you must force your way back to your seat, and again run the risk of your platform passage while the train is at full speed. In such cars you pay seventy-five cents for each meal, even if you take or need only a cup of coffee and a cracker. Bear in mind, in no case do the dining cars accompany the train from starting point to destination. They are always "cut off" and taken on as we have described, With the Pullman Hotel car the case is different in every respect. These cars are sixty to sixty-six feet long, have sixteen wheels under each, are built strong, so as to insure steady, quiet running, without the usual unpleasant side motion Each Hotel car contains, in the order named the following compartments:

1st. A cosy, neat and clean little kitchen, fitted up with a range, an ice and meat box, rows of shelves covered with bright silver and brighter glass ware, and all the appliances needed for preparing a sumptuous meal.

2nd. A compact China and glass closet,, in which is kept the table ware and table linen, cutlery, etc.

3d A passage way, cutting off the kitchen and China closet from the rest of the car, and forming an air-chamber to prevent the smell of the cooking victuals from reaching the saloon portion of the car.

4th. The grand saloon. This is fitted up with twelve, fourteen or sixteen sections, with space for tables between each, and in these the meals are served. You while on this car, own the space you occupy as much as you do your own room at home, and no one can hurry you while at meals nor are you forced to give it up to allow any other person to occupy it. At night, as if by magic, this saloon is changed into a boudoir, and here your couch is prepared, and here you rest yourself isolated, and as separated from your fellow-travelers as you would be in your own bed-chamber.

5th. An elegant drawing-room, with room for six or eight persons. This is found alone in these magnificent cars. In it you and your family or party of friends may be as secluded as you please, or you can slide open the end and have the company of those in the grand saloon.

6th. Charmingly-arranged lavatories are partitioned off, and arranged in two distinct compartments for the separate use of of ladies and gentlemen. These lavatories are supplied with pure water, clean towls, combs, brushes, and, in fact, everything the most dainty may desire for the perfect performance of an elaborate toilet.

7th. Then follow conductor's and porters' rooms, linen closets, etc., etc.

It will thus be seen that this car is, as its name implies, a perfect modern hotel, with all of its appliances and comforts complete. This car is taken on at the commencement of the journey, and is part of the train to its destination. In it you get your sleeping compartments and your meal accommodations, while neither encroach upon the other. Envious dining-car employes, who are paid to decry this form of Hotel car, cannot, with anything like truth on their side, give any valid or conclusive reasons for preferring the dining to the Hotel car, and they only chatter in favor of their dining car because they are paid to do so. These Hotel cars have run from New York to San Francisco and back with the Emperor Dom Pedro—with Jarrett & Palmer's party, that traveled at almost lightning speed—with many a party of California bonanza kings; and all join in pledging their honor that the cars are incomparable.

Two lines of these celebrated cars run between New York and Chicago, and one line only between Chicago and Omaha. It may be needless to say that this last-named line runs over the steel track of the Chicago & North-Western Railway. That these cars are attracting a large share of the California travel, both ways, might easily be conjectured. Any road deserves to be patroized that is enterprising enough to give the traveling public such facilities as are freely tendered by the Chicago & North-Westest Railway on its California line.

We have neglected to say that, in these Hotel cars, the meals are a la carte—you pay for what you get and nothing more; and this at very reasonable rates.

Grumblers.

We always respect a good square grumbler, one of the generous kind who grumbles for himself and for his neighbors. One of them lives ten miles from this city in a locality where the COURIER has an extensive circulation. His name is Jack —— and his farm adjoins James —— who is a subscriber to the COURIER. Jack called on James, last Wednesday, for the paper.

"Where's the COURIER, Jim?'

"It didn't come to-day, Jack.'

"Didn't come? That makes twice it's missed. I'll give them printers a lecture when I go to town.'

"All right, Jack. Give them a good talking to. Tell them you can't stand it.'

"Bet your boots, Jim. I don't want to be annoyed in this way; it's too provoking.'

Jack is a lean, sallow looking fever and ague subject, six feet three inches in height, with sandy whiskers, long hair and an immense nose. He came into the office yesterday, and confronted us

"Hello stranger do you run this machine?'

"No sir; the boys runs the machine.

"Who sends out the papers after they're printed? He's the man I want to see.'

"He's gone to dinner, sir. I'll attend to your business.'

"All right. Now you just tell me why the paper don't come to our town every Wednesday.'

"Go and ask your venerable uncle. It's mailed every Tuesday evening.'

'My uncle has nothing to do with it. He lives in Kokomo.'

"Your Uncle Sam, I mean, sir. The paper is mailed regularly. If you don't get it, the trouble is with the Postoffice Department.

"It missed twice, and I dont like to be annoyed that way.'

I'm exceedingly sorry, sir. All I can do is to go over to the postoffice and blow the boys up.'

"That's the checker. Blow 'em up. If you want any help I'll go with you. I'm tolerable good at it myself.'

"You're very kind, sir, but I'll talk to them alone. Two at a time might wound their feelings. They're a little sensitive.'

"Their feelings ought to be hurt, sir. I can't stand the annoyance any longer.'

"Possibly your name has been dropped from the list by accident.'

"Dropped from the list?'

"Yes, sir.'

"What does that have to do with it?'

"If your name has been dropped, the paper wouldn't be sent to you.'

"My name was never on the list.'

"I thought you were complaining because your paper didn't reach you regularly?'

"No, sir; I don't take the paper. I borrow Jim ——'s copy, and I'm reading it every week, so I'm just as much interested as a subscriber would be.'

"Yes, I see. Jim is tired lending it to you before he reads it himself. He's too selfish to live in a civilized community. He's a fit subject for the Bogardus kicker. Go straight home and tell him you've got the dead-wood on him. Tell him he needn't try to shift the blame on the COURIER office or the postoffice. He alone is responsible for the outrage.'

"Thank you, stranger. I'll go and give him a piece of my mind that'll last him a while, or my name aint Jack

"That's right, Jack. Give him a good drubbing. A man that will insist on reading his paper before he lends it to a neighbor is destitute of all those qualities of head and heart that characterize a gentlemanly Democrat. He shouldn't be tolerated in respectable society. He ought to apply for a foreign appointment at once.'

"Your head is mighty level, stranger. I'll tell him all the hard things I can think of, and if he puts on any scollops I'll get some other neighbor to subscribe for your paper, and I'll quit patronizing Jim.'

The Oliver chilled South Bend plow has an even chill on all parts of the mould board and is not chilled in spots and are warranted to draw in all kind of soil.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, MAY 3, 1877.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

LOUISIANA.

IT having been finally determined, at a meeting of President Hayes' Cabinet, on the 20th of April, to withdraw the Federal troops from the vicinity of the building used as a State House in New Orleans, the President on that day sent the following letter to Secretary McCrary:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, April 20, 1877.

SIR: Prior to my entering upon the duties of the Presidency, there had been stationed, by order of my predecessor, in the immediate vicinity of the building used as the State House in New Orleans, La., and known as Mechanics' Institute, a detachment of United States infantry. Finding them in that place, I have thought proper to delay a decision of the question of their removal until I could determine whether the condition of affairs is now such as to either require or justify the continued military intervention of the National Government in the affairs of the State. In my opinion there does not now exist in Louisiana such domestic violence as is contemplated by the constitution as a ground upon which the military power of the National Government may be invoked for the defense of the State. The disputes which exist as to the right of certain claimants to the chief executive office of that State are to be settled and determined, not by the Executive of the United States, but by such orderly and peaceable methods as may be provided by the constitution and laws of the State. Having assurance that no resort to violence is contemplated, but, on the contrary, that the disputes in question are to be settled by peaceable methods under and in accordance with law, I deem it proper to take action in accordance with the principles announced when I entered upon the duties of the Presidency. You are therefore directed to see that the proper orders are issued for the removal of said troops at an early date from their present position to such regular barracks in the vicinity as may be selected for their occupation.

R. B. HAYES.

To Hon. GEORGE W. MCCRARY, Secretary of War.

In pursuance of the above, Secretary McCrary addressed a communication to Gen. Sherman charging him with the execution of the order, and naming Tuesday, April 24, at noon, as the time at which it should be carried into effect.

A NEW ORLEANS dispatch of the 23d says: "Saturday witnessed the complete disintegration of the Packard Legislature. A caucus was held in the morning, and, after discussing the matter, a resolution was adopted setting forth that it was impossible to further keep up the semblance of a Legislature. Shortly after, the members, in groups of three and four, took their way up to Odd-Fellows' Hall, and were sworn in, Warmoth being among the members. All but three Senators and about half a dozen Representatives who, under the resolution of the Nicholls Legislature, are entitled to take their seats, did so. Gov. Nicholls has offered to turn over the Governor's contingent fund, amounting to some $40,000, for the purpose of compensating the policemen and employes who have remained faithful to Packard. The President's Commission departed for home on Saturday. They expressed themselves highly pleased at the favorable termination of their labors.

IN pursuance of the President's order, the United States troops that had for several months been stationed in and around the Louisiana State House, at New Orleans, were withdrawn on Tuesday, April 24, precisely at 12 o'clock, noon. In the afternoon 100 guns were fired, and there was a liberal display of flags throughout the city in honor of the event....The Louisiana Legislature has elected Judge H. M. Spofford to the United States Senate. Spofford is a Northern man by birth, but has lived in New Orleans thirty years....The Louisiana Commission arrived at Washington, April 24. They at once proceeded to the White House and made their report to the President, in the presence of the Cabinet, of the result of their mission to New Orleans.

THE last acts in the final establishment of the Nicholls Government in Louisiana took place at New Orleans on the 25th of April, and consisted in the occupation of the capital by Gov. Nicholls and his officials, Packard having evacuated the building at midnight of the previous day. The members of the Legislature, headed by Gov. Nicholls and his State officers, marched in procession to the State House. There was no noise or demonstration whatever, and when the procession reached the Capitol the two branches of the Legislature met in their respective chambers, and the State officials quietly took possession of their offices. Gov. Nicholls received many telegrams from points in Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas, offering congratulations over the withdrawal of the troops, indicating great rejoicing among the people, the firing of salutes, the ringing of bells, displays of flags, etc. Packard, in retiring, issued a long farewell address to his adherents. He says he "waives none of his legal rights, but yields only to superior force." He counsels peace, patience, fortitude, and a firm trust that eventually right and justice will prevail.

THE EAST.

THE office of the New York Journal of Commerce, together with the files of the paper extending back to 1828, were destroyed by fire a few days ago.

THE New York Senate has passed a bill to prevent betting on elections and pool-selling at races....The Costa Rican Minister administered a caning to an extortionate hackman the other day.

THE WEST.

ANOTHER mail route by stage to the Black Hills has been let by the Postoffice Department. The route is from Bismarck to Deadwood, the distance being 250 miles.

ANOTHER of those horrible gallows scenes which have become a disgrace to the machinery of justice in this country was presented at the hanging of a murderer named Sterling, at Youngstown, Ohio, last week. The noose slipped under the culprit's chin, and failed to break his neck. After a few moments of silence, he began to clap his hands, kick his feet, and moan most pitifully. The sight was a horrid one, sickening in the extreme. For at least two minutes these motions and groans were kept up, and it was thirteen minutes before he was pronounced dead. While this scene of horror was transpiring on the scaffold his attorney was being carried into the jail, where he fell upon a bed and wept in a most piteous manner. It took three men to control him. Every few seconds he exclaimed: "He dead! he dead!"....Omaha, Neb., was visited last week by the most destructive conflagration that has occurred in the city for ten years. A number of stores were burned. The loss is estimated at a quarter of a million dollars....Two wood-choppers' cabins in the mountains near White Haven, Pa., were washed away a few nights ago by a sudden flood, and six laborers drowned.

THE Cincinnati Commercial prints advices as to the crop prospects from 86 points in Ohio, as follows: Wheat, 8 report a fair crop; 49, good; 29, unusually good. As to peaches, 15 report a fair crop; 35, good; 5, unusually good, 31, a failure. From 71 points in Indiana, as to wheat, 6 report the prospect for a fair crop; 37, good; 28 unusually good. As to peaches, 11, fair crop; 19, good crop; 5, unusually good; 36, failure or partial failure. From 91 points in Illinois, mostly the middle and southern portions of the State, 7 report wheat a fair prospect; 55, good; 21, unusually good; 1, failure; 7, no wheat sown. Peaches, 19, fair; 27, good; 39, failure; 15, none raised.

SECRETARY THOMPSON, of the Michigan Agricultural Society, has received letters from forty different counties, all of which, with the exception of Kalamazoo, report the growing crop of wheat in splendid condition....From the capital of Nebraska comes a cheering crop report: "Grasshopper trouble is at an end. The spring rains have begun, and are destroying the product of small portions of the eggs hatched. The future prospects of the State were never so good. The large surplus corn from the crops of the two last years is being held for higher prices."....One of the Government mail contractors from the Black Hills country, now in Washington, represents to the department that the indications are that the Deadwood country will rapidly settle. He says the miners throughout Deadwood valley are taking from $15 to $25 a man in placer mining.

TRAINS on the Union Pacific railroad were delayed several hours by a heavy snow-storm on the 23d of April....A San Francisco dispatch says four of the Chico incendiaries have been sentenced to the penitentiary, as follows: H. T. Jones, twenty years; James Fay, ten years; Pleasant Slaughter, ten years; A. Holderbaum, five years. A motion for a new trial in the cases of Jones and Fay was made and denied. ....The last crop reports from the Pacific coast are not as promising as previous reports.

ARRANGEMENTS for the removal of the old agency Sioux as well as their lately-surrendered brethren to new quarters on the Missouri River are to be pushed forward rapidly. The bands to be removed number about ten thousand persons, and the Nebraska people are not very cheerful over the prospect of the establishment of such a colony of half-reformed hair-raisers on their borders. It is expected that the agency will be established somewhere near the southeastern corner of Dakota.

THE SOUTH.

THE Legislature of South Carolina has met in extra session and reorganized itself. The Democrats have a majority in the House, while the Senate is equally divided.

ALL the State offices in Louisiana are now in undisputed possession of the Nicholls adherents. The Legislature has adjourned sine die, and everything is reported unusually quiet in New Orleans.

WASHINGTON.

THE President has appointed George A. Schneider, of Chicago, Minister to Switzerland. Mr. Schneider is a wealthy German, and President of the National Bank of Illinois.

MRS. SUSAN DAVIS, who has shaken hands with every President, from Washington down, called at the White House last week....Dr. W. W. Patton, of Chicago, has been elected President of Howard University, the colored college located at Washington....The Hon. Charles H. Adams, late member of Congress from the Albany (N. Y.) district, was married at Washington, last week, to Miss Judith Crittenden Coleman, of Louisville, Ky., grand-daughter of John J. Crittenden....Ex-President Grant called upon President Hayes on Wednesday last, being his first visit since the inauguration.

HON. EDWARD MCPHERSON, for many years Clerk of the House of Representatives, has been appointed Chief of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving....A delegation of whites and blacks of the Labor League of the United States, headed by John Pope Hodnett, called upon the President one day last week, and read an address requesting him to embody in his Message to Congress a recommendation for the appropriation of money for internal improvements, to give employment to idle labor; also to recommend the restoration of suffrage in the District of Columbia, and the payment of 10,000 workingmen defrauded by contractors under the Board of Public Works. They were courteously received, and went away with the impression that the President would do the right thing....It is proposed to reward the distinguished Indian chief, Spotted Tail, for his valuable services to the Government, by making him a Major or Colonel in the regular army. Sherman and Sheridan both favor the suggestion.

POLITICAL.

THE President has decided hereafter not to permit the names of persons designated to be Postmasters to be made public until the day of issuing their commissions. According to the practice hitherto several days have intervened between the time the appointment was determined upon and the issuance of the commission. These days have been used by the opponents of the person appointed to defeat him, and have resulted in bringing unpleasant political pressure to bear. This is to be defeated by the new regulation.

BEN WADE has written a letter bitterly denouncing the President's policy toward the South....Gen. Terrel has been appointed Pension Agent at Indianapolis....Judge Talbot, of Maine, who has been Solicitor of the Treasury for about a year, was removed last week, and G. Wiley Wells, of Mississippi, appointed in his place....Gen. T. H. C. Smith, of Ohio, has been appointed Appointment Clerk in the Treasury Department.

SENATOR BLAINE denies the story, started by a San Francisco paper, that he had prepared and intended to introduce resolutions in the next Congress expressing doubts of the election of Mr. Hayes, and proposing a new consideration of the subject.

MR. RANDALL is represented by a Washington correspondent as "very confident that he will be elected Speaker. His friends say that he has New England, New Jersey and Pennsylvania solid for him, besides leading men of the New York delegation, such as Clarkson Potter, Hewitt, and Fernando Wood. The Randall people also count upon enough support from the South to make him sure of nomination in caucus upon first ballot."

THE Louisiana Commission returned to Washington last week, and made a written report to the President of the result of their mission to New Orleans. It opens with a description of the attitude of each party toward the commission. Upon its arrival at New Orleans both sides were inclined to resist all attempts at compromise. The citizens were soured and suspicious and in the main the press was quite unfriendly. The report then details the various interviews had with the representative men of both Governments, and of every class in society. The most important portion of the report is a carefully-prepared statement of the legal position taken by each side in regard to the question whether the determination of the electoral vote by the Returning Board must be accepted under the constitution and laws of the State as also a determination of the result of the vote for the State officers. The Nicholls presentation of this question is one that impressed the members of the commission as worthy of close attention. No opinion was expressed by the commission in regard to this or other points of controversy. The only aim was to present the facts of the situation, and to give an unprejudiced account of the various obstacles which were encountered, and the methods pursued to remove them.

A WASHINGTON correspondent says Mr. Randall is not so confident of his election to the Speakership as he was two or three weeks ago. Two things have discouraged him—the knowledge that Mr. Morrison's candidacy is an earnest one, and the conviction that the Southern Democratic members are generally opposed to him....Col. Keyes has been reappointed Postmaster at Madison, Wis.

GENERAL.

A TERRIBLE accident lately happened to a boating-party near Sherbrooke, Quebec. A young girl fell into the water in attempting to land, and, while trying to save her, the boat upset and two sisters named Farquehar and a young lady named McDonald were drowned. ....A large delegation of Canadian Roman Catholic pilgrims sailed from New York for Rome last week.

GEN. SHERMAN thinks the present European war will be destructive and prolonged....Caleb Cushing, late Minister to Spain, has returned to this country....A man, in digging a well near Gravenhurst, Canada, a few days ago, discovered liberal deposits of coarse gold. The owner has been offered $15,000 for two acres of the land. Before the discovery it was not worth $100.

THE TURCO-RUSSIAN WAR.

THE Emperor's address to the army and people of Russia, promulgated on the 24th of April, is as follows:

Our faithful and beloved subjects know the strong interest we have constantly felt in the destinies of the oppressed Christian population of Turkey. Our desire to ameliorate and assure their lot has been shared by the whole Russian nation, which now shows itself ready to bear fresh sacrifices to alleviate the position of the Christians in the Balkan peninsula. The blood and property of our faithful subjects have always been dear to us, and our whole reign attests our constant solicitude to preserve to Russia the benefits of peace. This solicitude never failed to actuate us during the deplorable events which occurred in Herzegovina, Bosnia and Bulgaria. Our object, before all, was to effect an amelioration in the position of Christians in the East by means of pacific negotiations, and in concert with the great European powers, our allies and friends. For two years we have made incessant efforts to induce the Porte to effect such reforms as would protect Christians in Bosnia, Herzegovina and Bulgaria from any arbitrary measures of the local authorities. The accomplishment of these reforms was absolutely stipulated by anterior engagements contracted by the Porte toward the whole of Europe. Our efforts, supported by the diplomatic representations made in common with other governments, have not, however, attained their object. The Porte has remained unshaken in its formal refusal of any effective guarantee for the security of its Christian subjects, and has rejected the conclusions of the Constantinople conference. Wishing to essay every possible means of conciliation in order to persuade the Porte, we proposed to the other Cabinets to draw up a special protocol comprising the most essential conditions of the Constantinople conference, and to invite the Turkish Government to adhere to this international act, which stated the extreme limits of our peaceful demands, but our expectation was not fulfilled. The Porte did not defer to this unanimous wish of Christian Europe, and did not adhere to the conclusions of the protocol. Having exhausted pacific efforts, we are compelled, by the haughty obstinacy of the Porte, to proceed to more decisive acts, feeling that our equity and our own dignity enjoin it. By her refusal, Turkey places us under necessity of having recourse to arms. Profoundly convinced of the justice of our cause, and humbly committing ourselves to the grace and help of the Most High, we make known to our faithful subjects that the moment, foreseen when we pronounced the words to which all Russia responded with complete unanimity, has now arrived. We expressed the intention to act independently when we deemed it necessary, and when Russia's honor should demand it. In now invoking the blessings of God upon our valiant armies, we give them the order to cross the Turkish frontier. (Signed) ALEXANDER.

A COLUMN of 17,000 Russian troops crossed the Roumanian frontier at Bestinck on the 24th of April. Roumania, having received no preliminary notification, declared it yielded to force, and directed its troops to fall back to avoid a conflict.

THE Montenegrin forces are advancing toward the frontier of Albania....Austria will shortly occupy Bosnia with two army divisions. ....The Turks crossed the Danube on the 25th of April, at several points, and sent out flying corps to destroy railways before the advance of the Russians....A column of Russians has invaded Asiatic Turkey. Turkey has sent to the European powers a long circular, in reply to the Czar's manifesto. It protests against the declaration of war, pointing out the efforts of Turkey to improve the position of the Christians and satisfy the demand of the powers. In the absence, therefore, of any provocation on the part of Turkey, the circular declares the Porte is at a loss to understand Russia's attack, and consequently appeals to the treaty of Paris and mediation of the guaranteeing powers.

ROUMANIA has decided to cast her lot with Russia, and has issued a declaration of war against Turkey....Throughout the Russian empire the declaration of war was received with wild demonstrations of enthusiasm....The first engagement between the Russians and Turks took place at Batoum, in Asiatic Turkey. Turkish reports claim that the enemy was defeated with the loss of 800.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

THE London Times' correspondent with the Turkish army states that, notwithstanding the reported accord of Russia and Austria in Eastern affairs, the latter power reserves to itself absolute liberty of action....Finances are bad, very bad, in Russia, and a leading Panslavist journal advises the Government to raise a heavy foreign loan, even, if necessary, at a discount of 40 per cent., rather than to indefinitely multiply the paper currency, which is rapidly depreciating in value.... Italy is putting some of her reserves in the field....Cholera has reappeared in India.... The Russian Czar lately reviewed two army corps near Kischeneff. Addressing the officers, the Emperor said: "If you should encounter the enemy, show yourselves brave, and uphold the ancient glory of your regiments. I hope the young men among you who have not been under fire will not show themselves inferior to their veteran comrades. I trust you may soon return covered with glory."

A CALCUTTA dispatch says it is apparent that the famine in India is approaching its worst point, but there is good reason to hope that the maximum distress may be less severe than anticipated....The great German General, Von Moltke, in a speech delivered in the Prussian Parliament the other day, expressed his firm conviction that every European nation would be involved in war within a year....Mr. Sandford's American stable in England has scored two notable victories in the Newmarket races.

RUSSIA'S war manifesto is severely criticised by the London press on account of what the English journals are quite unanimous in characterizing as the spirit of arrogance and selfishness which marks the course of Russia toward Turkey. Great stress is also laid upon the fact that the manifesto is significantly silent on the subject of territorial aggrandizement ...The dreadful plague has reappeared at Bagdad.

A CABLE dispatch significantly mentions that there is unusual activity in the British navy-yards....A Constantinople dispatch says war with Persia is expected in Turkey.

British Newspaper Statistics.

From the Newspaper Press Directory for 1877 we extract the following on the present position of the newspaper press: "There are now published in the United Kingdom 1,692 newspapers, distributed as follows: England—London, 320; provinces, 991; total, 1,311. Wales, 56; Scotland, 164; Ireland, 141; isles, 20. Of these there are 103 daily papers published in England; 2 daily papers published in Wales; 18 daily papers published in Scotland; 20 daily papers published in Ireland; 2 daily papers published in the British isles." On reference to the edition of this useful directory for 1847 we find the following interesting facts, viz.: that in that year there were published in the United Kingdom 557 journals; of these, 16 were issued daily, viz.: 13 in England, 1 in Scotland, and 2 in Ireland; but in 1877 there are now established and circulated 1,692 papers, of which no less than 145 are issued daily, showing that the press of the country has very greatly extended during the last thirty years, and especially so in the form of daily papers; the daily issues standing 145 against 16 in 1847. The magazines now in course of publication, including the quarterly reviews, number 808, of which 275 are of a decidedly religious character, representing the Church of England, Wesleyans, Methodists, Baptists, Independents, Roman Catholics, and other Christian communities.—London Times.

CLAUS JANSEN and his wife and child were poisoned at Dixon, Cal., under the following circumstances: Mrs. Jansen was engaged in milking, and Mr. Jansen thought he would make himself useful, and set to work to prepare breakfast. He used strychnine instead of saleratus in making the bread, and the result was that the family narrowly escaped a horrible death. Mr. Jansen was seized with a fit of vomiting, which relieved him sufficiently to enable him to come to Dixon for assistance. When Dr. Pratt reached the scene, Mrs. Jansen's condition was very critical. Proper antidotes and emetics were administered, and the family speedily recovered.

EUROPE A VAST CAMP.

The Military Expenditures of the Great Nations—What it Costs to Keep Each Soldier.

A short essay, entitled "The Question of Money," has been prepared by M. de Girardin, in which it is made to appear that all existing governments, except those of America and England, are fast hastening in the direction of bankruptcy. Referring to one of the less great political systems which in recent years have alternately found favor with mankind, M. de Girardin says the result is, "Europe is one vast camp," the six powers alone spending close upon $500,000,000 annually upon soldiers. On this subject he makes a minute calculation, which is well worth reproducing. A soldier costs England, according to this calculation, $500.40, which, for an army of 106,000 men, makes her military expenditure $53,256,160 per annum. A soldier costs the French republic only slightly over $254, but then her army amounts to 480,000 men, and thus raises her military expenses to $112,928,298. The Czar pays a little over $238 a head for his soldiers, but he has 575,000 in the regular army to pay, and the total cost of the Russian army for a single year is estimated at the enormous sum of $137,034,925. The German Government pays a little over $225.14 for each of its soldiers, of whom it has not less than 412,000, costing the empire $92,764,606. Italy pays less than $181.58 a head for her soldiers, who number in all 205,600, and cost the kingdom $37,176,086. The Austrian army seems to be instrinsically the cheapest of those kept up by the great powers. Each man in it is supposed to cost the public $174.30, which, for an army of 273,800, gives a total of $47,705,914.

To these sums might have been added the annual amount expended by the great powers upon naval armaments, which may be roughly stated at $60,000,000 for England, $35,000,000 for France, $24,000,000 for Russia, $7,500,000 apiece for Germany and Italy, and $5,000,000 for Austria, making a total of $135,000,000. The danger of universal insolvency will never be removed till, in the words of Victor Hugo, rulers shall have ceased their search for the philosopher's stone of a definite and invincible armament; and leave off first spending millions on ships which no projectile can pierce, and then spending additional millions on the construction of projectiles to pierce the same ships.

Curiously enough, as M. de Girardin points out, the present situation of Europe can scarcely be better described than in the words of Montesquieu, who wrote in 1748:

"A new distemper has spread over Europe; it has seized our princes, and has made them keep up an inordinate number of troops. The disease has its paroxysms, and necessarily becomes contagious; for as soon as one state has increased the numbers of what it calls its troops, the others immediately do the same, so that none of them gain anything, except a share in the common ruin. Every monarch keeps on foot armies of such a size as might be raised if his people were in danger of actual extermination; and they call this state of struggle of all against all peace. True, it is this state of struggle which chiefly keeps up the European equilibrium, because it wears out equally all the great powers. And, as a matter of fact, Europe is so exhausted that private individuals who should find themselves in the condition in which are now placed the two wealthiest powers of this part of the world would not know how to subsist. We are poor with the riches and commerce of the whole world. The necessary consequence of such a situation is the perpetual augmentation of taxes, and—what cuts us off from all remedies in the future—states no longer count on their revenues, but make war with their capital. It is by no means an unheard-of thing for states to mortgage their property in time of peace; employ, to ruin themselves, means which they call extraordinary, and which, indeed, are so extraordinary that the most extravagant son and heir in the world would scarce imagine them."

The Great Guns of Turkey.

An English paper says: "The Castle of Asia, on the Dardanelles, it seems, still boasts the biggest guns in the universe. Of greater caliber than our vaunted 80-ton cannon or 100-ton weapons of the Italians, the old bronze ordnance of the Turks still enjoys the reputation of being able to fire the largest cannon balls in the world. These guns have now guarded the portals to the Turkish empire for two or three centuries, and have on several occasions proved that they are useful as well as ornamental. Indeed, it would be difficult to point out weapons which have done more service in their time than these colossal monuments of bygone ages. The old bronze cannon, we are told, date as far back as the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, many of them having been employed at the siege of Scutari, in Albania, by Mohammed II., in 1478. There was hard fighting in those days, if we may trust Von Hammer's history, for during two months that the siege continued no less than 2,534 shots were fired, some of them of a diameter of thirty-two inches. Estimating the weight of gunpowder at a fourth that of the ball, it must have taken a charge of well-nigh 400 pounds of powder to hurl some of these massive thunderbolts against the walls of Scutari. How the Turks in those days could produce sufficient gunpowder to supply their wants, or, what is more wonderful still, obtain so many stone cannon balls, which had to be cut from quarries, carefully fashioned into shape and conveyed to their batteries, are matters which must forever remain a mystery; but this much is very certain, that the work could never have been performed without unflagging energy and perseverance on the part of the Sultan and his officers. Von Moltke, the great Prussian strategist, inspected these guns on the Dardanelles in 1829, then a youthful artillery officer, and in his account of his travels he says: 'These gigantic guns are some of them twenty-eight inches in diameter, and a man may creep into them up to the breech.' But it is not only in bygone times that these weapons have been employed with effect, for in the present century one of our Admirals, Sir John Duckworth, who forced the passage of the Dardanelles in March, 1807, had six vessels struck, and 100 men killed and wounded by the unwieldy giants under whose muzzles he had to pass. In consequence of a 26-inch ball striking the Standard on that occasion no less than eight men were killed and forty wounded; while another cannon ball of stone twenty-eight inches in diameter made such a hole in the Active that the Captain, looking over to see what was the matter, saw two of his men thrusting their heads through it at the same moment. These cannon, however, cannot vie with our modern heavy guns. Being placed in a commanding position above the straits, they are necessarily formidable weapons, but they bowl out, rather than fire, the big stone cannon balls from their muzzles, the gunpowder employed for the purpose being of a slow-burning character to avoid all strain upon the guns."

Anna Dickinson and the Critics.

The unanimity with which the theatrical critics of the New York dailies attacked Miss Dickinson raises the presumption of concert of action. Their motive was, or seems to have been, to crush her out, because, possibly, they enjoyed the crushing process, especially since the attitude of the lady toward them had been one of defiance. After the performance of "The Crown of Thorns" on Monday night, she turned upon her persecutors, but not with her old vim and confidence. She pleaded, rather than scolded, and was pathetic, not vindictive. She carried with her the sympathy of the audience, for such passages as the following were irresistible in their pathos:

"On Wednesday evening when the curtain went up I had spent twenty-three hours rehearsing—I had spent, I cannot tell you what sleepless hours of agony. I came here in a very little better condition to play in this house than I was to make my first bow to a Boston audience. My play and acting were found fault with. Good friends, what could this one weak, sick, miserable, crushed, heart-broken woman do in opposition to the combined papers and the bitter prejudice they had stirred against me in this place? I did not fight them; God knows I did not want to fight them. I was almost crushed. I struggled on as I will struggle on, because, having taken up my work in life to do, I put it not down until I utterly fail. [Great applause.] I was hoarse from the same cause that I am hoarse to-night—because I have swallowed so many tears that have strangled me. I went heavily through my work because my heart dragged my hands and my feet until I could scarcely move them."

Only occasionally did she blaze forth in scorn, as when she spoke of "the brogue and bigotry" of the Herald. Miss Dickinson is probably far from being a great actor, but it is impossible that a woman of her brains and training should make a dead failure, as represented by the indiscriminating critics of the metropolitan papers, and continue for a year to draw audiences that almost always have been enthusiastic. It has been charged upon the New York critics that they are venal. This, perhaps, is not true; but it is reasonably certain that they are given to outrageous favoritism, and that their screeds have no real value.—Chicago Times.

Thirty-Three Years in a Dungeon.

A woman has lately been found in a secluded cave near Udino, in Italy, who had been imprisoned thirty-three years. In 1844 she became attached to an Austrian officer, but her father, a violent hater of the Austrians, who, at that time, were in possession of that part of Italy where he resided, refused his consent to a marriage. The girl stated that she would then marry without his permission. He dissimulated his anger, and, during a walk in which he accompanied her, he induced her to descend into the cave with him by means of a rope ladder, with a view of examining it. He was the first to ascend to the surface, and, withdrawing the ladder, left her. She was kept regularly supplied with food and clothing. At her father's death, her sister, whose hatred toward the Austrians was equally great, continued the imprisonment. The unfortunate woman, on her liberation, had a complexion of death-like pallor, caused by the darkness in which she had long lived, and her voice had departed, through constant cries during the early part of her sequestration for help. She could speak only in a hoarse whisper.

Equality of the Sexes.

There is an almost complete equality in the world's sexes. In France this balance is most nearly attained, where for every 1,000 men there are 1,007 women. In Sweden, to 1,000 men there are 1,064 women, while in Greece, to the same number of males there are but 993 Greek women. In Paraguay there are only 1,000 men to every 2,080 women, a state of things mainly due to the ravages of the Brazilian war.

The Gender of Sugar.

"What gender is sugar?" asked a teacher of the grammar class. "What kind of sugar?" asked the boy. "What kind?" repeated the teacher, "what has that to do with it?" "Why, if it's maple sugar, it's feminine gender," said the boy. "Why feminine gender?" asked the teacher, with a puzzled face. "Because you can't tell its age," promptly replied the boy.

A GENTLEMAN who recently traveled through Kern county, Cal., reports that the carcasses of cattle were lying in great numbers where they had died of starvation, and that many others were too feeble to get up and eat or drink. Bands of sheep were subsisting on greasebrush, apparently in the last stages of hunger. The owners of some herds have abandoned their flocks to their fate, not being able or willing to have them herded.

A Tramp Worth While.

A tramp stopped at the house of Philip Harris, in Coleraine, Pa., and was given something to eat. Noticing that John Harris, aged 18, was blind in one eye, he told him to cut a sour apple in two and rub the cut edges on the eye. The youth did as he was told, and regained his sight. He had not been able to see out of the eye for seven years.

THE practice of the doctrine of civil rights does not extend to Sherman, Tex., where all the whites who had bought tickets to a negro-minstrel show demanded that their money be refunded because reserved seats had been sold to colored men.

Black Hills Highwaymen.

The stage-coach entered the grandly picturesque Whitewood gulch, whose flanking mountains, fringed with pines, rise hundreds of feet on either side above the road. Upon the box sat the driver, Johnny Slaughter, as jolly a fellow as ever held the reins, and as harmless as a child. By his side sat Walter S. Iler, of the firm of Iler & McCaffrey, wholesale liquor dealers of Omaha and Deadwood, who was returning from a business visit to the East. The other passengers were inside the coach. As the weather was warm, every curtain was rolled up. Down the gentle incline the four steaming horses went at a good round pace, the passengers singing and joking. Suddenly five men were seen ahead, walking in single file in the road. Johnny said to Iler: "I wonder what game they are?" "Oh, I guess it's only a crowd on a lark," replied Iler.

Scarcely were the words out of his mouth, when the strangers turned, leveled their guns and pistols, and ordered the driver to stop. Johnny reached for the brake, but, before he could check his team, the outlaws fired. Fourteen buckshot, piercing the coat of Mr. Iler at the shoulder, passing across his back and out on the other side, struck the driver's left breast just above the heart. Poor Johnny fell from his seat a corpse. Another ball slightly wounded Mr. Iler's finger. That gentleman, believing death certain if he stayed on the box, leaped to the ground. In the meantime the desperadoes, separating to right and left, had fired through the windows of the coach. Henry Lake seized the barrels of two revolvers with a grip that the robbers could not break. They pulled him from his seat, threw him upon the ground, and ordered him to give over his weapons. He replied that he had none, and tossed his empty pistol-belt toward them. He was ordered to "git," and obeyed with alacrity, jumping up and running down the road in pursuit of the coach. The team, frightened by the fusilade, had started off, driverless. The chase continued for half a mile, when Messrs. Iler and Lake overtook and stopped the coach, and the former, mounting the box, drove into this city, a distance of two and a half miles. The only other passenger hurt was B. P. Smith, of Denver, whose face was badly burned with powder.—Deadwood Cor. New York Sun.

Cotton and Its Spindles.

An eminent cotton firm, in an annual report of the cotton trade during 1875-76, gives the following as the number of spindles in Europe and America, and the average annual consumption of cotton:

	No. of spindles.	Cotton per spindle, lbs.	Annual estimated consumption, lbs.
United States	9,800,000	63	600,000,000
Great Britain	39,000,000	33½	1,297,000,000
France	5,000,000	45
Germany	4,650,000	54
Russia and Poland	2,500,000	66
Switzerland	1,850,000	40
Spain	1,750,000	45
Austria	1,560,000	67
Belgium	800,000	60
Italy	700,000	60
Sweden and Norway	300,000	60
Holland	230,000	65
Total spindles	68,060,000		2,906,000,000

or upwards of 6,000,000 bales of the average weight of an American bale.

CURIOUS occurrence in a Newburg, N. Y., church a week ago Sunday night. The deacon explains it in this way: He sat in the corner of his pew, two little boys came next, and beyond them was a sharp-visaged woman. He leaned back, rested his arm on the back of the seat, touched somebody's hand, and, supposing it to be a child's fist, covered it with his own and pressed it. Suddenly the lady in the pew shrieked: "You had better look out; I'll slap your face;" and the bewildered deacon received a stinging blow across the mouth. The deacon sought refuge in the open air, and the congregation gossiped after the benediction.

MME. ANDRE, who was recently buried in Paris, died possessed of the modest sum of 10,000,000 francs. When her husband departed this vale of tears his fortune amounted to 2,000,000, half of which fell to his wife, the other half going to his son, M. Edouard Andre, who built the splendid hotel in the Boulevard Haussmann at a cost of 4,000,000 francs. He was looked upon as the certain heir of his mother, but she has only left him her jewels, valued at the trifling sum of 1,000,000 francs.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Financial [illegible] for the First Quarter of the Year.

[illegible] circular of [illegible] Co., stating the number of failures and amount of [illegible] ter [illegible] statement. In number of failures there is a [illegible] quarter of 1876, [illegible] liabilities a decrease of $10,000,000. The circular observes that "two railroad operators who really stopped payment long ago formally suspended within the past two months," and that the liabilities of these amount to [illegible] lions. But it does not appear that during the first quarter of 1877 there were not failures of equal importance which really belong to an earlier period. These statistics have value only as records of the number and magnitude of failures finally ascertained within a certain period, and would be valueless if it were attempted to ascertain at what time the losses were sustained which brought them about.

The first quarter of 1877 yields 2,809 commercial wrecks, with liabilities of $54,538,074, or $19,[illegible] for each firm. The average of liabilities is very low, and in that respect the report indicates an improved condition. Whenever the average of mercantile liabilities is small, the average of liabilities to each failure is correspondingly small, and the return therefore indicates a reduction of indebtedness amounting to about $4,000 per firm since the first quarter of 1876. But the losses have not been equally distributed; in New York, for example, the average of liabilities is greater than it was during the first quarter of 1876. No doubt, in the second case, this is due to the formal failure of firms previously crippled, but in almost every quarter this is the case. As has been well remarked, the report of the failures is only a record of the wrecks which come ashore within a given time; it shows rather the point beyond which credit cannot be pushed to support certain firms, than the measure of the losses sustained. It is important to bear this fact in mind, because a large proportion of the failures now recorded, and a very large proportion of the liabilities, are due to losses sustained in previous years.

The excess of failures in comparison with the first quarter of 1876 is due mainly to California, where the increase is more than 100 per cent.; to Connecticut, where it is more than 50 per cent.; to Chicago, where it is nearly 40 per cent.; to St. Louis, where it is about 80 per cent., and to small States or Territories. In Boston there had been a decrease of over 60 per cent.; in Georgia of 50 per cent.; in North Carolina of nearly 60 per cent., and in Rhode Island of nearly 80 per cent. Comparisons of quarterly failures are not of much value, but the returns indicate a generally improved condition of business in Georgia, Maine, Boston, Michigan, New York city, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Virginia and Wisconsin, while in other localities the number of failures is generally nearly as large or larger than it was during the first quarter of last year.

It is not possible to draw any just conclusion of importance from these reports. They clearly do not show that the condition of general health has been reached. Nor do they indicate a general decline in commercial stability. They point rather to an adjustment of business to new conditions; to loss where business has been speculative and rash, and to gradual improvement where the gambling element has been duly eliminated. The losses are not over where honest exchange has given place to dice-throwing.

Anecdote of President Lincoln.

I called upon Mr. Lincoln soon after he was first installed in the White House. In the room where Mr. Lincoln granted interviews, etc., were several persons who were waiting their turn to speak with him. I listened to the requests of several men and women, and I saw that very few were granted what they solicited. I had a seat at or near one end of a long table. Mr. Lincoln sat at the other end. Soon after I was seated, in walked several officers of the Spanish navy to pay their compliments to Mr. Lincoln. By some means they were directed toward my end of the table, and I saw they took me for the President. Mr. Lincoln saw the same thing, and hastily signaled me to "go ahead," as he expressed it, and receive them. I rose, shook hands with each officer, and exchanged a few words with them, which would have been, I suppose, appropriate had I indeed been President. The moment their backs were turned I looked toward Mr. Lincoln. He was shaking with laughter. I thought now I had paved the way to win the position I had come to ask. I made up my mind to address the President in a new way, and thus add to the hold I already had upon him. So, when my time came, I stepped up to Mr. Lincoln and said:

"Sir, I have seen the annoyance to which you are subjected by so many and oft-repeated requests for innumerable positions, etc. Now, if you will permit me to shake hands, I will try and smother my desire for a certain position which I had come to ask from you."

Mr. L. jumped up, and, grasping my hand, said:

"Sir, you are one man in a thousand. I am doubly indebted to you. You have been the means of conveying to those Spanish officers that the President of the United States is a very handsome man, and then you do not ask an office. But," he added, "hurry home. You may repent."

It is sufficient to add that I hurried.—Harper's Magazine.

Rainfall in England.

There are 1,500 stations in the United Kingdom where measurements of rainfall are carefully made. Taking the country generally, July and October might be regarded as the [illegible] months, July, owing to the very large amounts often falling during thunderstorms; and October, from frequent steady rains; while the least fall happens in April and May. Every inch of rain gives 22,623 gallons of water per acre, or 14,500,000 gallons

Diebitsch succeeded in making his way through the Shumla pass in 1829, which opened the road to Adrianople. Once south of the Balkans the reduction of Turkey to the condition of a Russian [illegible], the installation of a Russian Prince upon the golden throne of Selim the Invincible, would only be a question of time. Russian troops can be massed at Odessa and marched across the Dnieper, and down to Shumla, more rapidly than in the days when Suwaroff telegraphed Catharine, "Glory to God! Ismail is ours, and I am in it." Railroads are now in operation from St. Petersburg to Moscow, Warsaw, Cracow and Odessa, where the fleet would form conjunction. The pass from Shumla is the door to Adrianople, which is connected by rail with Constantinople, the distance being 210 miles, an easy ten hours' ride. The other famous roadway through the Balkans, Trajan's pass, is nearly 300 miles west of Shumla. The route would thence be southwest to Uskul, which is connected by rail with Salonica, 150 miles. There is a road also between Varna, on the Black sea, and Rustchuk, on the Danube. The Balkans are a continuation of the Dinaric Alps, their average elevation being about 4,000 feet, and they are chiefly granite. To get possession of the pass of Shumla will undoubtedly be the chief aim of the first part of the campaign, and it will not be obtained in a day or two.—Chicago Times.

Austria's Position.

There is undoubtedly much truth in the statement that Austria is profoundly agitated at the near approach of war between Russia and Turkey, and may meditate a movement into Herzegovina and Bosnia as an offset to the Russian invasion of Bulgaria. The Austrians are evidently afraid that, in case of war, there may be a change of territorial status, and fear that if the Russians get across the Danube and sweep down through Bulgaria, they may absorb everything down to the Balkan mountains, and perhaps something beyond them, in which case she would be compelled to take Herzegovina and Bosnia in self-defense, rather than have Russia swallow them. The movement to occupy these two provinces, however, must of necessity involve Austria in new complications at home. It would change the center of gravity and bring the Sclaves to the front, outnumbering the Magyars, and constituting the prominent element of the population and the controlling element in the Government. The two combined would of course almost completely overshadow Northern or German Austria, the issue of which, sooner or later, would be the secession of the German element to Germany, thus leaving Austria to be split again between the Sclave and the Magyar. The situation of Austria, therefore, as will be seen at a glance, is a very peculiar one. She would like to occupy the Sclavic provinces, and yet is afraid to do it. It is a strong temptation, and yet, if she yields to it, her dual form of government must involve her in new and critical complications. It is a necessity that she should occupy them, and yet, if she does, it may result in the rearrangement of the map of Austria.—Chicago Tribune.

Crop Prospects.

The Statistical Corps of the Department of Agriculture report upon the condition of wheat in 868 counties of the Western wheat region. In 218 the returns are comparatively unfavorable. In 650 a condition varying from average to superior thrift is indicated. In the Atlantic States, north of North Carolina, and in those of the Ohio valley, there has been far less injury from the frost than usual. Of 320 counties, only 45 report below the average, and six-sevenths of the reports from the Middle States are favorable. In Missouri unfavorable returns are from 15 of the 66 counties reported. In Kansas, from 17 of the 38 counties, grasshopper ravages are reported. In 22 counties of Eastern Kansas, from Nebraska to the Indian Territory, as far west as Saline county, the wheat-growing district is alive with grasshoppers, which threaten the destruction of crops in several counties. More than 20 counties report hatching of spring broods. There is an increase of area of wheat in Texas, and the prospects are favorable, with the exception of grasshopper ravages. In other cotton States the dry autumn and variable winter have depressed the condition of wheat below the average.

A Plucky Schoolmarm.

The drudgery of the school-room may drive the schoolmistresses of England and Wisconsin into insanity and suicide, but the Canadian teachers thrive and grow fat on it. One of the big schoolboys of the Dominion asked his teacher one night if he could escort her home from singing-school, but she politely declined the offer. He neglected his studies, ran away from school, and put pins into his schoolmates. She finally lost patience and gave him a flogging. The boy told his father that the fair one whom he had courted had turned and whipped him. The indignant parent sued the teacher and obtained a judgment for $3.50, which she paid. The next morning she remarked to her scholars: "I have whipped a booby soundly, which pleasure cost only three dollars and a half. Now, if any others of my scholars are inclined to imitate him, they will have the kindness to step forward, receive the money and the flogging, and then we will go on with our studies. I am here to instruct you, not to be courted." Nervousness will never kill off so plucky a schoolmistress.

Robert Bishop fired a pistol at James Baxter, in Baltimore, the other evening, the ball striking Baxter in the forehead and completely flattening itself.

WATCH THE DOGS.

[illegible]

[illegible] unsuspri[illegible] of hydrophobia [illegible] been [illegible] in the United States [illegible] have [illegible] ratio [illegible] to be [illegible]; and [illegible] on as almost an imaginary [illegible] count of the rarity of the instances and the disposition to [illegible] every report as either fiction or superstition, or an unusual [illegible] of nervous disorder, the medical profession no longer makes any pretense of denying its existence, its cause, in [illegible] of a remedy, and the inevitably fatal result following the most cruel and horrible suffering.

The latest case has occurred in Philadelphia. A bar-keeper named Michael Crosson went into a cellar on Christmas day to draw ale. He chanced to kick and anger a terrier which snarled at and bit him, inflicting what appeared to be an insignificant wound. Crosson paid no attention to the incident, and, in a week, no trace of the bite remained except a slight discoloration. A fortnight since, some three months having elapsed, he began to feel pain in the place of the wound, inflammation set in, and a reddish eruption appeared and disappeared at short intervals. At last Crosson was compelled to go to bed by the severity of the pain in his arm and shoulder, and the physician who was called, Dr. Carroll, being ignorant of the real cause, administered a powerful anodyne, which had no effect. In an hour the man's condition revealed the truth, the circumstances of the bite were recalled, and, before anything further could be done, the case was hopeless, as it probably would have proved to be even if treated from the beginning with the utmost resource which the medical profession is able to apply. Crosson's delirium was so violent that four men were required to hold him in bed, and he died from exhaustion; his mind having remained clear up to the precipitation of the paroxysms. He did not froth at the mouth, but the contraction of the muscles of the neck, peculiar to the disease, occurred whenever liquids were brought within his vision. His death occurred within eighty minutes of the beginning of the paroxysms, and in about ten hours after the pain in the wound became severe.

Two cases which occurred about three months ago in Chicago were clearly authenticated, one victim dying in Mercy Hospital, the other in the county hospital. The facts in the second instance were never obtained fully in detail, on account of the ignorance of the man's relatives. Instances are appearing constantly all over the country, and the natural desire of the afflicted family and friends keeps them out of print as the only means of evading the impudence of curious people.

The history of this terrible disease is nothing but a record of the vain but gallant struggle of human intelligence to discover its secret. It is as old, probably, as man; Aristotle speaks of its virulence among carnivorous animals, but was of opinion that it could not, or at least did not, attack the human species. It has always been a source of debate, among both physical scientists and medical practitioners, as to whether the origin of the disease is spontaneous among the lower breeds, or is distributed by inoculation. This much is universally admitted: That the poison is conveyable through the saliva of hydrophobic dogs, cats, horses, cows, sheep, rabbits, oxen, and man, and that, once in the blood, torture and death ensue. Experiment has demonstrated that even hens may become hydrophobic from inoculation with the saliva of stock animals suffering from rabies.

The chiefest danger lies in the deceptive delay which may ensue between the infliction of the bite and the development of the earliest symptoms. In the dog, this delay may be of a few days only, or it may extend to weeks, and even months. The symptoms attack the horse more uniformly within a few weeks; but no rule has yet been formulated concerning the period of incubation in the human species. The only hope of escaping the fatal consequence lies in the instant and thorough excision of the wounded part, and as this can rarely be done in time, or, if in time, is not done thoroughly enough, the virus steals into the blood, and defies science.

The popular notion that hydrophobia is more likely to appear among animals in the spring and during the hottest interval of summer is pronounced by scientists to be erroneous. The disease is capable of development at any time, and its undeniable increase seems to demand that prudent measures be constantly in operation to anticipate its deadly outbreak.

Hints on Transplanting.

The art of transplanting trees, shrubs, and vines is only learned by experience, close observation, and a strict adherence to the laws that govern vegetable growth. Any unskilled laborer can dig up and reset a tree or a vine; but this does not insure life, health and vigor. There is a well-adjusted balance between the roots and branches of every tree or vine. Trained practical gardeners recognize this fact, and the importance in transplanting of removing carefully all the roots possible, and especially the fine, fibrous ones, such as take up and furnish the nourishment. To save enough of these roots in transplanting large-sized trees, it is necessary to know the habits of growth of trees and vines. For instance, the Scotch or white pines with their long, fleshy roots, and comparatively few fibrous ones near the body of the trees, need more care in removing than the Norway spruce with its mass of fibrous roots clustered around the body. The best way in all cases is to dig a narrow trench around the body, some distance from the tree, deep enough to get below the lower tier of roots. In making this circle, the flat of the spade should not be faced toward the body of the tree. The top soil on the "ball" near the body, should be removed by a digging-fork or other implement that will not cut or injure the small roots. In case the trees or shrubs are to be moved only a short distance from where they are growing, as much soil as will adhere to the roots may be left on with advantage.

The second important point to be observed in transplanting is not to leave the roots exposed for a moment to the rays of the sun, or to a blowing, dry air, which is quite injurious to tender rootlets. If not set out at once, the roots [illegible] with a cloth [illegible] signs [illegible] fibers [illegible] will be [illegible] improved by dipping them into [illegible] and then [illegible] the roots carefully [illegible] leaving them until ready to plant out.—P. T. Quinn, in Scribner for May.

The Effects of a European War.

War in Europe does not mean unlimited prosperity in America. When the war-drums throb anywhere in the civilized world, some share of the suffering [illegible] sooner or later to every nation. Modern finance and modern commerce have bound all nations together with ties that cannot be seen but cannot be broken, and the true interest of each has become the best interest of all. Jay Cooke could not fail at New York without causing starvation in many an English town, and the Sublime Porte cannot send devout Mussulmans to be food for Russian cannon without bringing disaster, near or remote, to pious Christians in Maine or California.

It is very much the habit to take it for granted that war in Europe will be a great blessing to this country. War between civilized nations needs to sustain it grain and gold as well as blood and iron, and the immediate demand for the support of combatants, in food, clothing, and munitions of war, will not be inconsiderable. But the main and obvious fact is that ports from which about 42,000,000 bushels of grain are usually sent to supply European demands will be closed by a struggle between Russia and Turkey. The number of consumers will be unchanged; the number of producers will be greatly diminished. Grain, meat, clothing, weapons, munitions, and many manufactured articles will be purchased from this country in much larger quantity because of the war. Already cargoes are dispatched by telegraphic order; already factories open their doors, and the prices of our chief products for export advance. But the medal has two faces. We are certain to ship larger quantities of products at higher prices, and in the exchanges of nations these products are as good as gold, and yet the premium on gold in American markets rises swiftly.

Inasmuch as we owe nearly or quite $2,000,000,000 abroad, in the form of bonded debt, the credit of corporations and municipalities not known to be strong is likely to be severely tested. Not a few railways, which have struggled until now against bad management or adverse fate, will be forced to surrender at discretion long before the Turks lay down their arms. Stocks of all kinds, mining, railway and manufacturing, are also largely held abroad, and in many cases are likely to come back. It is unfortunate for us that this disturbance in Europe so closely follows events which have impaired confidence in the management of many American corporations and municipalities. But we must face facts as they are, and it seems probable that, for some time to come, a large share of our exported grain and produce will go to pay for bonds and stocks returned to this country.—New York Tribune.

Near-Sightedness in Schools.

The effects of school-life in producing near-sightedness in the pupils have for some time been the subject of systematic study by Dr. C. R. Agnew, of New York. In a recent address before the Medico-Legal Society, he stated the results of an investigation made in various schools of Cincinnati, New York, and Brooklyn. The number of students examined was 1,479, of whom 630 were in Cincinnati, 549 in New York, and 300 in Brooklyn. Of the 630 Cincinnati pupils, 209 were from the district schools, and of these 83½ per cent. had natural, or emmetropic eyes, while 10 per cent. were near-sighted. In the intermediate schools, 210 scholars were examined, and of these 80 per cent. were natural, and 14 per cent. near-sighted. In the normal high-schools, the eyes of 210 students were examined, and of these 78 per cent. were emmetropic, and 16 per cent. near-sighted. All this goes to show that near-sightedness is a progressive disease in the schools. The results for the other two cities teach the same lesson.

The 549 students mentioned above as examined in New York belonged to the New York College. Here, in the introductory classes, 57½ per cent. were found emmetropic, and 29 per cent. near-sighted. In the Freshman class, 42½ per cent. had natural eyes, and 40 per cent. were near-sighted; in the Sophomore class no very material difference from what was observed in the preceding classes; but in the Junior class 37 per cent. had natural eyes, and 56 per cent. were near-sighted. In the Senior class 50 per cent. had normal eyes, and 37 per cent. were near-sighted. The Brooklyn students examined belonged to the Polytechnic Institute of that city. Here, in the academic department, 56 per cent. were emmetropic, and 10 per cent. near-sighted. In the collegiate department (a higher grade), 53 per cent. were emmetropic, and 28½ per cent. were near-sighted.—Popular Science Monthly.

Customs Disregarded.

Mrs. Chew Goon Poe, the Maine school teacher, who married a Chinaman at San Francisco some time since, has taken a reporter of the San Francisco Chronicle into her confidence, and convinced him that she did not marry for money, but for that which makes the world go round, to wit, love. There was a reception several weeks after the wedding, and all her husband's relatives were invited to come with wedding presents. In China the bride is not visible on such occasions, but a coolie servant, dressed fantastically, pours out the tea and distributes confections. The friends of Chew Goon Poe assembled in a restaurant, with gongs and fiddles, each bringing to the banquet a sum of money ranging from $3 to $40. When the company were ready for tea the Caucasian bride moved suddenly upon the Mongolian works by emerging from the obscurity of her chamber, taking the head of the table, pocketing the money and pouring out the tea. The guests protested against this innovation upon the customs of the Orient, but the bride did not seem to understand the Chinese language. She deposited the money in a bank the next day, and her husband is unable to convince her that her conduct is improper.

The Folly of Gambling.

Just how much chance an outsider—a "pigeon," in the gambler's vocabulary—has to win against professionals at cards or any of the "little games" is made apparent by the Utica Herald in the following description of a device gathered in with other spoils during a police raid on a faro bank in that city:

"In one of the drawers of the poker-table was found an ingenious and wicked device, attached to a vest, which may properly be called a thief. The vest is of fine cassimere and is well made. It is single-breasted, with a double fly on one side. The buttons which hold the vest together are on the inside, while another row on the outside are shams. The vest buttons nearly to the neck, and is harmless in itself; but in the middle of the fly is an opening large enough to allow a small frame to slip out close to the body. Following this frame, by tearing open the lining of the vest was found an ingenious piece of mechanism, composed of German silver and brass springs, and attached to this was a long spring of brass wire, through which was passed a small gut or cord. This was long enough to reach through the leg of the pantaloons of the wearer, the cord terminating in a loop which could be fastened around the heel. The gambler wearing this device could beat his master, the devil, at poker, providing Mr. Devil did not have another thief in his vest. In playing with a greenhorn or 'sucker,' as verdant victims are called, the wearer of the thief would take his chances at getting a large hand by hook or crook, and if he failed outside and above-board he would use the thief. Set in the frame that could be forced from the machine by extending the foot attached to the cord, he had one, two or three aces, kings or queens—cards high enough in rank to beat his opponent. After receiving his hand from the shuffler he would hold it close to his body to examine it, and if not pleased at its size down would go his foot, out would pop the frame, and then he could exchange his poor cards for better ones. Each time the deal came to him he could pick out a large hand and slip it into the thief's frame so as to be ready when needed. An experienced gambler, talking about this device last evening, said that a greenhorn playing against this machine would not have as much chance to win as he would to recover one cent in a handful of bills thrown into a fiery furnace."

May Days.

We read of the pleasant old custom of choosing a May queen, and dancing around the May-pole, out-of-doors, and sometimes we wish we lived in a climate where such things can be done. But May-day, as you children know, is often a day of disappointment—fog, and rain, and sometimes snow, instead of sunshine and flowers. We suspect that it is not always a pleasant day even in merry England; for Hood writes a poem about spring, beginning:

"Come, gentle Spring! ethereal mildness, come!"
O Thomson, void of rhyme as well as reason,
How couldst thou thus poor human nature hum?
There's no such season!

How it often is with us, we are reminded in the first couplet of Mrs. Osgood's "May in New England":

Can this be May? Can this be May?
We have not found a flower to-day!

But we cannot help believing in May, and every year we hope that she will behave better the next time she comes. For she does make us regret her departure sometimes. This is the way the regret has been written:

Spring is growing up;
Is not it a pity?
She was such a little thing,
And so very pretty!
Summer is extremely grand;
We must pay her duty—
(But it is to little Spring
That she owes her beauty).

Spring is growing up,
Leaving us so lonely!
In the place of little Spring
We have Summer only.
Summer, with her lofty airs
And her stately paces,
In the place of little Spring,
With her childish graces.

—St. Nicholas for May.

A Brave Girl.

Emily Bronte, author of "Wuthering Heights," and sister of the famous Charlotte, possessed extraordinary courage. Timid as a fawn in society, and afraid to hear herself speak, but in the face of appalling danger she was self-possessed, knowing no fear. She was passionately fond of dogs, and always took them for company in her walks. One day when she was giving water to a dog at the parsonage door—her father was a clergyman—he bit her hand severely, and showed evident symptoms of madness.

The brave girl uttered no cry of pain, nor called for help. Walking calmly to the kitchen, she found an iron heating on the fire, and applied it to her arm. She held it there without flinching till the wound was thoroughly cauterized, and a broad scar remained, which was visible to the day of her death. Neither of her sisters knew what had happened till many weeks afterwards, when, thinking all danger had passed, she informed them.

The Supreme Judgeship.

Here is a list of all the prominent candidates thus far spoken of for Judge Davis' place on the Supreme Court: Senator Timothy O. Howe, of Wisconsin; Circuit Judge Woods, of the Gulf circuit; Judge Thomas Drummond, of Illinois; Col. Thomas B. Swann, of West Virginia; Gen. B. H. Bristow, of Kentucky; Senator Isaac C. Christiancy, of Michigan; Samuel F. Rice, of Alabama; Judge Hawkins, and the Hon. H. G. Smith, of Tennessee; the Hon. Henry Caldwell, of Arkansas; Judge B. Hughes, of West Virginia; and Judge D. A. Walker, of Georgia. We think the choice will eventually be made between Judge Drummond, of this city, and Gen. Bristow, of Louisville, with the chances perhaps in favor of the latter.—Chicago Tribune.

A Walking Catalogue.

Wendell Phillips says of George, the brother of Charles Sumner: "An Englishman came to Rome and was anxious to know whether there was in the library of the Pope, the great library of the Vatican, a certain book. The library is vast and there is no catalogue. The gentleman went to the Italians. They referred him to the private secretary of one of the Cardinals, and the secretary answered: 'I don't know; but there is a young man in this city from Boston, and if the book is there he will know.' They went to George Sumner and asked him if there was such a volume in the library. 'Yes,' 'it is in the [illegible] alcove, the third shelf, the seventh book to the right as you enter.' They went and found it."

The decline in the value of twelve leading stocks in the New York market from the highest price of last year to the lowest of this year is $185,000,000.

Negotiations are in progress for a tract of land in Decatur county, Ga., on which to settle a colony of French immigrants from Germanized Alsace.

One boy was killed and another badly stunned by lightning at a game of base-ball at Dallas, Tex., the other day, and yet neither of them were of the players.

An estimate of the damage to French property and to France through the late German invasion places the figure at 886,957,755 francs, or about $221,739,439.

A Pennsylvania exchange notes: "The first breaking out of [illegible] in this State this year occurred in Delaware county, at Media, where there is a school for feeble-minded people."

A bill which has passed the lower house of the Provincial Parliament at Ottawa, Ont., provides that insolvents shall not be entitled to their discharges unless the amount of their assets realizes not less than 50 cents on the dollar.

A Connecticut man, to excuse the non-appearance of his daughter, wrote: "She has run Down & her Strength exosted She was Six ins Somer fore money weaks & She has Aperents of a Similar Atact agane you will pleas excuse hur fore the present."

According to the Transcript, a common ground sparrow was recently seen to vanquish six English sparrows in a contest in the Boston Public Garden, and to end the fight by taking one of the invaders by the wing and shaking him, as a terrier would a rat.

Prominent European capitalists have been negotiating for some time, and at last successfully, with the Land Commissioners of Florida for $8,000,000 worth of orange lands. They intend to bring into the State 2,000 or 3,000 hardy farmers from England, Germany, France and Italy.

A special committee of the Common Council of Lexington, Ky., has warned the traveling community that the trestle now used by the Kentucky Central railroad in crossing the Louisville, Cincinnati and Lexington railroad and the Frankfort pike at Lexington is unsafe, and likely to be the cause of disaster.

There are in Colorado over fifty peaks which rise more than 14,000 feet above the sea level. Bianca peak, in that State, the elevation of which was determined last year by Hayden's survey, is probably the highest point within the limits of the United States, being 14,464 feet above the level of the sea.

A portion of the great meteor which passed over Northern Vermont a few weeks ago is reported found near the town of Jay, imbedded about four feet in the earth. It is said to have the appearance of iron-ore lava and soapstone, and to weigh about two tons. Report says this is the largest aerolite ever discovered in this country.

Years ago, the King of Prussia jokingly complained that his physician, Dr. Lauer, kept him on short commons in the hope of making an octogenarian of him and so earning for himself the title of Excellency. The Doctor is now an Excellency, sure enough. On the Kaiser's birthday he was named Privy Councillor.

All the recent theatrical casualties have occurred while the "Two Orphans" was upon the stage. The latest was at Buffalo, N. Y., where the box of paper used to represent snow took fire, and the flames became visible to the audience. Prompt action extinguished the fire, while the efforts of the ushers prevented a panic in the auditorium.

The members of the Chinese embassy were charmed with Madame Tussaud's wax-works show in London. It is probable they would have displayed less enthusiasm had not ignorance of the language prevented their appreciation of a passing cabman's remark: "Look 'ere, Bill; here's all the images broke loose and a-coming out for a walk!"

Mr. John T. Raymond played Col. Sellers at Lynn the other night, and an ardent temperance man called on Col. Sellers after the play and urged him to sign the pledge. The cold-water advocate said the Colonel played the part to perfection until he got drunk, and then he made a confounded old fool of himself. The Colonel smiled, and, during the next hour he "smiled" several times.

Mrs. Hayes, it is noted, has large hands and feet, a large waist, a large mouth, large eyes, and a radiant smile, and has, it is said, what all these possessions indicate—a generous, sympathetic nature, and exceedingly good sense. "Her eyes are deeply set, and are of that peculiar gray which does not mean a twilight depth of blue. They are a decided gray, admitting of all the steel tints from that of cold metal to the gleam and glitter of polished ore."

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, MAY 3d, 1877.

And now comes Ex-Senator Logan, with opposition to the President's policy.

Tweed's confession discloses the fact that a few high-toned Republicans were connected with the frauds of the ring.

Senator Allison, of Iowa, reports that the Southern policy of President Hayes does not suit a great majority of the Republicans of that State.

A mountain of rottenness has been discovered in the New York Custom House, and still there is mourning and gnashing of teeth in the Republican camp.

Schneider, a Chicago Banker, and a stockholder of the Inter-Ocean, has been appointed Minister to Switzerland. And yet the Inter-Ocean is not happy with the ways of the President.

N. P. Banks also says that Hampton was not made Governor by the votes of the people of South Carolina, but by the order of Mr. Hayes. Here is another prominent man in the Republican party arrayed against the policy of Hayes.

The report of the Louisiana Commission smooths it over a little, but Ben Wade and Blain and Morton and Cameron and J. Logan and Ben. Butler dont yet understand how the same votes can count one way for Hayes and another for Nicholls.

The New York Times boldly declares that Packard's title to the Governorship of Louisiana is as good, if not better, than Hayes' to the Presidency. Give Hayes a fair chance to restore fraternal feelings in the South, and don't perpetually remind him that he is an usurper.

The Steuben Republican reports that there are many grave misgivings in the party of that county in regard to the course of the President. Republican papers are generally on the fence, and are afraid to come out squarely and say yes or no.

Old Ben Wade and Hayes don't seem to belong to the same happy family, somehow or other. They don't dwell together in unity. They don't appear to love one another fervently. They don't frolic and gambol around each other like spring lambs on the hillside.

There is one fact that stands out as prominently as a wart on a woman's nose, and that is if Packard is not the lawful Governor of Louisiana Hayes is not the lawful President of the United States. Packard's title to the Governorship is the same as Hayes' title to the Electoral vote of that State; they are one and inseparable. The face of Packard stamps the "brand of fraud" upon the brow of Mr. Hayes.

The Warsaw Indianian can express an opinion in regard to Hayes' policy. "About all that Tilden could have done, had he been elected president, would have been to remove Chamberlain and Packard, only he wouldn't give as a reason therefore that he did it to build up the Republican party in the South." What do other papers say about the election, of Hayes' electors in Louisiana, and the defeat of Packard. Come out of your holes gentlemen, and speak. The old guard never surrenders.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

On last Thursday and Friday wheat took an upward bounce all the way from $1.91c to $2.10c in this market, being an advance of 19c. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday the market collapsed and the price fell 17c. The lame ducks are said to have put in an appearance at Toledo over the sudden tumble, and if we are not mistaken there are one or two wounded jay birds in this market. The ruling price yesterday for wheat, —there being but one grade offered, was as follows; Amber, No. one, $1.93c., No. two, do $1.78c. Oats are dull at 45c two car loads having been moved last week from the station, that had been in storage for 30 days. Corn is in demand at 58c., and but small lots offered. There is a demand for potatoes, especially choice seed, at $1.25c@$1.40c. Our shippers have dropped on butter 1c., and on Monday opened at 10c per lb., and eggs remain steady at 8c. Hogs, unchanged: live weight, 5¼c@5½c., dressed, 6c@6½c.; hides, green, 6c.

The general officers of the New York Central and Lake Shore railroad, passed over the Air Line division last Thursday by special train. The party consisted of W. H. Vanderbilt, vice-president of the Central, the president of the Canada Southern, directors of the Central, Superintendent Paine, of the Lake Shore, and others. The train was drawn by the celebrated engine "Norman," that formerly carried the fast mail,—Mr. Hovey engineer, and some fast time was made. The train came via Canada Southern from Buffalo, and west of Charing Cross on the Canada side, a run of 60 miles was made in 59 minutes. The run from Toledo to Elkhart, via Air Line, a distance of 133 miles, was made in two hour and 46 minutes, with a stoppage of 15 minutes at Swanton, caused by an accident. Orders were given to have all the switches spiked on the line before starting out from Toledo. It is claimed that this is the fastest time that was ever made in America. The object of the trip was to enjoy an excursion and inspect the road. The party visited Chicago and returned to Cleveland, via Main Line, where an election of officers took place in the early part of the week.

The recent heavy rain storms have caused considerable damage in this vicinity to freshly sown oats and clover fields. Where the grain was deposited on hillsides and mellow soil it has been washed out, and in many instances the grain will have to be re-sown. Likewise gardens have sustained more or less damage, and transplanting will be necessary.

At Sedan last week a tramp was suspicioned of appropriating a watch belonging to a citizen, where the tramp had halted for refreshments. Two-thirds of the village gave chase, with a requisition of Corunna thief-catchers joining the party at the latter place. Overhauling the poor devil at nightfall, a careful search of the victim's person revealed simply nothing.

The Lipset Brothers, produce dealers, shipped over $30,000 of produce during the year 1876. This estimate does not include their transactions in hides, pelts and furs.

Unless some sanitary measures are taken in certain neighborhoods before the hot weather sets in, the doctors will be made happy and our little graveyard will enlarge its boundaries.

We understand that W. B. Adams contemplates erecting a new two-story fire-proof brick building on his front-st. block this summer.

We are pleased to learn that our tailor, Mr. W. Aerhend, is driving a brisk trade. Mr. A is a good workman and ought to be liberally patronized.

E. H. Clark will sojourn next winter at his old home in Tennessee. He finds the northern blasts uncongenial, and proposes to emigrate with the swallow.

Mike Gallagher, the ditcher, is the champion dog charmer of the nineteenth century.

A little child of John Beaver, Section Foreman, died last Monday morning of scarletina.

LOVELAND.

NEWVILLE

Dr Henry Hill, of Michigan is visiting friends here.

Samual Widney, aged 81 was married last Tuesday to, Mrs. Polly Woodcox, aged 61, all of Concord township. We wish the happy youths a golden wedding.

Dr. J. M. Lawrence, who removed to Ohio, two years ago, has retuned and taken up his residence here.

The grandest triumph in art has been achieved in the manufacture of musical instruments. From the rude and simple instruments of the ancients we have made rapid progress until now the tone of the human voice is almost perfectly reproduced by machinery. In olden times music received the homage of, and was patronized by all. At Athens the people considered music one of the great educations of youth; wise fathers carried their children regularly to places where they could listen to the finest music, impressed with idea that it not only ennobled the heart and purified the soul, but through them beautified the body. We love to contemplate the beauty of the Atheanian maid, the product of music, who stood in her naked loviliness before Praxiteles; and how the shapeless mass of Parian marble bursts into the Venus de Medici. See the manly beauty of the young hero who stood before Phidias, and how his image sprang from the soulless marble into the god like Apollo Belvedere. All this was due in a great measure to the sublime inspiration of music. And if all this was accomplished through primitive modes of its production, how much more should we realize with the advancement already attained in the musical art. It is but a short time since we could count all the pianos and organs in DeKalb county on our fingers, Now there are hundreds of all grades and varieties, and with the coming of better times many more will be added. It is important then to look around, and ascertain where your money can be invested to the best advantage. There are cheap inferior instruments in the market, and no one is scarcely sufficiently skilled as to escape being imposed upon. We have lately made a thorough examination of the Emerson Piano, and feel assured that for the money it is the best in tone and durability of any now offered in the market. The company producing these, have made greater improvements in the tone and quality of their instruments than their cotemporaries. The Emerson of to-day is far superior to the Emerson of ten years ago, while the Chickering and Steinway have remained about the same. When you are engaged in making one thing over and over again, it would be curious, having any ability in its manufacture at all, if you did not improve it, at the end of twenty years constant practice. Nothing is so perfect but what it is susceptible of improvement, and when this ceases it shows a want of ability and experience more than anything else. The mechanism of the Emerson is excellent, while the tone is all one could wish. We are now trying one, and so far it has received the highest prise, from all.

M. F. Long, is the clever enterprising agent, and will wait you during the summer ready to supply you with an organ or piano, at lowest rates, and guarantee satisfaction.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the lamented Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but natural that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change.

Democratic Caucus.

A caucus will be held at Little's office, on to-morrow (Friday) night, for the nomination of a Democratic ticket for the town of Auburn. We hope to see a large attendance.

Mrs. A. S. Lane, of Waterloo, died yesterday. She was a most estimable lady, and all who knew her will mourn her loss.

It is reported around that this section has hopes of a fair crop of wheat. If nothing of a destructive character intervenes between now and harvest, we will have an enormous crop.

It is not true that the King of the Sandwich Islands has ordered 1,000 gross of Terry's Salicylic Soap for his colony of Lepers; but it is true that he ought to.

H. H. Stamets.

A correspondent of the South Bend Tribune advises all married men to keep their property in their own name instead of deeding it to their wives. We admit that as a general rule the advice is correct, but it would be very inconvenient for some persons we know of, as in that case they might be compelled to pay their honest debts. [Standard.

The Social of the M. E. Church will be entertained on Wednesday May 9th, by Mrs. T. C. Mays. Mite in the evening. All are cordially invited. The ladies are requested to come early as new rules are to be adopted.

Yesbera has got the agency for the Esty organ, an instrument that has never been excelled. It has been the leaing organ for years, and still is at the head. If you want a well made, pure-toned instrument you should give him a call, at his store-room, next to Abrights.

Mr. Editor: Please answer the following: If Packard is not the rightful Governor of Louisiana, is Hayes the rightful President? Subscriber.

We respectfully refer this enigma to republican press for solution. We confess our inability to solve it, and favor Hayes. Perhaps Joe Bradley or J. Madison Wells would rise and explain.

We beg pardon of Eli Myers. It was a fellow, we learn, by the name of Bill Shook, or Snoot, (which would be a much better name, owing to a breaking out of the mouth,) who wrote a letter on the margin of a newspaper and sent it to us, in the name of Myers. Snooty had better live up to his religion a little better, or make less profession.

The celebrated Operetta of "Trial by Jury" will be given at Fort Wayne tomorrow night. This will be the first appearance of the great prima donna, Mrs A. J. Goodrich, who will be assited by the splendid musical talent of that city and other points. We notice that Miss Jennie McClellan, of Waterloo is down for a discriptive song. It will pay to attend.

Hi. Parent has sold out his Livery stable to Obe Cool, who will now combine the two in one. This is a good idea. One livery stable can be reasonably supported here, and more than that is too much. This thing of condensing business so that it will meet the demand is what is needed. There are other lines of trade that would be benefitted in a similar way.

In referring to Samuel J Tilden of N. Y., the Boston Post says: "No man has more to ruffle his spirit and try his patience. But amidst it all, and even in seeing the Presidential honors to which he was clearly entitled, borne off by another by means most extraordinary, not to use harsher language, he has maintained the dignity of a statesman and the equipoise of a saint.

An excusion train will leave the Junction at 9 o'clock Sunday morning for Avilla, returning at 2.30 in the afternoon, and all those desiring to witness the laying of the corner stone of the new Catholic church there, can do so at a cost of 40 cents for round trip. From Garrett and return, 25 cents. Bishop Dwenger of Ft. Wayne will officiate.

The citizens of Auburn hold a meeting to-night for the purpose of taking steps, as a town, to encourage the building of manufacturing establishments. A Mr. Stamets offers the ground free upon which to build. Columbia City is a better point, and yet the citizens look upon the matter with indifference.— [Col. City Post.

Railroads center at Auburn from six different directions, and Columbia City has but four. We don't mean to disparage the advantages our neighbors possess, but we can't endorse the last sentence in the above item.

Sometimes one can be too polite and urbane. We were asked by one of our patrons to puplish the notsce of the death of his friend with pleasure, we replied, and he was mad for a week. Now we will publish the announcement of a death in the usual forme, without charge, but we must have pay for all opituary notices, or poetry following the same. We will not publish there notices in the future unless they are paid at our usual rate 10 cents a line. No one should expect it.

ABSTRACTS.

The undersigned, having just completed a set of Abstracts of the title to all the farm lands, town and cemetery lots in DeKalb county, make the following reduction in fees, during the months of April, May, June and July, 1877, to-wit: For an examination and opinion of the title to one parcel of land, $1.00; written certificate of the same, $1.50. Where deeds or mortgages are made by us, we will make an examination free of charge. Complete abstracts made on short notice at low rates.

A Card.

Editor Courier—I regret that I have been compelled to resign the office of Justice of the Peace of Union township. When I assumed the duties of the office, I had hoped that it would not interfere with my professional business, but after discharging the duties thereof for one year, I find that it does prevent that prompt attention in legal matters, which I have always sought to render, I cannot retire, however, without returning my grateful thanks to those who did me the honor to place me in that position.

D. Y. Husselman.

The railroad employes of this place are as a general thing, a fine set of men and are an honor to the company they work for and town they live in. The bummers of Garrett are gone, and their places filled with men of worth and respectability, and we have the right to be proud to day of our people and the good character of our place.—[Garrett News.

Garrett has certainly improved very much since its inception, and it gives us pleasure to note the progress.

We received a short communication from Garrett. but it does not appear, because we think it might be misconstrued, and cause a rumpus in that place. It will not do to hurt the feelings of anyone unless you can do some good. While we are thankful for communications, we must decline this on account of its personal bearing. We have a case of reformation on hand at Corunna, and suggestions are now in order.

Mr. Editor.—

It is not generally known, perhaps, that Mr. Whetstone of the Lower Flouring Mill has one of the best millers in the country. He has for years applied himself to his business, and from a large and varied experience, he can produce a quality of flour unsurpassed in quality. His name is T. B. McCoy, of Rochester, New York, from the celebraid mills of that city, where a man must be a thorough mechanic to get employment. N.

If war continues in Europe, if England and the other powers become involved, if all the able bodied men are under arms, and manufactures and agricultural interests are thus crippled, and if this illuminated circus holds out long enough, we dont see why Uncle Sam cannot get away with three or four hundred millions of their filthy lucre. Farmers should put every acre into grain this spring. We want to engage in agriculture ourself, and want a small farm of 5 or 10 acres near town. We propose to keep up the supply.

The Boston "Traveler," a Blaine organ, thus admonishes Mr. Hayes of the cloud hanging over his own title: "President Hayes and Governor Packard were elected by the vote of Louisiana, and the flunkeys who discredit Governor Packard's right by that act invite President Hayes to step down and out. There may be ways of dodging that fact, but they are not honest ways.' That's very true, but isn't it a little bit naughty in the "Traveler" to whisper these harsh words into the presidential ear within everybody's hearing.

The Steuben Republican says: There is certainly a strong current setting in the South against the success of the Republican party through the policy of President Hayes. The Indianapolis Journal says:

James Redpath has written a letter to the colored people of the South, a copy of which has been sent to every newspaper south of the Ohio river advising them to join the Democratic party on the best terms they can obtain. He tells them that they can expect nothing from this administration; that their old masters have more influence with Hayes than they, and it is for their temporal welfare to buy protection with their votes from the Democratic party.

Hank Little starts out with a full declaration of principles in the Independent He says: "All notices of marriage, where no bride cake is sent, will be set up in small type and poked in an outlandish corner of the paper. Where a handsome piece of cake is sent, the notice will be put conspicuously in large letters; when gloves or other bride favors are added, a piece of illustrative poetry will be given in addition. When however, the editor attends at the ceremony in person, and kisses the bride, it will have special notice—very large type, and most appropriate poetry that can be begged, borrowed, or stolen.

The Republican has not lost its taculty of insinuating. It says the town talk is that the board has spent large sums for the maintenance of tramps this winter. We have heard no one indulge in such talk, but on contrary find our liberal, honest, humane people, those who pay their honest debts, in favor of being half way human to the poor hungery, shelterless, miserable tramp. It also says that they demand a statement of just where the money goes. Weamer knows or ought to know that such a statement is published every year by the clerk. No demand has ever been made of the clerk, the proper officer, and that 'demand business' exists only in visionary brain of Weamer. He had no charge to make, no, he thought he would insinuate, and cast a suspicion upon officers who have done their duty. If we have anything to charge against a Republican officer, we will spit it out, and not try to hit him in the dark, as it were, by a cowardly insinuation.

At Ensley's Hall.

The Louisiana Colored Jubilee Singers will give one of their concerts at the above named hall, Friday eve., May 4. The Cleveland Herald thus speaks of them:

"These Colored Jubilee Singers are attracting crowds wherever they go. The tenors are good and the base tremendous. One of the singers has a voice like the roar of a lion. The concert consists of the strange plantation and camp-meeting song, with those peculiar shouts, comical to the Northerners, though perfectly natural and matter-of-course to them. They are strongly emotional and accompanied with expressive gestures, clapping of the hands, rolling of the head and swaying of the body, with a tapping of the foot on the floor. The heartiness with which the singers took their respective parts showed it to be natural, and from the frequent encores was highly appreciated by an immense audience. Admission 35c., children 20c.

The following marriage licenses were issued by the Clerk during the month of April: Fred Botle and Mary Cloy, Fred Blohm and Christina Denakie, Wm. A. Moody and Hattie Vaughan, Lafayette Miser and Hannah McEntaffer, Wm. H. Harmes and F. J. McNab, Wm. Wilson and Martha A Stoody John W. Beidler and Emma C. Pinchin, Chas. N. Wright and Effa M. Johnson, John W. Farrington and Catharine M. Metzger, Ol ver P. Raber and Josie R. Johnson, F. B. Kreaper and Mary Frank Geo. Hevel and Sidney Echelberger, Chas. Simons and Susan A. Dexter, A. K. Grubb and Mary F. Miller, Joseph Wyatt and Ann E. Nelson, David Campbell and Lyda Burns, Levi Meyers and Melinda Myers, Albert Monroe and Phebe E. Coburn, Samuel Widney and Mary Woodcox.

Weamer says large sums have been expended for tramps this winter. He could just as well have said the town had spent millions for vagrants, for it would have been just as true. The Marshal under whom those expenditures have been made gives us the following.

No of tramps,......................121.
Expense of same, ...$40,27.

When a town like this can get off with as small a sum as that, considering the terrible winter just passed, it is certainly cheap when the number of destitute is so great. Thirty three cents per head is certainly a modest sum, and yet a wretched human being was prevented from freezing or starving to death, perhaps, some of them honest, none of them so utterly depraved as to be beyond christain charity. Forty dollars—and Weamer says "large sums.' The Trustees give a full report in another column, as the result of their labor.

Now we've done it. Our dear old fraud, C. Kelly Baxter, is on his ear for what we said about the great Roman Senator of the north-west. Baxter infers that his quandom friend, is the first to stop the Courier, for he says: "The Courier ought to grant citizens of the county the privilege of taking it, or not taking it, without visiting them with abuse." Why Charlie, we didn't say a harmful word, we only drew a parallell, and if the aforesaid, g. r. s. suffered therefrom, it wasn't our fault. Our people can take the Courier or not, as they choose, and we have never so far abused them because they ceased to become patrons. But where we come in contact with ignorance, and bigotry, and selfishness, and penuriousness, and self conceit, and brass, and cheek, and meanness, and depravity, and deformity, we propose to fight it as we would a snake. Had Mr. Waterman discontinued the Press because of the abuse and misrepresentations that paper heaped upon him ever and anon, our pink of propriety, C. K. would have whined pitifully, but Mr. M. has been prompted to patronize that sheet just to see the mean things Baxter could manufacture against him. We are glad to know that a democratic officer can bear a criticism from an opponent, without stooping to a petty revenge. Our item on the action of the g. r. s. on the State House question was certainly not abusive, and a white man could possibly take no offense thereat.

Election Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the annual election of the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, will be held at the town building, May 7th A. D. 1877, for the purpose of electing the following officers. One trustee for the 1st ward, one trustee for the 2nd ward, one trustee for the 3d ward, one trustee for the 4th ward, one trustee for the 5th ward, one clerk, one treasurer and on assessor

Attest. J. L. Roth. Town clerk.
Auburn, April 16th, 1877.

A Bulldozed Ghost.

A fearful monster has been seen on the farm of Joseph Walter, south of town. Our young friend Joseph, junior, has been sleeping in the barn, made necessary by the burning of their house last winter. Joe. slept sound and peaceful, until the night of the 29th, when his faithful dog aroused him by most persistent barking and growling. By the time he got one eye open, he saw that the barn doors were open and within them stood, as in a frame, a monster white specter, clearly outlined against the sky. Its great arms cleaved the air and made threatning gestures, while its eyes flashed fire as it cautiously approached the center of the barn. The dog kept up a ferocious barking, and Joe held his ground determined not to be bulldozed by nothing less than a Returning Board. The dog staid by him, and he staid with the dog by hissing him on. This was too much for his ghostship. It expected a different result, but had not time to leave it to a commission. Its retreat through the barn-doors was cut off and it made for the horse department, and down the aisle it hurried until it came to the stable door, the upper half open, the lower half securely fastened. Joe. and the dog were close upon him, and it sprang through the open half, and gracefully landed on its back in a very fine mixture of barn-yard filth, and it disappeared around the corner of the barn like an arrow, with its white robe somewhat changed in color, and was seen no more.

Ladies and Gentlemen of Auburn and Vicinity.

I am aware the usual notices of selling at cost is stale, obsolete and even doubtful yet I frankly confess I will sell my entere stock at actual cost. I am truthful when I assert this. To convince yourself please call and examine goods and prices.

Ladies' gold chains, 14 karat solid, $1.10 dwt; gent's golds vest chains, 14 karat solid, $1.10 dwt; 18 karat solid plain rings $1.10 dwt; ladies' gold watches, formerly $65 at $45; gent's gold watches at factory prices; american silver watches at cost; silver plated castors 3, 4, 5, and $9; silver plated cake baskets 4, 5, 7 and $8; silver plated tea spoons $1.50 set; silver plated table table spoons $3.50; silver plated steel table knives $4.50 dozen; solid silver table spoons—also do. forks, $17; solid silver tea spoons, twist, &c., $8@$9; solid silver timbles, 45c; all other goods sold in same proportionate reduction. Endless variety of clocks at actual cost. Vienna regulators, at $20 and $28. Superior quality of spectacles, at makers prices. Diamond rings, cameo, do., set rings and all others at wholesale prices. Also ladies' fine gold sets at manufacturers' prices.

I will give each purchaser of $5 worth of goods a chance ticket in the drawing for a clock valued at $200, first prize; also as a second prize, a beautiful $100 music box. Each ticket entitles the holder to a chance in both prizes.

Also, I wish to inform the public that I have made arrangements with the various manufactures of watches, jewelry, silver ware &c, to send any goods on selection, so that those who wish anything in this line, and not in stock, will have an opportunity to buy of me at the small commisson of 10 per cent, and in every instance goods warranted as I represent them, as the reputation of the firm is sufficient guarantee to all.

Respectfully, Geo. J. E. Mayer,
19 E. Main St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of an venditioni exponas to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, in a cause wherein John R. Ketcham Charles W. Bond, and John R. Ketcham, 2d are Plaintiffs, and Edward Eldridge is defendant, requiring me to make the sum of Four Hundred and Nineteen dollars and thirty three cents, with interest on said judgment and cost. I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder on.

Saturday, the 19th day of May, A. D. 1877.

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m. of said day at the door of the Court House of DeKalb County, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to-wit:

The undivided one half of the north half of lot number twenty-nine (29) in the original plat of the town of Auburn, in DeKalb County, Indiana

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said judgment interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale, the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be, sufficient to discharge said judgment, interest and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

Attachment Notice.

Before Jacob Walborn Justice of the Peace of Union-tp., Dekalb County Indiana.

Sapharia C. Swinsford vs.
Robert Zacher

Whereas the plaintiff in the above entitled cause has filed with me his affidavit and bond in attachment and summons, having been issued and returned not found and a writ of Attachment also having been issued there on and property of the said defendent having been attached by virtue thereof and it also appears that the defendent is a nonresident of the State of Indiana. Therefore the said defendent and all persons interested, are hereby notified that said cause is set for trial on the 2nd day of June, A. D. 1877, at 10 o'clock A. M., before me the undersigned, at my office in Auburn, Union-tp., DeKalb county, Indiana.

Jacob Walborn, J. P. [seal.]

A TILT.

"It may be so, but I don't believe it."

"It's because you don't use your eyes; you're prejudiced."

"Perhaps I am."

"I know you are. It would be foolish to talk againit custom-made clothing. Those who prefer it and can afford it, have a right to it, but I won't listen to your slurs against 'ready-made;' my experience is all against you. I have bought ready-made of SAM, PETE & MAX, and found it to fit as nicely, last as long and look quite as well as custom work, and for much less money."

"You seem interested in the Star Clothing House."

"I am, but not in the sense you mean. I think that a house that has done so much to raise the tone of ready-made clothing business, and at the same time reduce the prices for the people deserves a good word."

"But you detract from the custom trade."

'Not a bit of it! It is not that I love Cæsar less, but Rome more! The truth is custom work has not become poorer, and gone down, but ready-made has become better and risen up! Now do you see it?,'

"I wouldn't acknowledge it if I did."

"Of course you wouldn't. Those beaten in argument seldom do. Good morning.

Its rules of business dealing with the people:

1.—ONE PRICE.
2.—CASH PAYMENT.
3.—A GUARANTEE.
3.—MONEY REFUNDED.

THE DOCTOR'S STORY.

BY WILL M. CARLETON.

Deacon Rogers, he came to me;
"Wife is a-goin' to die," said he.

"Doctors great, an' doctors small,
Haven't improved her any at all.

"Physic and blister, powders and pills,
And nothing sure but the doctors' bills!

"Twenty women, with remedies new,
Bother my wife the whole day through.

"Sweet as honey, or bitter as gall—
Poor old woman, she takes 'em all.

"Sour or sweet, whatever they choose;
Poor old woman, she daren't refuse.

"So she pleases whoe'er may call,
An' Death is suited the best of all.

"Physic and blister, poultice an' pill—
Bound to conquer, and sure to kill."

Mrs. Rogers lay in her bed,
Bandaged and blistered from foot to head.

Blistered and bandaged from head to toe,
Mrs. Rogers was very low.

Bottle and saucer, spoon and cup,
On the table stood bravely up;

Physics of high and low degree;
Calomel, catnip, boneset tea;

Every thing a body could bear,
Excepting light and water and air.

I opened the blinds; the day was bright,
And God gave Mrs. Rogers some light.

I opened the window; the day was fair,
And God gave Mrs. Rogers some air.

Bottles and blisters, powders and pills,
Catnip, boneset, sirups and squills;

Drugs and medicines, high and low,
I threw them as far as I could throw.

"What are you doing?" my patient cried;
"Frightening Death!" I coolly replied.

"You are crazy!" a visitor said;
I flung a bottle at his head.

Deacon Rogers, he came to me:
"Wife is a-gettin' her health," said he.

"I really think she will worry through;
She scolds me just as she used to do.

"All the people have poohed an' slurred—
All the neighbors have had their word;

"'Twere better to perish," some of 'em say,
"Than be cured in such an irregular way."

"Your wife," said I, "had God's good care,
And His remedies, light and water and air.

"All of the doctors, beyond a doubt, Couldn't have cured Mrs. Rogers without."

The deacon smiled and bowed his head;
"Then your bill is nothing," he said.

"God's be the glory, as you say!
God bless you, doctor, good-day! good-day!"

If ever I doctor that woman again,
I'll give her medicine made by men.

PUT YOURSELF IN HER PLACE.

The long summer day had crept slowly away, and it was nearly 5 o'clock. The hours at the railway station were marked as by some gigantic clock that told the laggard minutes by screaming whistle and clanging bell. The 4:30 accommodation had gone east, the western express due there at 4:55 had thundered through the village, gone on over the great viaduct and disappeared round the vast curve beyond.

So one counted the hours by the trains, Lydia by name, a girl of the best New England type, quiet and yet with an immense capacity for doing and daring should love and the occasion demand. The local freight would come next, and then—then she would see him again. She laid aside her work, put some split-zephyr vanity upon her head, and went out towards the railroad. As she approached the station she saw her brother, the station-master, opening the little freight house on the farther side of the track. By this she knew that the local freight would stop this time. Her heart beat the faster and she quickened her step.

On reaching the passenger station where the village street crossed the railway, she looked up and down the line and then crossed over and turned to the left and walked beside the track towards the freight house.

To understand all that took place on this occasion, and to fully appreciate her consummate skill in controlling the events so quickly to crowd upon her, we must study the construction of the road at this point. The main line for more than a mile to the right, or towards the east, was perfectly straight and comparatively level. To the left, or the west, it crossed a deep valley by a lofty stone viaduct, and beyond the valley it curved to the north and mounted the hill by a long grade. Just east of the passenger station a branch road entered the main line and there was, as might be supposed, a cross-over switch. Beyond the passenger station, on the west, was a short siding ending in a small freight house, and directly opposite was another siding with a freight shed and coal yard. At this point there was also another cross-over switch.

Lydia walked on past the freight house, and, crossing the side track, found a large flat rock beside the way, and there, under the shade of an ancient apple tree, she sat down to wait till her lover should come.

He comes! She heard the three long whistles sounding down the line, and a bright blush mounted to her face. The train would stop. This was the signal for the station-master. Her brother came out of the freight house, spoke pleasantly to her, and then walked on towards the switch at the head of the siding.

Suddenly the main line track before her began to sing in sharp metallic murmurs. The train had entered that section of the road and he was near. Then there came the sound of escaping steam. The engine was slowing down and the steam, no longer employed, was bursting with a loud roar from the safety valve as if impatient of delay.

With a jar that shook the ground the immense freight engine rolled past her, and the engineer, leaning out of his window, nodded to her as he slid past. Then the cars in long procession came into sight and moved past with slowly decreasing speed. Four brakemen busy at the brakes went past and still he came not. At last the rear car appeared, and a young man swung himself down from the iron ladder on the car and sprang to the ground at her feet.

A sooty man, clad in blue canvas now black with smoke and dust. Only a brakeman! Oh; a trifle better—the conductor of the freight train. A year ago he had been glad to take the place of a brakeman, and already he had been promoted. Love did it. He had met and loved Lydia in the days of his foolish idleness, and she had insisted that he do some manly work or she could not—yes, she could and did love him; but he must show himself worthy of her love. Already he had advanced, and she was well pleased with his progress, and they had become engaged.

A grimy, dusty man in unlovely garments; but, in her eyes, he was a man made for better things. As he stood beside her one could see in his clear eyes and sensible face, that he had good stuff in him and was worthy of her love.

It becomes us not to linger while they talk quietly together beside the track. The train moved slower and slower, till, finally, it stopped with the last car just beyond the switch. The iron horse was moved on, the station master signaled with his arms in a curious fashion, and each of the four brakemen repeated the motion in turn. White puffs of steam rose high in the air from the farther end of the train. A curious, rattling sound spread through the train, and the last car backed down, turned aside, and entered the siding. The station-master left the switch, and came hastily toward the lovers.

"Good day, Alfred. Light freight today; only one car—by the way, the brake-chain is broken, and you had better drop the car at the repair shops. The freight can be thrown out without leaving the car."

So saying, the station-master went on into the freight house, followed by the rattling and rumbling cars. They gradually lost their speed, and then came to a stop with the end of the train lost in the dark cavern of the freight-house. There was a shout from the building, and then one of the brakemen began to move his arms as a signal to go on. Again the white puffs of steam shot up in the distance, and, with a jar and quiver, the train started again.

Car after car rolled passed them. There were hurried whispers, a warm hand-shake and perhaps a kiss, and the young man swung forward, grasped the ladder on the last car, climbed quickly to the top and sat down. She stood gazing after him as he was drawn away from her, and smiled and waved farewell to him with her handkerchief.

"Here, Lydia, you must help me."

It was her brother who stood beside her with a bunch of keys in his hand.

"The passenger train follows this at once and I must go to the station. Will you please close the switch after them?"

She took the keys mechanically, and then turned again to gaze after her lover seated on the last car of the retreating train. It had passed out of the switch and was crossing the great viaduct and moving more and more swiftly away.

To close and lock the switch was neither difficult nor dangerous, and she quietly walked on toward the end of the siding till she came to the switch-post. Here she leaned against the wooden frame for a little space, shading her eyes from the sun with her hand and watching the train. It had run around the valley and was turning into the great curve that crept upward in a long grade over the hill beyond.

It was now a mile away, and she could no longer distinguish any one on the cars. She turned slowly away, seized the iron bar of the switch and easily threw it over into place so as to leave the main line open for the next train.

She looked back down the road and saw that the passenger train had entered the line from the branch and was just up at the station to discharge passengers. It may seem surprising that a passenger train should be allowed to follow a freight train so closely.

Bad engineering as this arrangement was, it was not so serious as it seemed, for this passenger train did not follow the freight except for three miles, when it reached the end of its trip and was turned off upon a siding.

She turned once more to look after the retreating freight train. It was in full view, climbing the grade on the great curve.

Suddenly she put up both hands to shade her eyes and leaned forward on the switch frame. What had happened? Two tiny puffs of steam rose from the engine. It was the signal to stop.

Ah! the train has parted! Faint and far away came the short, sharp danger whistle. A single car had broken loose from the train, and had been left behind. It was standing alone on the track.

No. It was moving backward. It was beginning to roll down the grade. It was moving faster and faster. There was a man upon it—her lover.

Involuntarily she spread out her arms and let them fall to her side three or four times in succession—the signal to put on the brakes.

"How foolish! He cannot see me, and—." She leaned against the switch frame, and shook with fear and agony.

The brake was broken.

Swift and swifter rolled the disabled car. It was coming down the track gaining speed at every rod.

She sprang to the middle of the track and tried to shout to the engineer of the train at the station. She made the motions to back down out of the danger. Her tongue clove to the roof of her mouth, and her cry became an inarticulate groan.

Onward came the car. She could see her lover upon it frantically waving his arms from right to left. What did it mean? Her brain seemed to be on fire. She could do nothing but gaze on the advancing car in dumb horror.

Ah! The passengers! Could she not save them?

With a violent wrench she opened the switch again and stood holding the bar in both hands. Better so—better one life lost than a dozen. Her feet seemed bolted to the ground. She must stay and see him killed, and by her own hand.

Ah! why had she not thought of it before?

The cross-over switch! Could she reach it in time she might save him. She snatched the key from the switch and ran with frantic speed up the line. She never knew how she opened that switch.

With moans and cries she threw herself across the line and began to run down the other side. Could she reach the switch before the car? Its roaring rang in her ears. Panting, with almost bursting bosom she reached the switch, opened it, and stood clinging to it as the car came thundering over the viaduct.

She looked up at her lover upon the car. He had seen and understood the change in the switches. His car, helpless though it was, would cross over to the down-track and roll harmlessly along the level line till its force was spent. He was saved, and by her ready wit and skill. The passengers in the train were also saved.

She had saved him. Love had been her inspiration.

Great heavens! what's that? The express! The down express was coming!

All was in vain. He was lost. She saw him throw up his arms in despair. The very plan she had devised to save him would be his destruction. Better far to have thrown him off the siding as she had intended. Now he would meet a more dreadful death, and the destruction would include scores of lives instead of a dozen.

All this flashed through her mind like as lightning. She felt her knees give way beneath her, and she clung to the switch in despair. She shut her eyes to hide the coming disaster.

Hark! The whistle on the express. They had seen the imminent collision and were doing their best to avert it.

She, too, must do something. With a bound she sprang to the next switch, tore it open, and stood panting and moaning beside it with the bar in her hand. She must save the train, even if she buried her lover under the splintered wreck of the car.

Onward came the car, thundering over the viaduct, and just ahead of the train. It turned quickly at the switch, crossed over and shot past her into the siding. He had one look at her upturned face. It was full of love and helpless misery. She was sending him to certain destruction—to save the express train.

The instant the car passed she closed the switch and sprang back again to the other switch, and closed it just in time to see the express train sweep past in safety.

In an instant the helpless car ran into the freight-house with an awful splintering crash. The express pulled up opposite the station, and in a moment a crowd of people ran shouting and frantic up the line. Some of them had seen the whole performance and knew what it meant, but for the majority of them it was a tragic mystery.

They found Lydia upon the ground by the switch, and with the keys still clutched in her hand. What had she done? What had happened to her.

She could not answer. Nature had mercifully taken away her senses. They took her up tenderly and carried her to the station and laid her upon a seat in the waiting-room. The passengers of the two trains crowded the room and offered every aid, for in some vague manner they began to understand that she was the creditor to the value of all their lives. She had paid for their safety with costly sacrifice.

The freight train backed down to the cross-over switch and the engineers of the three trains met and began to examine the positions of the switches. A number of men also came from the express train, and among them was one who seemed in authority. He, too, examined the line carefully, and the engineers explained the matter to him and listened to his remarks with becoming deference.

The little room in the station was packed with people, idlers and others, and they could with difficulty bring him in.

"No," said one of the ladies who were trying to restore the girl. "It may be too great a shock for her. She must not see him yet."

"Make way there, gentlemen. The Superintendent of the road is here."

The crowd moved slightly, and the Superintendent advanced into the room. He took off his hat and spoke quietly to the people near, and then he stooped over the unconscious girl and softly kissed her, like as a father.

"She saved all our lives, and I fear she thinks she paid dearly for them."

Suddenly she opened her eyes and sat up bewildered.

"Where is he? Is he much hurt? Oh! Perhaps he is"—

"Let me alone, I tell you," cried a big, bold voice in the crowd, "I must go to her."

He escaped from those who would detain him, and in a moment was beside her.

Some of the people laughed in foolish joy, others cried. The more delicate and sensible were silent, for the meeting was not for words or description.

After a slight pause the Superintendent said to the young man:

"I congratulate you, sir. You were on the car?"

"Yes, sir. I was on the car, and I saved myself at the last moment by jumping off. I landed on a pile of fine coal, and got a rough tumble—and that was all. The car is a heap of splinters."

Then the Superintendent called the young man nearer to him and spoke to him privately, and presently they both shook hands as if greatly pleased over something. The young man sat down beside the girl, and whispered in her ear.

"I've got the place, Lydia. We're all right now."

Then the bells rang, and the people began to disperse towards their trains. As they departed, a small creature—probably a stockholder—objected to the proceedings, and remarked to the Superintendent that "it was not best to give fat offices to brakemen for doing nothing."

"Precisely," said the Superintendent. "But the woman did something, and, if you wish to know the full measure of her splendid deed, go put yourself in her place."—Golden Rule.

A Phenomenal Animal.

The Jefferson (Ark.) Republican reports the shooting in Little River county, in that State, recently of a phenomenal animal, having the body of a well-formed red deer, with a head that resembled a baboon, and a suit of long, brown, shaggy beard. It was killed by Dr. Colling, who says that, when he was aiming at it, its large eyes seemed to melt with pity and compassion, as though it were aware of its dreadful danger. He had no sooner fired than the creature leaped high in the air and uttered a most heart-rending scream. The doctor says it must be a species of the Mexican centaur, as described in legends as existing in certain portions of Mexico.

A DISEASE has shown itself in India and Ceylon among the leaves of coffee plants. It does not actually destroy the plant, but weakens it and thus imperils the crop. It is causing great anxiety.

APRIL [illegible]

I heard two voices [illegible]
One April day,
And what they said my heart will [illegible]
[illegible]
"Oh, love is sweet through all the busy daytime,
Oh, love is true in winter and in May [illegible],
But [illegible] the hour for Folly's playtime,
'Twas April day.

And I, to keep in tune the merry birds,
That April day,
Sang with them through [illegible] English words—
'Twas April day;
"My love is fair, I could not help but choose him;
My love is wise, oh! what could I refuse him,
This April day?

"Yet should he hear me sing, let him beware,
'Tis April day,
And if I say, 'I love him,' have his care—
'Tis April day.
The token that he sends me [illegible]
And if he sends it not, I sorely miss it;
[illegible], song, or kiss, now prey what is it,
This April day?"

Singing and laughing through the woods I [illegible]
That April day;
Until a clear, strong voice sang back again:
"Oh, April day!
This girl of smiles and tears, this little rover,
With pleasant jesting does her heart discover,
[illegible] wisdom; I, her happy lover;
Thou, April—May."

He clasped my hand and through the wood we went
That April day,
Singing like robins in our glad content,
That April day.
Oh, golden sunshine, and oh, silver raining!
Oh, earnest jesting, and oh, sweet complaining!
Two happy hearts stood watching daylight's waning
That April day.

WHEN the head of the family comes home at a shockingly late hour, deposits his weary self on the top of the piano, and while gently tinkling the keys with his major toe murmurs something about the annoyance of a squeaking bed, it is entirely safe to draw conclusions.

A MAN who appeared to have 2,378,102 pounds of care on his mind called in at a drug store last week and called for a strengthening plaster to put on his back. "Rheumatism?" queried the clerk. "Wall, no," replied the Roman, "not exactly; but my wife, she's been hintin' about whippin' the parlor carpet and takin' down the sittin' room stove, and I know just what's comin'."

THEY had been wedded but two short years. "Do you very much like to have me kiss you, George?" she said, softly stooping over him and leaving the monogram of her lips on his marble brow. "I do, indeed, dear," he said. "I just shut my eyes and try to think I feel the touch of one who was dear to me in the days gone by, before you and I were married." He had hardly finished that remark before a copy of Worcester unabridged hit him suddenly three or four times on the spot where he had been kissed.

The Boy's Wish.

The other night, about 10 o'clock, a policeman passing along Larned street east came upon a boy who was walking up and down in front of a house, and, when the lad was asked if he lived there, and why he did not go in, he replied:

"Dad's waiting for me with a whip."

"Going to dust your jacket, is he?"

"That's the programme," sighed the boy, "unless I can think up something to unfasten his mind from the subject. If I could rush in and tell him that a big fire was raging down town, or that the Mayor was dead, or some such thing, he'd be taken by surprise and forget all about dressing me down."

"And you can't think of anything else?"

"Not a thing. I wish the old gent was in the habit of stealing his wood, getting into the House of Correction, or doing something that would give me a hold on him, but he's straighter than an Alderman's elbow."—Detroit Free Press.

[illegible]

Mr. Diogenes.

The celebrated [illegible] lived in Greece. He was distinguished for his eccentricities of manners, and bad disposition. It was his daily [illegible] a lantern one day when the sun was shining brightly and went out to search for an honest man, thereby insinuating that such specimens were exceedingly scarce. When Alexander, a distinguished military gentleman, paid him a visit and inquired what he could do for him, he had the impudence to tell him to "get out of his sunshine." To complete the record of his oddities, he dressed like a beggar and lived in a tub! He was a sour, crabbed, crusty old bachelor. We infer that he had no wife, first, because history does not mention her; second, because no woman would take kindly to one of his habits, dress or manners, or aspire to become mistress of his mansion. "There was an old woman who lived in a shoe," it is true, but the woman who would live in a tub, and especially with such a companion, has not been heard from. The misanthropic spirit which possessed this man was doubtless due to disordered digestion and a biliousness, one of the prominent symptoms of which is a morose, fault-finding disposition. The tongue is heavily coated, giving rise to a bad taste, the appetite is not good, and the patient feels dull, sleepy or uneasy, and is apt to be fretful. Unfortunately, Mr. Diogenes lived several centuries before Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets were invented, a few doses of which would have relieved him of his "bile," and enabled him to find scores of "honest men" without the aid of his lantern. Under their magic influence, combined with that of the Golden Medical Discovery, to cleanse his blood, he might have been led to take a more cheerful view of life, to exchange his tub for a decent habitation, to "spruce up" in personal appearance, and at last have taken a wife to mend his clothes and his manners, both of which were in evident need of repairs, and become the happy sire of little Diogeneses who would have handed down to posterity the name, not of a cynic philosopher, but of a cheerful, healthy, happy, virtuous man!!

Going Back to Specie Prices.

The Palmer House, Chicago, the largest and finest hotel in the world, containing over 700 rooms (and the only fire-proof house in America), has reduced the price to Three Dollars per day for all rooms above the parlor floor, except parlors and rooms with baths.

Sir Rose Lambert Price, Baronet, in his interesting book of travels, entitled "Two Americas," speaks thus:

"We put up at the Palmer House Hotel, "Chicago, Ills., without any exception the "finest, best conducted, and most comfortable "one I ever saw in America. The reception-"rooms were almost regal; the bedrooms were "simply the perfection of comfort, each having "a handsome marble bath in a small chamber "attached to them; the cuisine was excellent "and liberal; attendance the best I have ever "seen; and the charges but a bit higher than "the tariff at any ordinary first-class house."

When the entire country has received a shock from the recent hotel horror, the public should be informed that there is at least one hotel in America which is absolutely and unquestionably fire-proof, stone, iron, marble and concrete being used in its construction, instead of wood, lath and plaster. This fire-proof palace cost the owner and proprietor, Mr. Potter Palmer, $750,000 more than a house built with the ordinary combustible materials.

Scotching Malaria.

It is a fact widely and amply attested that where the powerful and pernicious drug, quinine, and other mineral poisons, administered as remedies for fever and ague and bilious remittents, fail to yield more than temporary relief to the sufferer, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters scotches those tremendous epidemics most thoroughly, and, by strengthening the system and regulating its functions, protects it against malarial attacks. No resident of a locality where the above maladies prevail, or where they are likely to break out in consequence of the poisoning of the atmosphere by noxious exhalations, should fail to take practical cognizance of the above important truth, and, by a timely use of the Bitters, avoid the ravages of maladies so disastrous to the physical constitution. There is not in existence a finer tonic, corrective and defensive cordial.

A New French Revolution.

According to Emmeline Raymond, the Paris fashion correspondent of Harper's Bazar, we are on the eve of a revolution; but it will, in all probability, be bloodless, and one that American ladies will hail with joy. We refer to the description of a new costume (see Bazar, of March 31), which renders crinoline indispensable. Not the discarded styles of former days, but sensible, small-sized, elegant skirts; flat in front and close at the sides, with a graceful train at the back; admirably adapted to sustain the new Princesse and Gabrielle robes. We learn from various sources that this new Paris fashion is superseding all others.—Lady's Journal.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

BARLEY and oats grown together, one bushel of the former to two of the latter per acre, make a good forage crop for cattle and horses.

BEGINNERS at sheep-raising should content themselves with a small flock at first. The increase is rapid and fully equal to the growth of knowledge of breeding, feeding and making profitable. This advice will apply to other business than raising sheep.

FARMERS need a breed of fast-walking horses, both for their own use and for sale. A slow-walking horse is a nuisance, whether plowing, harrowing, or harvesting on the farm, or for cart, truck, dray, saddle, or carriage use in the city. Careful attention to this feature would pay better in the long run than breeding for trotters.

AS a green food for cattle, corn sown broadcast is coming into general use. Clover has been a pretty sure stand-by for many years. Rye, which comes early when sown in the fall, is also recommended in some quarters, but it is quite inferior to either of the others. The corn can be ready for feeding in August, when pasturage is frequently dried up, or it can be cut for fodder and cured for winter.

THE Providence Journal says: "Every man should regard his orchard as entirely his own, and the gunner who trespasses upon it a poacher amenable to the law. It does not seem that there are half as many birds as there were fifty years ago, and the insects have increased in greater proportion. Birds soon find out where they are safe, as do the wild ducks who visit the cove, and if shot a desert the farms. Their office of destroying the insects is one of very great importance to the farmer and fruit grower."

CURE FOR FOOT-ROT.—Take strong new lime (if unslacked the better); put it in a box or trough with sides six or eight inches high; put in water to make it like very thin paste, so that it will be about two inches deep in the box; place the box so that you can drive the sheep through it, and drive them through it several times during the day of fixing the lime. Repeat this two or three times, at intervals of about two weeks each, and it will cure the foot-rot.

HEN MANURE.—A correspondent of Colman's Rural World says that he saw an onion bed remarkable for the size and luxuriance of the plants. On inquiring the cause he found that the soil had been enriched with hen manure. On the same farm he had seen results similarly beneficial when the manure had been applied to corn, by mixing it with the soil of the hill, and then planting the corn. For gardens this manure is excellent, especially when plaster or ashes is mixed with it.

HORSE COLLARS.—The Valley Farmer says collars are, or should be, so made as to throw the chief force on the lower part of the shoulder. The horse can apply but little strength on the upper part, and for this reason breast collars are coming greatly into vogue, as the strength is exerted on the lower part of the shoulder. The collar should be purchased of the proper size. Just before putting it on the first time, immerse it in water, letting it remain about a minute, and immediately put it on to work. The collar, by being wet, will adapt itself to the shoulder, and should dry on the horse. When taken off, it should be left in the same shape it occupied on the horse, and ever after you will have a snug-fitting collar and no wounds.

ASPARAGUS.—Nearly everybody enjoys this early vegetable, but how few have it in abundance. It is an easy thing to get and requires less care than any other garden esculent. A packet of seed costing 10 cents sown this spring will make plants enough for a large bed, and next season they should be planted in place. The ground for an asparagus bed should be made peculiarly deep and rich. Our plan is to put the plants in rows a foot apart and at a distance of eight inches in the row. Every fourth row skip one, leaving an alley in which to walk. A bed once made will last a decade and requires only a coating of rotted manure each year to keep it in excellent condition.

SHEEP RAISING.—This branch of business, like almost every other, has had its ups and downs, but it is a question whether any business has paid better for a series of years. The rapid increase of sheep is very favorable to farmers of small means who wish to engage in wool-growing. Sheep raising is too much neglected in the West. The animal that furnishes clothing, food and light, which eats what other animals reject, which crops hillsides too steep for other creatures to ascend, is entitled to vastly more credit than it receives.

About the House.

STRAWBERRY SALAD.—Pick, wash, drain and toss crisp, tender lettuce leaves, shred them up fine in the salad bowl, and pour over them some strawberry juice, and serve at once.

NUTRITIOUS COMPOSITION.—Take equal quantities of sago and cocoa, mix them, put a table-spoonful in a pint of boiling water, and boil the whole together for a few minutes with constant stirring.

REGULARITY.—It is not only necessary that our diet should be wholesome, but also that it should be taken at regular periods. Some persons imagine that long fasting will atone for excess, but it is not so; it generally makes matters worse.

TO MAKE EXCELLENT MINCE-MEAT.—Take a pound of lean beef and boil it one hour; then chop it as fine as possible; suet, raisins, currants and apples, one pound each; two ounces of candied citron; a quarter of a pound of almonds. Chop each separately until you cannot distinguish what they are; then mix the whole well and add one pound of sugar and a gill of brandy.

STRAWBERRY GEM TARTS.—Make large-sized gems in the usual manner from fine Graham flour, being careful not to bake them too hard. When done let them stand ten or fifteen minutes to steam, then split open and fill each half with strawberries with or without sugar, add a spoonful of strawberry juice sweetened, if it will hold so much, and serve at once.

SALERATUS.—There can be no doubt that the free use of saleratus, so much consumed in bread, is excessively injurious to the human system. It is particularly liable to induce muscular prostration or paralysis, and is sure to injure the digestive organs. Of course it is most fatal to children, whose delicate organization is more sensitive than that of grown persons.

HOW TO SHAPE ROLLS.—Roll out the dough when quite light, and cut with a good-sized cutter or tumbler. Dip a clean feather into melted butter and brush lightly over the dough that is cut out; then fold each circle into a crescent or half-moon shape; prick on the top, and place in the flat biscuit pan to rise. When very light bake full twenty minutes in an oven so hot that one could not hold the hand in it long enough to count more than twenty without great discomfort.

GAME of all kinds, birds, rabbits or deer, can be kept sweet a long time by finely pulverized charcoal in a thin muslin bag placed inside the game. Change the charcoal every day, and wash the meat clean before cooking. Pare a fresh lemon very carefully, without breaking the thin, white inside skin, put it inside a wild duck and keep it there for forty-eight hours, and all the fishy taste so disagreeable in wild fowls will be removed. The lemon should be removed and a fresh one put in its place as often as every twelve hours.—Mrs. H. W. Beecher, in Christian Union.

EXPULSION OF FLIES.—We copy the following from the London Garden: The Rev. George Mearee Drought, writing from Ireland to to the Times, says: "For three years I have lived in a town, and during that time my sitting-room has been free from flies, three or four only walking about my breakfast-table, while all my neighbors' rooms were crowded. I often congratulated myself on my escape, but never knew the reason of it until two days ago. I then had occasion to move my goods to another house, while I remained on for two days longer. Among other things moved were two boxes of geraniums and calceolarias, which stood in my window, the windows being open to full extent, top and bottom. The boxes were not gone half an hour before my room was as full of flies as those around me. This, to me, is a new discovery, and perhaps it may serve to encourage others in that which is always a source of pleasure, and which now proves also to be a source of comfort, viz., window gardening."

Poor Carlotta Again.

The Empress Carlotta of Mexico has not improved in mental health. Since the death of her favorite medical attendant, who had managed to secure her confidence, the unfortunate princess has appeared gloomy. The cessation of his visits caused her great irritation, and she has now become violent. The doctor at Gheel was the only person to whom she would speak. She evidently misses his visits without having a proper sense of the fact, for she never asks about him nor demands that he should be sent for, but the want is manifested by an increase of irritation. The visits of the Queen of the Belgians do not calm the nervous excitement of the Empress, and the King never shows himself when he visits the Chateau of Tervueren. From the apartments of the Empress he can, without being observed, see her, and lament without restraint her sad condition. Setting aside her mental malady, the widow of the unfortunate Emperor Maximilian is physically well.

A Singular Crime.

One William Smith, of Brooklyn, becoming tired of married restraints, conceived the idea of putting an end to his wife by a process as fertile in ingenuity as it was diabolical in cruelty. He fastened her to the top of her cook-stove by ropes passing underneath and connecting her hands and feet. Then he built up a rousing fire of coal, and left her to her fate. The stove was one of those which are the pet aversion of house-wives in general, and Mrs. Smith in particular. She had often and again poured out upon it the vials of her wrath, because it would persist, despite all precautions to the contrary, in burning the bread on the bottom without baking it on the top. But it is to this much-abused peculiarity that Mrs. Smith owes her life. Doubtless the stove very soon became uncomfortably warm all over, but it grew red hot at the bottom, and, after severely burning one of her arms, burned in two the ropes, and permitted her to escape without any mortal injuries.

Tree Felling.

The latest chemical notion is to fell trees by electricity. The two ends of the copper wires of a galvanic battery are connected with a platinum wire, which, of course, instantly becomes red-hot, and while so is gently see-sawed across the trunk of the tree to be felled, until it burns its way through. It is calculated that a tree which would require two hours' hard chopping to bring down can be cut through by this process in fifteen minutes.

AN EDITOR ASSAULTED.

A Man Hires Two Mercenaries and Attacks a Philadelphia Editor—Pusillanimity of the Attacking Party.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

Philadelphia was thrown into a spasm of excitement this morning by an assault upon Col. Alex. McClure, editor of the Times, by Nat McKay, whom the Times has repeatedly denounced as a plundering naval contractor. The assault took place on Chestnut street in the middle of the day, when that thoroughfare was thronged with people. Col. McClure was walking along with ex-Gov. Curtin, entirely without apprehension of danger. Neither of them noticed the stalwart form of McKay until he had come square up alongside of Col. McClure. His face flushed and paled as he said, with some profanity: "I will settle with you now, myself." As he spoke he drew from his breast a small plaited leather whip, and drew it to strike Col. McClure, but his awkwardness and cowardice so unnerved him, even with two hired ruffians at his heels, that, before he could bring his whip down, Col. McClure sprang upon him, seized him firmly by the throat with both hands, and held him as if in a vise. McKay gagged and struggled to extricate himself, but in a few seconds it was manifest that he was entirely helpless, and that he must speedily fall at the mercy of the man he had assailed. All this was the work almost of an instant, and the two hired "pals" of McKay at once rushed in upon Col. McClure, and, in less time than it could be told, one who gives his name at the magistrate's as John Conlan struck McClure a strong blow on the back of the head and followed it with another on the left ear. A passing citizen seized the fellow called Conlan and held him from further blows. While Conlan was striking Col. McClure from behind another "pal" of McKay rushed upon Col. McClure in front and struck him over the left eye with some instrument, probably a blackjack, and was about to repeat the blow when he was thrown back by ex-Gov. Curtin, and in the crowd he made his escape without being identified by any one present. In the meantime Col. McClure held McKay by the throat until he was released by the interference of the crowd and the officers. McKay and the so-called Conlan were taken in custody by the police, who asked Col. McClure what he wanted done with them. He answered that the hired ruffians should be held, but that he could settle the matter with McKay. It is evident that McKay had worked his courage up to an attempt to horse-whip McClure, believing that, as he was much the more rugged of the two, he could master Col. McClure and degrade him by a public whipping, but, consulting his fears, he employed two ruffians to aid him in case he should fail, and thus save himself from getting flogged instead of flogging the hated editor. His one attendant, who gives his name as Conlan, is a New York rough, with his professional card covering his whole face. He was unnoticed in the affair until he sneaked up behind Col. McClure and struck two rapid blows on the back of the head and ear. It is evident, also, that thieving was one of the purposes of McKay's "pals," as ex-Gov. Curtin's watch-chain was torn from him and Col. McClure's was torn off also, and neither of them had been in a position to have their chains taken by accident, and the fact that neither of their chains were found proves that they were taken by the thieves. Both saved their watches by the neck-chains breaking a few links from the stem.

The Causes of Violent Death.

The violent deaths in Great Britain in 1874 were no less than 17,920, the highest number ever registered. There were 18 executions and 1,592 suicides, so that 16,310 may be classed as unexpected. Railways killed 1,249, horse conveyances 1,313, and it is noted that those modes of conveyance which are mostly peculiar to cities were not responsible for this great slaughter. Street, or so-called horse railroads, killed 62 persons, omnibuses 55, cabs 61, and carriages 82, and these numbers show how great is the skill and care, exercised in the crowded streets of cities. The source of the remaining 1,053 deaths by horses is not given in our authority (a Scotch paper), but it is probable that exercise in the saddle had much to do with them. There were 942 deaths in coal mines, and 118 in copper, tin, iron and other mines. Lightning killed 25, sunstroke 90, and cold 114. There were 461 persons poisoned, about one-third being suicides. The bite of a fox, of a rat, of a leech, the scratch of a cat, and the sting of a hornet each killed one person, and two were stung to death by wasps. Of other noteworthy causes of death, it is mentioned that a girl 14 years old died in childbed.—Galaxy for May.

Habits of Ants.

In a recent lecture (one of a series) on the habits of ants, the scientific English banker, Sir John Lubbock, said that even after a year's separation ants recognize each other, and old companions are amicably received, whereas strangers, even when introduced in the mixed company of old friends, have a bad time. Slavery in certain kinds is a positive institution, the Amazon breed having slaves to clean and feed them. Rather than be at the trouble to do so themselves they will die, though food be close by. They allow a curious, blind woodlouse house-room, but as a kind of scavenger, and not from hospitable motives.

Milk as Food.

Chemical analysis discloses the fact that among the many articles used for food there are only two, wheat and milk, which contain all the elements of the human body, and in the proper proportion. Other articles, such as butter, sugar, sirup, and fat of all kinds, are wholly carbonaceous, or heat-producing, so that, if a human being were to attempt to live on these articles alone, his brain and muscles would starve. By actual experiment it has been found that a man could not survive two months on such a diet.

THE new Jury law of Florida provides that when in any case, civil or criminal, a knowledge of reading, writing and arithmetic is necessary to enable a juror to understand the evidence to be offered, he may be challenged if he does not possess such qualifications.

Reliable Evidence.

MR. H. R. STEVENS: Dear Sir—I will most cheerfully add my testimony to the great number you have already received in favor of your great and good medicine, VEGETINE, for I do not think enough can be said in its praise, for I was troubled over thirty years with that dreadful disease, Catarrh, and had such bad coughing spells that it would seem as though I never could breathe any more, and VEGETINE has cured me; and I do feel to thank God all the time that there is so good a medicine as VEGETINE, and I also think it one of the best medicines for coughs and weak, sinking feelings at the stomach, and advise everybody to take the VEGETINE, for I can assure them it is one of the best medicines that ever was.

(PATENT APPLIED FOR)

A Perfect Anti-Septic and Disinfectant Bath and Toilet Soap.

Takes the Place of all other Soaps for Daily use in the Family.

Manufactured from the purest vegetable Oils with the addition of that greatest known Anti-Septic and disinfectant.

SALICYLIC ACID,

Making the most healthful, the most perfect, and the most economical Bath and Toilet Soap ever offered to the public.

Indorsed by the the medical profession and attested by thousands.

AS THE GREAT PREVENTIVE

In all cases of blood poisoning whether arising from malarial or miasmatic exhalations, defective sewerage, or any other causes.

Its constant use prevents the contracting of contagious diseases, typhoid, scarlet and all malarial fevers. It is invaluable, and should be used in all districts where fever and ague prevails as it is the greatest known preventive to that disease. It is of immense value in the cure of all skin disease; a trial proves it, and its use prevents contracting them. It is a special boon to school children who are constantly exposed. It is the most healthful bath soap for infants, worth its weight in gold in the nursery. It is no more expensive than other toilet soaps of good quality It goes further and its great superiority is bringing it into universal use. It has no disagreeable odor and is absolutely pure.

Extensively used in hospitals and sick rooms by order of physicians.

For sale by all druggists and grocers. Sample box containing three cakes sent post paid on receipt of 75 cents, Liberal terms to the trade.

Scarcity of Money.

There is no doubt but the present condition of all kinds of business and industry is fearfully depressed, and it behooved every family to look carefully to their expenses. Spring is coming on when children are liable to Croup, Whooping Cough, etc. Coughs and Colds will prevail everywhere, and Consumption, with other throat and lung diseases, will carry off many.—These diseases should not be neglected. Doctor's bills are expensive, and we would advise our people to use Boschee's German Syrup. It never has failed One bottle at 75 cents will keep your whole family well during the winter. Two doses will relieve any case. Sold in all towns in the United States, and by your druggist F. E. Davenport.

In the Sweet By-and-By.

Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touaist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine" It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. With the Tourists, the San Juan Guide keeps fitting company, and the two publications are mailed free to all writing for one or both to T. J. ANDERSON, Topka K.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but naturla that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to ALTENBURG & LOCKWOOD.

Lambert's Luck.

Morriston (Tenn.) Gazette.

There is a strange story, but nevertheless true one, to be given you for your readers. In the early history of East Tennessee, about 1784, as near as can be determined, three men by the name of Patterson, all brothers, visited the New Market valley, with the intention of buying the rich and extensive lands near what is known as Panther Springs. They brought with them a large amount of money, supposed to be from $20.000 to $50.000 in Mexican coin. While looking over the lands they were murdered and their money and other articles of value taken from their person by a hunter, and their bones were burnt in a cave near what at that time was known as the "Buffalo Crossing," now known as the Grindstone Hollow, which place was also the rendezvous of the murderer whom it is supposed fearing that the Pattersons might be missed from the neighborhood, fled to the western part of Virginia. There he died, and on his death bed he gave a way bill that his hidden trearure might be found. Some forty years ago, say the old citizens, two men came with the way bill, giving a description of the place, and every effort was made to find the money, but to no purpose, and after several weeks of hard labor gave up the search. Now for the sequel:

During the heavy snow of the past winter a man by the name of John Lambert and a man from the vicinity of Panther Springs went hunting, and tracked a coon in a small hole by the rock, and remarked that he would get the gentleman yet, if he wasn't pretty sharp. He subsequently went back (it is supposed after the snow had melted) and found two rocks over the hole; he moved them and saw below a vast cavern. He returned home and procured a bed cord, tied the same to a walnut tree and descended into it for some 100 feet, and there found the treasure spread out upon a rock, with an old Mexican saddle blanket spread over it. The blanket had decayed until nothing but the "filling" remained. He also found one saddle and six Mexican stirrups.

Lambert made these statements to a friend of his and showed him a pocket full of money. He was a day laborer and did not know what it was to have any amount of money.

Your correspondent visited the section of country while the people were making excavations where Lambert had filled the cave and witnessed with his own eyes nearly one-half of a human skeleton taken out, and all other signs made a hundred years ago. Lambert and his family have departed to some unknown country with the money. These are facts as can be proven by any number of the best citizens of Panther Springs.

Notes and Items of Early Times.

BY MAJOR M'FADEN.

We were living on pre-historic and sacred ground. There were remains of beaver dams all over the prairies. There is one at the east end of Beaver Lake over a mile long, and from four to seven feet high, which plainly tells that this was once the home of the beavers.

At one time Messrs. Hollenbeck, Dye and others were making a road through the prairies, crossing the Blue Grass, and in cutting and filling up through a swamp came upon the bone of a mighty mammoth, with tremendious teeth and tusks. The ribs looked like old crooked rafters or a canal boat ribs. The teeth weighed seven to eight pounds each, and the tusks were nine feet long, and ten inches in diameter at the base. They were so crooked that they formed about threequarters of a circle. Being so crooked, it was hard to tell what they could use them for. Some thought that they used them to pull down small trees to live on; which may be the case, as I found some fossilized limbs among the bones, which he had probably eaten before miring down. He would have weighed many tons and made the very earth and the leaves on the trees tremble with his heavy tread. He must have mired in the quicksand and gone down stern foremost as the tail and big bones were at the bottom; then the ribs and back bones as large as nail kegs, and the forepart, head, teeth and tusks on top. There are places of quicksand there which are dangerous yet. I have come very near miring down myself, and have thrown my hat out several times to let my friends know where I went down; but I always managed to get out. Mr. George W. Hendee, who now lives near Royal Center, bought the bones of the finders and paid them $350 and eighty acres of land. I drew up the contract for them. He has the bones and tusks at his house, and they can be seen at any time.

There is a droll little animal about the size of a ground squirrel, called a gopher, and you might live among them all your life and never see one. You cannot tell from whence they came or whither they are going. They come at night and are gone in the morning, leaving hundreds of piles of sand about as large as a half bushel, and not a hole footprint of any kind to let you know that they have been there. It has always been a great curiosity to me to know how they make those sand piles without making marks of some kind. The regular bittern is found in the prairies and make a noise like driving a stake hence they are called stake drivers or thunder pumpers. They are good ventriloquists, as one may be driving a stake within a hundred yards of you and it will sound as if it was a half a mile away.

I could mimic the wild animals so well that I could call up the night owls and wolves in day time and shoot them. I have often read of hoop snakes and joint or glass snakes and longed to see one. One day I was down on the prairie and came across a strange looking snake. It was about two feet long, was of a pale blue, milky color, and looked as if it had just been varnished. I tapped it on the back with a stick, when it broke or separated into several pieces. I cried "Eureka! Eureka!" and sure enough it was a glass or joint snake, the kind I had been looking for all my life. I had heard, too, that if not disturbed the pieces would come together again and "hitch on." I waited two or three hours, but they didn't "jine." A few days after, near the same place, I found half or three-quarters of the same kind of a snake, wrigling around," and I concluded that the snake was still looking for the other pieces.

Now for some ridiculous notions and ideas persons have in reference to cranes When we first came there were a few large cranes, about six feet high and as white as the driven snow, except their bills, legs, feet and the tips of their wings, which were perfectly black. They are the finest specimen of the bird kind I ever saw. They always go in pairs are very cautious and wild, and it is almost impossible to kill one. They are so rare now that a good specimen is worth $100. I have not seen one of them for years, although there are plenty of sand-hill cranes left. Now I will come to the point and tell it the short way. A sand-hill crane is about four and a half feet high, and of a dusky gray color, while the white crane is about six feet high, and some believe that when a sand-hill crane arrives at a certain age, say four or five years old, he turns into and becomes a white crane. Even my learned friend, Judge Biddle, has such an idea, and took me over to his place on the Island and read Audubon to me by the hour to prove that such was the case. I then and there told the Judge that any man who could or would believe that a sand-hill crane four and a half feet high, could jump into and become a white crane six feet high, was worse than the Indians, who believe that rattle-snakes turn into raccoons in the winter, and back again in the spring. I have thought it strange that some of our most learned men will persist in believing, everything they read. The funniest thing in the world is to see a big lot of sand-hill cranes have a grand dance on the prairie. They will dance, turn somersaults, stand on their heads, flop their wings, hop 'round "swing their partners," and "balance all" as natural as life. I have stood for hours looking at them, and laughed myself to death, revived and laughed again.

One day a squaw with two little Indians came to our cabin nearly starved to death. We did the best thing we could for them, and kept them all night. When my mother was feeding those poor little Indians, I thought of the beautiful words of our Saviour, "Feed my lambs, and as much as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

In 1846 I came in fresh from Indian Creek, enlisted and went to the Mexican war. I was only eighteen years old, but was as tall as I am now, and about as fat and crooked as a grape-vine. I looked as if I hadn't been caught more than a week, but I soon got straightened out, went through the war, and fought, bled and died for my country and came home alive. I suppose the happiest time of my life was when I was elected Fourth Corporal of the Cass County Volunteers, at the mouth of the Rio Grande River.

One winter, when the snow was on the ground, John McCauly, Muns, King and myself went out deer hunting. John wounded a deer early in the morning, and we ran it all day. It would run ahead and lie down, and then run again before we could get near enough to shoot it again. We were about to give it up, when we heard some dogs barking below us. We went on, and found that little George Kistler, who now lives near Royal Center, had caught our deer with his dogs. We offered him part of it, as he was entitled to half of the meat according to hunter's rules, but he declined it with christian fortitude and would not take any, saying he had plenty at home. I have often thought of George since, and although that was over twenty years ago, we have killed many a deer together since on the Kankakee. The only thing I have against George was that he would eat dog-fish, and smack his lips for more.

The first prairie-chicken I ever killed on the wing I was out hunting west of Royal Centre with Dr. James Thompson Geo. W. Hendee, Charley Foskett and Geo. Conn, (now dead), and a grouse flew up in front of me. I banged away, down it came, and I was happy.

In 1850 I run against my friend, D. D. Pratt, for the Legislature, and Robert Mehaffie, of Boone township, and H. P. Biddle were opposing candidates for Senatorial delegate to the Constitutional Convention. The district was then composed of the counties of Cass and Howard. Mr. Mehaffie and myself traveled through Cass and Howared on horse-back. At that time there were very few roads, and we often had to take a cow path through the woods. Once, in riding through a plum-thicket, a forked limb caught Robert under the chin and dragged him back off his horse before he could stop. Now Robert was a strong believer in foreordination and predestination. He got up in a bad frame of mind, and while I scraped the mud off of him with a piece of hickory bark I told him that he must not mind such trifles; that it had been foreordained from the foundation of the world that he should be pulled off his horse in that way. That rather comforted him, and we rode on. We arrived at Kokomo and found stumps standing in the public square where the court house now stands. We passed on out into the country and stayed all night at a house. When we went to bed we found it full of bedbugs. I told Robert how to get clear of them, but he would not harken unto me and remained in bed. I took a sheet and gave it a good shake, wrapped myself up tight in it from head to foot, and laid out on the porch on two chairs, and the bugs could not get at me. Some time in the night some of the young folks came home from a singing school, and were nearly frightened to death at seeing me lying there. They thought I was a ghost, and I did look like the remains of some one. In the morning Robert looked as if he had an attack of the chicken-pox or measles. Before we started I asked the man what church he leaned towards. He said that he did not belong to any, and was a Democrat. I remarked to Robert, "May the Lord have mercy on that man's soul." He said "amen," and we rode on. As the district at that time was Whig, we were both beaten, and that was my first experience in politics. Robert took it rather hard, but I consoled him by telling him to lay low and gather strength, and he said he would.

After I came to town to live my friend Dr. Jerolaman, took me out to his plantation, in Boone township, to hunt chickens, ducks, &c. As we had no dog, he scared them up and I killed them, he not being good "on the wing" and could not draw his breath true enough to hit them. We had hunted most of the day and got some birds, when in the afternoon we came to a pond that was full of wild ducks. The Doctor said that, as he had not killed anything yet, he thought he could kill some of those ducks, and he would like to have something to show when we went to town. He made such a pathetic appeal to me I told him to take the gun and try his luck. He had to crawl about a hundred yards through the grass to a bunch of bushes near the pond. The wind was blowing, and as he looked up out of the grass, his locks fluttering in the breeze he looked for all the world like a prairie wolf. At last he fired at the flock of ducks, (and here the supreme dominion of fortune was made manifest.(He did not get a feather. Let me say that the great law of providential interference or special providence guides and protects the poorest and lowest animal as well as the human family. Many a time have I fired into a flock of quails, pigeons or ducks, expecting to get a dozen or so and not get one. I have fired at a deer broadside and close to them and never touch a hair, and there is nothing truer than that there is not a sparrow falls to the ground without our Heavenly Father knowing it.

But here we are again. The space allotted to me is all taken up, and the printers say I must stop, and I have not got you to the Indians on the Tippecanoe or Devil's Lake yet. I cannot even finish up on the lost Indian as I promised you I would. I am sorry that I will have to continue this, my last article, until next week. I cannot do justice to that Indian short of a column and you will not loose anything by waiting till then. I will have him dead by that time sure, and then I will close by telling you how he starved and died, unburied, unhonored and unsung, how he could not help himself and no one to help him. My feelings would not permit me to close the story now and you must give me time to become tranquil.

We will close by singing.

Jesus sought me when a stranger,
Wandering from the fold of God,
He to rescue me from danger,
Interposed his precious blood.

Ladies and Gentlemen of Audurn and Vicinity.

I am aware the usual notice of selling at cost is stale, obsolate and even doubtful yet I frankly confess I will sell my entire stock at actual cost. I am truthful when I assert this. To convince yourself please call and examine goods and prices.

NEW POEM BY LONGFELLOW.

Castles in Spain.

How much of my young heart, O Spain,
Went out to thee in days of yore!
What dreams romantic filled my brain,
And summoned back to life again
The Paladins of Charlemagne,
The Cid Campeador!

And shapes more shadowy than these,
In the dim twilight half revealed;
Phoenician galleys on the seas,
The Roman camps like hives of bees,
The Goth uplifting from his knees
Pelayo on his shield.

It was these memories perchance,
From annals of remotest eld,
That lent the colors of romance
To every trivial circumstance,
And changed the form and countenance
Of all that I beheld.

Old towns, whose history lies hid
In monkish chronicle or rhyme—
Burgos, the birthplace of the Cid,
Zamora and Valladolid,
Toledo, built and walled amid
The wars of Wamba's time;

The long, straight line of the highway,
The distant town that seems so near,
The peasants in the fields, that stay
Their toil to cross themselves and pray,
When from the belfry at midday
The Angelus they hear;

The crosses in the mountain pass,
Mules gay with tassels, the loud din
Of muleteers, the tethered ass
That crops the dusty wayside grass,
And cavaliers with spurs of brass
Alighting at the inn;

White hamlets hidden in fields of wheat,
White cities slumbering by the sea,
White sunshine flooding square and street,
Dark mountain-ranges, at whose feet
The river-beds are dry with heat,
All was a dream to me.

Yet something sombre and severe
O'er the enchanted landscape reigned;
A terror in the atmosphere,
As if King Philip listened near,
Or Torquemada, the austere,
His ghostly sway maintained.

The softer Andalusian skies
Dispelled the sadness and the gloom;
There Cadiz by the seaside lies,
And Seville's orange-orchards rise,
Making the land a paradise
Of beauty and of bloom.

There Cordova is hidden among
The palm, the olive, and the vine;
Gem of the South, by poets sung,
And in whose mosque Almanzor hung
As lamps the bells that once had rung
At Compostella's shrine.

But over all the rest supreme,
The star of stars, the cynosure,
The artist's and the poet's theme,
The young man's vision, the old man's dream—
Granada by its winding stream,
The city of the Moor!

And there the Alhambra still recalls
Aladdin's palace of delight;
Allah il Allah! through its halls
Whispers the fountain as it falls;
The Darro darts beneath its walls,
The hills with snow are white.

Ah yes, the hills are white with snow,
And cold with blasts that bite and freeze;
But in the happy vale below
The orange and pomegranate grow,
And wafts of air toss to and fro
The blossoming almond-trees.

The Vega cleft by the Xenil,
The fascination and allure
Of the sweet landscape chain the will,
The traveler lingers on the hill,
His parted lips are breathing still
The last sigh of the Moor.

How like a ruin overgrown
With flowers that hide the rents of time
Stands now the past that I have known;
Castles in Spain, not built of stone,
But of white summer cloud, and blown
Into this little mist of rhyme!

MISS MOUNTJOY'S LESSON;

Or, Pride Must Have a Fall.

CHAPTER I.

The long, slanting rays of a golden sunset were streaming in through the crimson stained glass windows of Clarice Mountjoy's elegant boudoir, and lighting up in subdued splendor the costly appliances and luxurious ornaments that filled the apartment.

Before the lofty mirror sat a haughty, imperial woman, upon whose raven black masses of hair, arched eyebrows of the same ebon hue, and flashing eyes of midnight darkness, the rose-tint from the window fell in becoming addition to her costly toilet.

A frown rose on her brow, and she tapped her delicately-booted foot in vexation and impatience.

"To think that, after all the pains I have taken to have the jewels collected, I am unable to wear them to the only evening party I care a straw for. Where is the use of having diamonds and pearls if we haven't a suitable toilet to appear in?"

She pulled the slight silken cord by her side, whose tinkling summons brought her maid.

"Felice, I must have my dove-colored moire for this evening, come what will. Put on your cloak and run down to Madame Rucho, and tell her I cannot think of going without it, if I must wait until 12 o'clock."

Obedient to her imperious mistress' commands, the lady's maid departed to execute her commission.

"I am determined to wear it, and my elegant diamonds with it! Sir Irvine Tressell shall see me in my splendor, and he will soon decide that English ladies can surpass the foreigners he has danced with."

She rose and looked searchingly in the mirror.

"People say I am beautiful. Well, I know I am; I have every desirable feature necessary to beauty, from my head to my feet; but all is naught to me if it does not win me his love—the love I have cherished for months—the love I must win, and win soon—to-night!"

Her beautiful lips were parted in a circle of grateful pride, as her eyes wandered over her feet, face and form.

"Ah, Sir Irvine Tressell, you little know Clarice Mountjoy would barter life, soul—honor, I had almost said—for your sake!"

A timid rap at the door dispelled her soliloquy, and she turned with a gesture of impatience to the intruder.

"Lilias, how often have I requested you not to annoy me when I am alone? You seem to have a singularly deep regard for this room. Do you want anything?"

The dark hazel eyes of the intruder—"Lilias" she was called—flashed a moment darkly; but the voice, low, sweet and modulated, replied: "I am very sorry if I disturbed you. I merely dropped in to see if I could be of any assistance to you in your preparations for Lady Armstrong's reception."

A selfish smile played over the carmine lips of Clarice Mountjoy.

"Oh, will you help me get my moire finished, if the dressmaker cannot? I will give you my old blue silk, if you will."

The lips of Lilias Bradley curled scornfully; but, as before, she curbed the rising anger.

"Thank you, Cousin Clarice, I do not need the old blue silk. I will assist Felice to finish your dress when she returns, if you think you must wear it without fail."

"Indeed I must, and shall, too! For Sir Irvine Tressell says a golden moire with diamonds is the most bewitching costume he ever saw. The Princess Louise wore one at a presentation, and he is constantly reminding me how much I resemble her."

Lilias made no reply, but gazed thoughtfully out of the window.

"I hope you are not envious of my good luck, Lilias Bradley, because I happen to be an heiress, and the future wife of the splendid Baronet, Sir Irvine Tressell?"

A smile, half-pitying, half-amused, lighted up Lilias' sweet, pale face.

"Oh, no, Clarice; I was only wondering if, with all your wealth, your aristocratic lovers, and dreams of future happiness, you were really as happy as I."

"As you, Lilias Bradley!"

Clarice almost shrieked the words, so ridiculous did she regard the comparison.

"Yes," returned Lilias, quietly. "I would not change places for all the world."

An angry frown contracted Clarice's white brow.

"Here comes Felice, thank goodness! Now, Lilias, you will have to exert every effort to finish it by midnight."

"I think we can complete it by nine or ten; that will give you sufficient time to dress. I, too, must leave it at that hour, to fulfill my engagement."

A blush overspread Lilian's face.

"That poor lover of yours again tonight? I should think you'd hate a man as poor as you say William Sherrard is. Why don't you marry a rich one, who can support you handsomely?"

There was a contemptuous imperiousness in Clarice's tones that brought the blood rushing to Lilias' cheeks.

"Because I never would marry for money; I will never give my hand to a man because he has a fortune at his disposal. Wealth is a great gift, but it does not purchase happiness."

"How do you know? You have never enjoyed wealth."

A quiet, strange smile—one that had annoyed Clarice many times since the orphan Lilias had come to their uncle's, six months before—lighted the sweet face, disclosing the pearly teeth.

"True, I am not in the enjoyment of wealth; yet, judging from yourself, dear Clarice, I should conclude it did not bring bliss."

"But it will, when I have once attained my object—the dream I have cherished for the half-year you have been here. When I am once the wife of Sir Irvine Tressell, the only man I ever loved or ever shall love, I defy anything to make me unhappy. His love is all I ask."

A bright smile, that made her really lovely, lighted her midnight eyes as she thought of him—her idol.

"You've never seen him, Lilias, I believe," she went on to say. "He is the most handsome man I ever saw!"

"I think not. You know you requested me never to come in the parlor when you had company."

"He is tall, and dark, and very graceful, and so polite!"

Clarice's voice was enthusiasm personified.

"Yes, so is my William," returned Lilias, thoughtfully.

"William!" ejaculated Clarice, indignantly, "Why, Lilias Bradley, they are not to be mentioned in the same breath!"

"Cousin Clarice, be thoughtful! Do not speak slightingly of my betrothed husband because he happens to be poor."

The gentle hazel eyes were dark as Lilias spoke; but she was answered by a harsh laugh.

"Nor of you, because you happen to be poor, and a dependent on my charity and your Uncle Peter's."

With a proud flushing of her cheeks, and a flashing of her eyes, Lilias tossed the expensive moire off her lap.

"Never has that been said of a Bradley before, Clarice Mountjoy; never shall it be repeated. Tell me with your lips if I do not earn my bread and clothes? Tell me if the assistance I render to you in every imaginable way does not merit more than any servant-woman would receive for her services?"

"Oh, yes, I suppose so; but, after all, I can get on as well with only Felice. Are you not going to finish my dress? Do, Lilias, just this once, and I'll confess you are not only indispensable, but absolute mistress of the establishment. Please do, Lil, for you know I am dying to wear my newly-reset diamonds—the old family fire-diamonds, you know. I should expire from disappointment if I did not realize the expectations I have anticipated for this evening. Sir Irvine Tressell will not fail to be there, and in my moire and diamonds I shall be so irresistible he cannot avoid a proposal. It is on the tapis, I know, for he is all devotion."

"Your dress is done, Clarice. And now I must leave you to attend to Uncle Peter's supper."

CHAPTER II.

"And my darling is willing to intrust her happiness to me, poor and friendless though I may be?"

Lilias' lover drew her beautiful head to his breast, as he entwined his arms about her.

"You may be poor and friendless in one sense, William, but are you not wealthy in my love? Will not our home, if unblessed with all the luxuries of riches, be abundant in peace and contentment?"

"Spoken like the dear, true little woman you are! And now, dearest, I must impose my first command upon you. Will you obey?"

He smoothed her hair playfully off the clear, white forehead, and glanced mischievously in her deep, true eyes.

"On second thought, I think I'll tell you first what I desire you to do. Listen, dear Lilias, and blush as much as you please; but don't turn your face away."

And, in truth, the pink tints were already coming and going on cheek and brow.

"Lilias, darling," and his voice grew strange and earnest, "we must be married to-night. No, do not start; not for worlds, unless you wish it; but I have certain particular reasons for it, to gratify which would delight me beyond expression. I have got an Archbishop's special license, and I have made all the requisite arrangements."

For a moment, Lilias buried her face against his shoulder; then she lifted it, rosy and happy, to the dark, flushed one bending over her.

"A look can make no difference, William. I have tried you, and proved you; we love each other fondly. William, I will be your wife to-night."

His handsome face lighted up with a proud, triumphant smile, and he kissed her fondly, just as approaching footsteps warned them.

* * * * *

"Lilias, Lilias, where is the key of Uncle Peter's safe? I want the diamonds; it is high time I was off, and Sir Irvine Tressell never likes to see a lady later than ten."

Clarice came rapidly down the stairs to the apartment where, in the shade, Lilias and her lover stood. She could not see them at all plainly, for the gas was turned down to a twilight-darkness.

"On the ebony cabinet in my room, Clarice."

As Lilias replied, Clarice frowned in displeasure.

"It seems to me, Miss Bradley, you had better invite your followers into the breakfast parlor another time. The drawing-room is intended for the lady of the house, remember."

Lilias made a careless curtsey.

"Uncle Peter is master, not you, Clarice. I shall use the drawing-room just as long as he sees fit."

"You are a bold minx, and shall be turned out of this house, as sure as that my name will be Lady Tressel."

Clarice Mountjoy ascended the steps again, while Lilias deprecatingly explained and apologized to her lover.

"Never mind, dearest," replied William Sherrard. "In our new house she shall not annoy you, whether she be Lady Tressell or anybody else."

"Poor girl, she does not enjoy life much. She is in love, hopelessly in love, with this Sir Irvine Tressell you heard her mention."

"Who is he, do you know?"

"I have never seen him; I never have cared to see anybody since I knew you, Will."

He pressed her hand tenderly.

"And now, Lillie darling, I will wait here while you get ready for a quiet wedding at the church, where all things are waiting, for I knew you would consent. Send Uncle Peter down; I wish to talk to him."

He kissed her as she left him, so happy, and with the same peculiar smile playing on her lips.

"The noble fellow!" she murmured; "how impatient I am to tell him my secret!"

With rose-tinged cheeks, and a proud consciousness of beauty in her sapphire eyes, she hastily made her toilet; smiling the while, and anon trilling a little air that relieved her full heart.

It was a heavy, dead silk of rich, golden-white that she wore, and over it a filmy lace robe, that floated like a cloud about her slender form. Around her neck she clasped a necklace of rarest diamonds, and fastened a coronet about the veil that rested among her sun-bright curls.

"He will be so surprised," she repeated, joyfully, as over the magnificent bridal costume she put a plain, unpretending muslin robe, simple and sweet.

Down the stairs she went, and into the drawing-room, which, now that Clarice was gone, and Uncle Peter entered, was a blaze of light.

"Lillie, darling, you look a very angel! My bride, my little treasure!"

With extended hand, her lover met her near the door.

"And you, William—you are dressed fit for a Queen's levee! Why, Will, I am afraid you could not afford this expensive wedding-suit!"

She blushed, as if conscious of saying more than she should have done, but he caught her hands, and laughed gayly.

"We will economize after, to make up, pet. Come, Uncle Peter, you must give the bride away."

Together the two entered the carriage in waiting, and drove rapidly to the church, where, at the altar, the clergyman stood ready to unite them.

The ceremony was brief, and Lilias heard but little of it. She only understood that she was being married, and to her chosen one.

The congratulations were over, and the pair re-entered the carriage, Uncle Peter returning home.

"William, may I tell you a little secret, the only one I ever kept from you—the only one I ever will? See, my husband; see my wedding-garments."

She threw aside the disguising robe, and displayed her elegant costume. In amazement he gazed at her.

"Silk, laces, diamonds! My dear wife, I do not comprehend."

A delighted smile answered him; and then she spoke: "William, you did not take a penniless wife. You have married me for myself, not my money, for I am wealthy, dearest; the sole heiress to the great wealth of my deceased parents. Uncle Peter is my guardian whom I desired should appear to own the estate, while I personated the orphan niece, a dependent on his bounty. I feared my wealth would allure those who otherwise would not have cared for me, but now I have found you, my dearest husband, to be all I can desire. We are rich, William, independently rich."

"Lillie," he murmured, bending his head to her shoulder, "my Lillie, this is indeed a surprise. But what of your cousin, Miss Mountjoy?"

"She is an adopted child of a friend of mine, who, on her death-bed, gave her to my mother. Poor Clarice, also, will be penniless, unless she marries her rich lover, Sir Irvine Tressell."

William made no reply, for the carriage stopped at a splendid mansion, brilliantly lighted.

"We will alight here for a few moments, and then I shall bear you to your future home. Come, darling, let me tell you my secret now."

Her shawl being removed in the dressing-room, she was joined at the door by her husband.

"Lilias, do not be surprised at anything you may hear. Will you promise?"

"I will promise, but I am bewildered. Whose house is this—whose guests down stairs?"

"A friend of mine, dearest Lilias. Lady Armstrong, who holds a reception, is the hostess."

"And Cousin Clarice is here," said Lilias, "and I shall see her lover. I am ready, William."

She glanced into his face. His eyes were overflowing with merry mischief, and his cheeks were flushed with pleasurable excitement. Up the stairs they went, and to the door of the crowded reception-room.

He handed a card to the footman, who announced them with a loud, sonorous voice—"Sir William Irvine Tressell and Lady Tressell!"

Every eye turned on the pair. Lilias started and glanced timidly at her husband's face. She met an assuring look, and a whispered, "Don't be vexed, my darling."

He pressed her arm closely to his side, and she returned the silent caress. In that caress all was forever explained.

Radiant in her diamonds, Clarice Mountjoy had been anxiously waiting for her lover's arrival. She was in the music-room when he came, and his presence was unknown to her.

A half-hour afterward, some one tapped him on the shoulder with a fan.

"Sir Irvine Tressell, I am glad you are here at last. You remember the dance you are engaged to me for!"

She smiled brightly upon him, but he bowed very gravely.

"Miss Mountjoy will be good enough to excuse me. I am already engaged for the entire evening."

He spoke coldly, almost sternly, and she raised her eyes to his. They were regarding her intensely; and a vague fear that, after all, she might lose him, stole over her.

"Miss Mountjoy, will you take my arm a moment?"

The invitation was brief and cool; but how delightedly she accepted it.

"I have a friend I must introduce you to. You will find her a lovely woman, as beautiful in mind as in person."

He led her to a solitary figure, who leaned against a statue in the deserted music-room.

"Miss Mountjoy—my wife, Lady Tressell, late Miss Lilias Bradley."

With a shiver of helplessness, Clarice gazed upon her cousin's flushed, beautiful face, and, with a low cry of anguish, covered her face with her fan.

Sir Irvine gazed sternly upon her.

"You will regard my wife as a fit occupant of a breakfast parlor, together with her followers? You will turn her out of her own house, wherein you are the dependent charity-child, as sure as your name will be Lady Tressell? You have merited your reward, Clarice Mountjoy; and when I tell you what my wife, in the goodness of her heart, would never tell you, that the very diamonds you wear are hers, you will learn to be more kind, more human, toward those in a humbler station than yourself."

Clarice had heard him through, silent and motionless; and, when he had finished and given his arm to his beautiful bride, she bowed a haughty acknowledgment, swept proudly from the room, and entered her carriage. That carriage never carried her home. Whither she went, or what became of her, they never knew.

The War Likely to Become General.

It is now morally certain that the war cannot be localized as between Russia and Turkey. Already several smaller powers are involved, and it is only a question of time how soon some of the larger powers will be. Roumania is already dragged into it, and must speedily take sides. Servia also is drawn into a critical position. Although she has but just finished her campaign and concluded a treaty of peace with Turkey, the Porte has intimated to her that she must take up arms again, this time upon the side of Turkey.

Meanwhile, the Russian Pan-Slavist emissaries are already laboring with Prince Milan to secure his co-operation. Whether Servia will throw off her newly-restored allegiance to Turkey or will ally herself with Turkey against Russia remains to be seen, but, whatever course she may pursue, she is not likely to prove a very dangerous foe to any one. Montenegro has resumed her hostilities against the Turks, and these invincible mountaineers will prove a serious thorn in their side. Crete is rising in insurrection against Turkish authority. Egypt, of course, has furnished her contingent of troops, and Persia is reported to have a secret understanding with Russia. Of the great powers, Austria is the most likely to be involved. The slightest tendency to insurrection in Servia, or the first intimation of territorial acquisition on the part of Russia, will compel Austria to occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina and thus array herself against the Turks. England can only be involved in the remote contingency that Russia manifests designs against Constantinople, and Germany in a still more remote contingency. The only powers that are certain not to be drawn into the war are Italy and France.—Chicago Tribune.

Photographing a Heart Beat.

One of the most remarkable applications of photography is that by which it is now made to register, and in the most accurate manner, the mechanical motion of the heart. The device by which this result is attained is, indeed, a triumph of inventive skill. It consists of a thin india-rubber bag, to which a short glass tube is attached; sufficient mercury is poured into the apparatus to fill the bag and a portion of the tube, and the instrument is then placed over the heart of the person to be examined. Arranged in this manner, every pulsation of the heart is indicated by a corresponding movement of the mercury in the tube, and, by suitable photographic apparatus, provided with a moving sensitive slip of paper, a perfect registration of the extent and rate of the pulsation is obtained. The interesting fact is made known by this process that the fall of the pulse sometimes takes place in successive horizontal lines, the column reascending two or three times before falling altogether.

War Against Tramps in New Jersey.

The Legislature of New Jersey has approved an amendment to the law "to define and suppress tramps," commanding that all tramps be arrested, and that the commanding magistrate shall receive 25 cents and the constable making the arrest 50 cents for their services. Constables or officers who refuse to arrest tramps are to be fined $10 for each offense, the money to go to the poor fund of the district in which the officer resides.

Knowledge is Power.

This is a nation of enlightened freemen. Education is the corner-stone and foundation of our Government. The people are free to think and act for themselves, and that they may act wisely it is necessary that they be well informed. Every individual gain increases public gain. Upon the health of the people is based the prosperity of a nation, by it every value is increased, every joy enhanced. Health is essential to the accomplishment of every purpose, while sickness thwarts the best intentions and loftiest aims. Unto us are committed important health trusts, which we hold not merely in our own behalf but for the benefit of others. In order that we may be able to discharge the obligation of our trusteeship, and thus prove worthy of our generous commission, it is necessary that we study the art of preserving health and prolonging life. It is of paramount importance to every person not only to understand the means for the preservation of health, but also to know what remedies should be employed for the alleviation of the common ailments of life. Not that we would advise every man under all circumstances to attempt to be his own physician, but we counsel him to acquire sufficient knowledge of his system and the laws that govern it, that he may be prepared to take care of himself properly, and thereby prevent sickness and prolong life. In no text-book will the people find the subjects of physiology and hygiene, or the science of life and the art of preserving health, more scientifically discussed or more plainly taught than in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," by R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y. It is a volume of over nine hundred large pages, illustrated by over two hundred and eighty-two engravings and colored plates, is elegantly bound in cloth and gilt, and is sent, postpaid, to any address by the author at the low price of one dollar and fifty cents a copy. Nearly one hundred thousand copies have already been sold, and the present edition, which is revised and enlarged and more especially adapted to the wants of the family, is selling very rapidly. It treats of all the common diseases and their remedies, as well as of anatomy, physiology, hygiene, human temperaments, and many other topics of great interest to all people, and is truly what its author styles it, "Medicine Simplified."

Bismarck.

This month the reading public is to be delighted with the authentic biography of the foremost statesman in the world, disclosing curious researches into his ancestry and lively incidents of his youth and student life, coupled with a close analysis of his remarkable public career down to the present time—a translation from the German, with an introduction by Bayard Taylor. A spirited, absorbing and instructive narrative, replete with anecdote, wit and wisdom, its pages gather luster here and there from characteristic speeches and private letters of Bismarck himself. The story of his life is rendered doubly vivid by upward of one hundred illustrative home scenes, battles, portraits, etc.

It will be sold by canvassers, whose time for real Bis-marks the hour of its publication. Persons desiring to arrange for its sale can write to Weston Hulbert, 114 Monroe street, Chicago, and secure advance sheets.

Five Thousand Books Given Away for the Asking.

While Dr. H. James was attached to the British Medical Staff in the East Indies, his high position enabled him to call about him the best chemists, physicians and scientists of the day, and while experimenting with and among the natives, he accidentally made the discovery that CONSUMPTION can be positively and permanently CURED. During the many years of his sojourn there, he devoted his time to the treatment of Lung Diseases, and upon his retirement he left with us books and papers containing full particulars, showing that every one can be his own physician and prepare his own medicine, and such information as we have received we now offer to the public without price, only asking that each remit a three-cent stamp for postage. The Wise Course in Rheumatism.

Rheumatic patients who have been induced to submit to depletion by blood-letting, or to take colchicum and other drugs of an equally pernicious character, will consult their wellbeing by abandoning such insane procedure, and using as a substitute Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which will infallibly afford them the much-desired relief, and is absolutely safe. This benign vegetable depurent cools the blood by expelling from it the inflammatory elements which give rise to maladies of a rheumatic and gouty type, and rectifies disordered conditions of the stomach, nervous system and bowels which usually accompany them. As rheumatism has a tendency to attack the heart, the desirability of an early resort to the Bitters is obvious, since the danger is increased by every moment of delay.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

[illegible] up hill, [illegible] me not;

[illegible] ground [illegible]
Loose in stable, forget me not.
Of hay and corn, rob me not;
Of clean water want me not;
With sponge and water, neglect me not;
And soft, dry bed, deprive me not.
Tired or hot, wash me not;
If sick or cold, chill me not;
With bit or reins, oh! jerk me not;
[illegible]

CALIFORNIA farmers sow their wheat in drills and hoe it, thus doubling the product of the grain per acre.

TO DRIVE AWAY THE MELON BUG.—Set a tomato plant into each hill of cucumbers or melons, and you will have no trouble from the striped bugs that are so destructive to these plants. The plants can be tied to stakes, and if well pruned when large, both subjects can proceed with their fruiting without detriment to one another.—Rural New Yorker.

CHANGE THE SEED.—Experiments show, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the frequent change of seeds will lead to the best results. An exchange of those grown on barren or gravel land for those gathered from a limestone soil will, it is claimed, have a good effect. It is well known [illegible] that the continuous sowing of the same kind of seed may be one cause of the deterioration of crops whenever experienced. Make a change of seeds, get good [illegible] and better results will be plainly [illegible].

HANDSOME ASPARAGUS.—A correspondent of the Gardeners' Monthly tells of a bed of asparagus, some twelve by twenty feet in size, planted on good level soil, which, when its growth became strong, was year by year covered with two or three inches of good rich mold. Through this shot the stalks and crept the roots. The method was followed up every season with the result of larger growth and product, till the bed became an oblong raised table two or three feet in height, and a perfect wonder as regards the quality and quantity of asparagus furnished for the table. That yearly blanket [illegible] The bed was never dug with a fork or spade.

TAKING timothy hay as a standard of comparison, it requires 100 pounds of it to supply a certain amount of nourishment. It is estimated by careful experiment that the same amount of nourishment can be obtained by using the following quantities of food: Clover hay, 95 lbs; rye straw, 335 lbs; oat straw, 220 lbs; potatoes, 196 lbs; carrots, 280 lbs; beets, 345 lbs; ruta bagas, 302 lbs; wheat, 48 lbs; peas, 44 lbs; beans, 46 lbs; rye, 49 lbs; barley, 51 lbs; corn, 56 lbs; oats, 59 lbs; buckwheat, 64 lbs; and oil cake, 94 lbs.

THERE seems to be a prevalent idea that it is not profitable to milk a cow more than eight or nine months, and most dairymen dry off their cows early and let them go dry three or four months. This is not the best practice. A cow is kept for milk, and she should be bred to holding it out as long as she can, with due regard for health. It has been proved in the cases of thousands of cows that have lived to a good old age that they can be bred to give milk ten months in the year, bear a good, healthy and strong calf, and be ready for a good milking season the next year.

FIGURING THAT PAYS.—Farmers are not given to calculating how many grains of wheat placed in a row it would require to circle the earth, or problems of a similar nature, but a little arithmetic of this kind applied to more practical subjects is worth the while, as, for instance, the following: Let two machines, one cutting four feet wide and the other five, follow in grain for one day, each being drawn a distance of 24 miles, the former will have cut 12 acres, the latter 15 acres. To cut 100 acres of wheat the former must travel 200 miles, the latter only 160. A saving of 40 miles' travel with a heavy load at the end of so long a journey is a matter of no small importance. It is a saving, too, of 40 miles walking, or 10 miles for each of the four binders. It is a saving, also, to the farmer of two days' labor for himself and team, and the wages and board of the four binders for two days in cutting 100 acres of grain.—Rural New Yorker.

About the House.

We may live without poetry, music and art;
We may live without conscience, and live without heart;
We may live without friends; we may live without books;
But civilized man cannot live without cooks.
He may live without books—what is knowledge but grieving?
He may live without hope—what is hope but deceiving?
He may live without love—what is passion but pining?
But where is the man that can live without dining?

THE juice of ripe tomatoes will remove the stains of walnuts from the hands.

SPICED CUCUMBER PICKEL—NICE.—Two dozen large cucumbers sliced and boiled in vinegar enough to cover them one hour; set them aside in hot vinegar.

BUTTER can be kept in warm weather by setting it under a dish contained in unglazed earthen-ware crock, inverted. Wrap a wet cloth around the covering vessel and place the whole where there is a draught of air.

CLEANING ZINC.—Zinc that is used under stoves should never be dampened. If it becomes soiled or dim, rub with soft flannel and a little fresh lard. Cleaned in this way a zinc may always be kept as bright and clean as when first purchased.—Exchange.

TO COOK EGGS.—To boil eggs—do not boil them. Put them in water nearly at the boiling point, and let them remain from six to eight minutes, when they will be cooked through but not hard. To test them, lift one out of the water; if it dries off quick it is well done. You will know the reason why they should be cooked in this way when you eat them.—Correspondence Country Gentleman.

DIRECTIONS FOR KEEPING FURS DURING SUMMER WEATHER.—1. Beat the furs lightly and well with a light cane or switch and shake afterward. 2. See that they are entirely free from dust or loose hairs. 3. Take a few pieces of camphor, rolled in thin paper, and place with each article in packing. 4. Always put in a dry, cool place and dark, and, if time be had, you may look at them every five or six weeks. However, if put away carefully as above, they will keep for any length of time free from moths or insects.

TO COOL A ROOM.—If the heat of a room occupied by an invalid is oppressive, it may be greatly lessened by hanging in the open window some towels or canvas well wetted [illegible] water, [illegible] absorbs caloric. That chemical process will lower in a few minutes the temperature of a room by five or six degrees, and the humidity supplied to the air makes the heat more supportable. By that system the patients find themselves even in the height of summer in an atmosphere refreshed equal to that which prevails after a storm.

CLEANSING A BRUSSELS CARPET.—First have the carpet well shaken, then tack it down in the room where it is to remain; sweep it as thoroughly as possible; take a pail of hot water, put in two tablespoonfuls of pulverized borax; wash the carpet all over the surface, using a flannel cloth. For grease spots or very dirty places, use a scrubbing-brush freely, and a very little soap, taking care to wipe the soap off well after scrubbing; change the water quite often; rub the carpet well with a dry cloth after washing, and open doors and windows so as to dry the carpet as quickly as possible.

Hydrophobia.

DR. HAMMOND—A dog perfectly healthy, or at least free from rabies, may produce the disease by his bite through his saliva, as I have already stated. You remember the case of McCormick. In that case the dog was exhibited to the Neurological Society more than a month after he bit McCormick, and, as hydrophobia runs its course in seven or eight days, and as the dog invariably dies, he either could not have had it, or he could not have been the dog in question. Remember, it takes a wound to produce death. You might swallow the saliva and it would not kill you unless you had, perhaps, an abrasure on your lip. The saliva is only poisonous when communicated through a wound. You get lockjaw, or tetanus, from a simple wound, and hydrophobia seems to be tetanus plus a group of other symptoms.

Reporter—From all this it would appear that the science of medicine knows very little about hydrophobia.

DR. H.—We can recognize the origin and symptoms of hydrophobia as we can those of scarlet fever or measles. To this day no one has discovered the primal origin of scarlet fever. We know that we cannot cure hydrophobia. Remember that there never has been a cure on record. It is necessary not to confound the prevention with the cure. There are a great many people who claim to have invented cures for hydrophobia, but they mean cures after the bite and before the poison has been developed. This is an easy matter, but no cure has as yet been effected after the poison (which lies dormant in the system a few weeks, and sometimes even several months, and even several years) has been developed. In the early part of last fall a distinguished officer of the army came to me, who had been bitten by a dog manifestly hydrophobic. I cauterized the wound with a red-hot iron, and I regard him as perfectly safe.—New York Herald's Interview with Surgeon General Hammond.

A Sagacious Lobster.

A striking instance of sagacity in a lobster is recorded by Mr. Barker, of the Rothesay Aquarium, in a letter to one of the Scotch papers. It seems that three lobsters were placed in a tank previously occupied by flat fish, and in which, inadvertently, a flounder had been left buried in the shingle, where it died. One of the lobsters, "a veteran of unusual size," soon discovered the dead body of the flounder, and, dragging it from its resting place, retired with it to a corner of the tank. Shortly afterward it was noticed that the flounder was missing. It was impossible that the lobster could have eaten it in the time, and the handle of a net revealed the fact that upon the approach of the two lesser lobsters he had buried the flounder beneath a heap of shingle, on which he now mounted guard. Five times within two hours was the flounder unearthed, and as often did the wily lobster rebury it with his huge claws, each time ascending the pile and turning a bold front to his companions.

A Fool and His Money.

One day last week a Schenectady man cashed a draft for $700 at a bank, and received $300 in small bills, which he put in his pocket, thinking by its size that the package contained the full amount. He was leaving, when the cashier handed him out the balance, $400, in new, crisp five-dollar notes. The man took them, and, supposing they were advertising notes, distributed them among his friends. He was astonished at the eagerness of all to secure them, and was stunned when attempting jokingly to pass one in a store he was informed that the bills were good. He spent all that night and the greater part of the next day in rushing around collecting the bills he had given away.

Brigham Young Re-elected.

The semi-annual Mormon Conference has just been held at St. George, Utah, Brigham Young and most of the prominent Mormons being present. It was generally expected that, as Brigham has seen nearly 76 years of this world's cares, he would have asked a release from at least a portion of his official duties. The most pliant of his apostles were prepared to accept Brigham the Second for a ruler. A determined opposition to his election sprung up on the part of the President, apostles, and a few of that college with whom the leading men of the church are in secret sympathy. Accordingly, Brigham was re-elected "Prophet, Seer, and Revelator" for another term of six months.

Cattle in Australia.

In Australia cattle are far in excess of the demand, and will not sell for more than can be realized from their hides, tallow, horns etc., for exportation. The flesh is almost valueless. An immense establishment has been started there for boiling the meat into condensed soup or extract. The meat, cut into large chunks, is inclosed in an enormous tight cylinder capable of holding fifty bullocks at a time, and steamed for seven hours. The tallow is then skimmed off, and the meat, mere pulp, is further solidified and canned for exportation. A bullock makes about twenty pounds of extract, as to the nutritious quality of which there is a wide difference of opinion.

RATS have devoured the whole wheat crop of Pitcairn's island. The British ship Garlloch recently supplied the inhabitants with a few necessaries, including seed wheat.

THE "Big Bonanza" yielded $20,108,958 gold and $25,700,682 silver from its discovery to Sept. 30, 1876. In this deposit the usual preponderance of gold over silver is reversed.

ACROSTIC.

Arrayed in dainty robe of palest green;
Pensive at times, and then with brow serene—
Radiant with smiles one moment she appears,
In the next instant sad, and bathed in tears.
Like a young maiden swayed by hopes and fears.

THE DEAD STAR.

Yonder in empty dark
Wanders, somewhere, a wasted sun, whose light,
Erst breathed abroad with life-creating spark,
Made hanging gardens of the circling night.
Through Time's dark emptiness
Some soul, that genius lit, goes, withered, wan,
Its flame to blackness fallen, purposeless—
The dead star wanders with the fire-spent man!

A BAND of counterfeiters confined in the jail at Knoxville, Tenn., have been successfully operating in their old business. Molds for nickels, 25 and 50 cent pieces, together with metal for molding, were found in several cells, and the men had been manufacturing the coins and sending them out by the wife of one of the gang.

PRINCE LOUIS NAPOLEON will soon return to Chiselhurst. He is the frequent recipient of monetary gifts. Thus, at Florence, recently, he received one morning through the post 150 English sovereigns from an anonymous donor. Many of the sums which come to him in this way, and which are regarded as restitution-money, the Prince distributes among the poor.

A SHORT time ago a lady residing at Clifton, England, having an income of £5,000 a year, was so struck by the devotion of a young crossing-sweeper to his mother that she proposed to him, placed him in the hands of a tutor for a couple of months, and, when he had been intellectually veneered and polished, married him at Well's Cathedral. The experiment was not a success, and the lady is now suing for a divorce.

THE town of Salisbury, N. C., is in much trouble. At the close of the Revolutionary war David Stewart was given 475 acres of land for services rendered in the army. He put the deed in his pocket and emigrated to Pennsylvania. Time passed, the town of Salisbury was built on the land, Stewart died, the deed remained locked up, and the town continued to improve until now the land is valued at $5,000,000. And now, too, the heirs of old Stewart have turned up, and claim immediate possession of the property.

THE STIRRUP-CUP.

Death, thou'rt a cordial old and rare;
Look how compounded, with what care!
Time got his wrinkles reaping thee
Sweet herbs from all antiquity.
David to thy distillage went,
Keats, and Gotama excellent,
Omar Khayyam, and Chaucer bright,
And Shakspere for a king-delight.
Then were to sweeten thee with song;
The blood of heroes made thee strong.
What heroes! Ah, for shame, for shame!
The worthiest died without a name.
Then, Time, let not a drop be spilt;
Hand me the cup whene'er thou wilt;
If death such dear distillment be,
I'll drink it down right smilingly.
—Sidney Lanier, in Scribner for May.

A PHILADELPHIA hotel is provided with an electric apparatus that, whenever the atmosphere in any room becomes hotter than 110, rings an alarm in the office. On the day after the fire in St. Louis some young and jocose guests held lighted matches under one of these contrivances, thus causing a false alarm, and the prompt employe turned a stop-cock that immediately caused the thorough wetting of the room. The jokers succeeded in affrighting all the people in the hotel, but the fun will cost them $350, that being the amount of damage done by the water.

TEXAS aspires to be one of the greatest wheat-growing and exporting sections of the country, and Galveston has pleasant anticipations of handling and shipping immense quantities of grain in the future, especially to Brazil and other South American countries. It is claimed that the wheat grown in Texas is peculiarly suited for exportation to hot climates, and that St. Louis manufacturers select it as the best from which to make flour for exportation to Brazil. Texans claim, too, that their wheat contains less water and more gluten than that grown in States further north.

RHODE ISLAND has 2,019 manufacturing establishments, with an invested capital of nearly $50,000,000, and employing 56,450 hands, to whom are paid in wages yearly the sum of $23,707,513, or an average of about $420 each. The raw material used is valued at $76,715,970, and the value of products yearly is $126,659,875. There has been a large increase during the past year in the number of establishments engaged in manufacturing, and in the results of their business. There are 135 cotton factories, with a capital of $24,084,209, employing 22,574 hands, and yielding goods worth $38,927,960.

NEW POEM BY LONGFELLOW.

Castles in Spain.

How much of my young heart, O Spain,
Went out to thee in days of yore!
What dreams romantic filled my brain,
And summoned back to life again
The Paladins of Charlemagne,
The Cid Campeador!

And shapes more shadowy than these,
In the dim twilight half revealed;
Phœnician galleys on the seas,
The Roman camps like hives of bees,
The Goth uplifting from his knees
Pelayo on his shield.

It was these memories perchance,
From annals of remotest eld,
That lent the colors of romance
To every trivial circumstance,
And changed the form and countenance
Of all that I beheld.

Old towns, whose history lies hid
In monkish chronicle or rhyme—
Burgos, the birthplace of the Cid,
Zamora and Valladolid,
Toledo, built and walled amid
The wars of Wamba's time;

The long, straight line of the highway,
The distant town that seems so near,
The peasants in the fields, that stay
Their toil to cross themselves and pray,
When from the belfry at midday
The Angelus they hear;

White crosses in the mountain pass,
Mules gay with tassels, the loud din
Of muleteers, the tethered ass
That crops the dusty wayside grass,
And cavaliers with spurs of brass
Alighting at the inn;

White hamlets hidden in fields of wheat,
White cities slumbering by the sea,
White sunshine flooding square and street,
Dark mountain-ranges, at whose feet
The river-beds are dry with heat,
All was a dream to me.

Yet something sombre and severe
O'er the enchanted landscape reigned;
A terror in the atmosphere,
As if King Philip listened near,
Or Torquemada, the austere,
His ghostly sway maintained.

The softer Andalusian skies
Dispelled the sadness and the gloom;
There Cadiz by the seaside lies,
And Seville's orange-orchards rise,
Making the land a paradise
Of beauty and of bloom.

There Cordova is hidden among
The palm, the olive, and the vine;
Gem of the South, by poets sung,
And in whose mosque Almanzor hung
As lamps the bells that once had rung
At Compostella's shrine.

But over all the rest supreme,
The star of stars, the cynosure,
The artist's and the poet's theme,
The young man's vision, the old man's dream—
Granada by its winding stream,
The city of the Moor!

And there the Alhambra still recalls
Aladdin's palace of delight;
Allah il Allah! through its halls
Whispers the fountain as it falls;
The Darro darts beneath its walls,
The hills with snow are white.

Ah yes, the hills are white with snow,
And cold with blasts that bite and freeze;
But in the happy vale below
The orange and pomegranate grow,
And wafts of air toss to and fro
The blossoming almond-trees.

The Vega cleft by the Xenil,
The fascination and allure
Of the sweet landscape chain the will,
The traveler lingers on the hill,
His parted lips are breathing still
The last sigh of the Moor.

How like a ruin overgrown
With flowers that hide the rents of time
Stands now the past that I have known;
Castles in Spain, not built of stone,
But of white summer cloud, and blown
Into this little mist of rhyme!

MISS MOUNTJOY'S LESSON;

Or, Pride Must Have a Fall.

CHAPTER I.

The long, slanting rays of a golden sunset were streaming in through the crimson stained glass windows of Clarice Mountjoy's elegant boudoir, and lighting up in subdued splendor the costly appliances and luxurious ornaments that filled the apartment.

Before the lofty mirror sat a haughty, imperial woman, upon whose raven black masses of hair, arched eyebrows of the same ebon hue, and flashing eyes of midnight darkness, the rose-tint from the window fell in becoming addition to her costly toilet.

A frown rose on her brow, and she tapped her delicately-booted foot in vexation and impatience.

"To think that, after all the pains I have taken to have the jewels collected, I am unable to wear them to the only evening party I care a straw for. Where is the use of having diamonds and pearls if we haven't a suitable toilet to appear in?"

She pulled the slight silken cord by her side, whose tinkling summons brought her maid.

"Felice, I must have my dove-colored moire for this evening, come what will. Put on your cloak and run down to Madame Ruche, and tell her I cannot think of going without it, if I must wait until 12 o'clock."

Obedient to her imperious mistress' commands, the lady's maid departed to execute her commission.

"I am determined to wear it, and my elegant diamonds with it! Sir Irvine Tressell shall see me in my splendor, and he will soon decide that English ladies can surpass the foreigners he has danced with."

She rose and looked searchingly in the mirror.

"People say I am beautiful. Well, I know I am; I have every desirable feature necessary to beauty, from my head to my feet; but all is naught to me if it does not win me his love—the love I have cherished for months—the love I must win, and win soon—to-night!"

Her beautiful lips were parted in a circle of grateful pride, as her eyes wandered over her feet, face and form.

"Ah, Sir Irvine Tressell, you little know Clarice Mountjoy would barter life, soul—honor, I had almost said—for your sake!"

A timid rap at the door dispelled her soliloquy, and she turned with a gesture of impatience to the intruder.

"Lilias, how often have I requested you not to annoy me when I am alone? You seem to have a singularly deep regard for this room. Do you want anything?"

The dark hazel eyes of the intruder—"Lilias," she was called—flashed a moment darkly; but the voice, low, sweet and modulated, replied: "I am very sorry if I disturbed you. I merely dropped in to see if I could be of any assistance to you in your preparations for Lady Armstrong's reception."

A selfish smile played over the carmine lips of Clarice Mountjoy.

"Oh, will you help me get my moire finished, if the dressmaker cannot? I will give you my old blue silk, if you will."

The lips of Lilias Bradley curled scornfully; but, as before, she curbed the rising anger.

"Thank you, Cousin Clarice, I do not need the old blue silk. I will assist Felice to finish your dress when she returns, if you think you must wear it without fail."

"Indeed I must, and shall, too! For Sir Irvine Tressell says a golden moire with diamonds is the most bewitching costume he ever saw. The Princess Louise wore one at a presentation, and he is constantly reminding me how much I resemble her."

Lilias made no reply, but gazed thoughtfully out of the window.

"I hope you are not envious of my good luck, Lilias Bradley, because I happen to be an heiress, and the future wife of the splendid Baronet, Sir Irvine Tressel?"

A smile, half-pitying, half-amused, lighted up Lilias' sweet, pale face.

"Oh, no, Clarice. I was only wondering if, with all your wealth, your aristocratic lovers, and dreams of future happiness, you were really as happy as I."

"As you, Lilias Bradley!"

Clarice almost shrieked the words, so ridiculous did she regard the comparison.

"Yes," returned Lilias, quietly. "I would not change places for all the world."

An angry frown contracted Clarice's white brow.

"Here comes Felice, thank goodness! Now, Lilias, you will have to exert every effort to finish it by midnight."

"I think we can complete it by nine or ten; that will give you sufficient time to dress. I, too, must leave it at that hour, to fulfill my engagement."

A blush overspread Lilian's face.

"That poor lover of yours again to-night? I should think you'd hate a man as poor as you say William Sherrard is. Why don't you marry a rich one, who can support you handsomely?"

There was a contemptuous imperiousness in Clarice's tones that brought the blood rushing to Lilias' cheeks.

"Because I never would marry for money; I will never give my hand to a man because he has a fortune at his disposal. Wealth is a great gift, but it does not purchase happiness."

"How do you know? You have never enjoyed wealth."

A quiet, strange smile—one that had annoyed Clarice many times since the orphan Lilias had come to their uncle's, six months before—lighted the sweet face, disclosing the pearly teeth.

"True, I am not in the enjoyment of wealth; yet, judging from yourself, dear Clarice, I should conclude it did not bring bliss."

"But it will, when I have once attained my object—the dream I have cherished for the half-year you have been here. When I am once the wife of Sir Irvine Tressell, the only man I ever loved or ever shall love, I defy anything to make me unhappy. His love is all I ask."

A bright smile, that made her really lovely, lighted her midnight eyes as she thought of him—her idol.

"You've never seen him, Lilias, I believe," she went on to say. "He is the most handsome man I ever saw!"

"I think not. You know you requested me never to come in the parlor when you had company."

"He is tall, and dark, and very graceful, and so polite!"

Clarice's voice was enthusiasm personified.

"Yes, so is my William," returned Lilias, thoughtfully.

"William!" ejaculated Clarice, indignantly, "Why, Lilias Bradley, they are not to be mentioned in the same breath!"

"Cousin Clarice, be thoughtful! Do not speak slightingly of my betrothed husband because he happens to be poor."

The gentle hazel eyes were dark as Lilias spoke; but she was answered by a harsh laugh.

"Nor of you, because you happen to be poor, and a dependent on my charity and your Uncle Peter's."

With a proud flushing of her cheeks, and a flashing of her eyes, Lilias tossed the expensive moire off her lap.

"Never has that been said of a Bradley before, Clarice Mountjoy; never shall it be repeated. Tell me with your lips if I do not earn my bread and clothes? Tell me if the assistance I render to you in every imaginable way does not merit more than any servant-woman would receive for her services!"

"Oh, yes, I suppose so; but, after all, I can get on as well with only Felice. Are you not going to finish my dress? Do, Lilias, just this once, and I'll confess you are not only indispensable, but absolute mistress of the establishment. Please do, Lil, for you know I am dying to wear my newly-reset diamonds—the old family fire-diamonds, you know. I should expire from disappointment if I did not realize the expectations I have anticipated for this evening. Sir Irvine Tressell will not fail to be there, and in my moire and diamonds I shall be so irresistible he cannot avoid a proposal. It is on the tapis, I know, for he is all devotion."

"Your dress is done, Clarice. And now I must leave you to attend to Uncle Peter's supper."

CHAPTER II.

"And my darling is willing to intrust her happiness to me, poor and friendless though I may be?"

Lilias' lover drew her beautiful head to his breast, as he entwined his arms about her.

"You may be poor and friendless in one sense, William, but are you not wealthy in my love? Will not our home, if unblessed with all the luxuries of riches, be abundant in peace and contentment?"

"Spoken like the dear, true little woman you are! And now, dearest, I must impose my first command upon you. Will you obey?"

He smoothed her hair playfully off the clear, white forehead, and glanced mischievously in her deep, true eyes.

"On second thought, I think I'll tell you first what I desire you to do. Listen, dear Lilias, and blush as much as you please; but don't turn your face away."

And, in truth, the pink tints were already coming and going on cheek and brow.

"Lilias, darling," and his voice grew strange and earnest, "we must be married to-night. No, do not start; not for worlds, unless you wish it; but I have certain particular reasons for it, to gratify which would delight me beyond expression. I have got an Archbishop's special license, and I have made all the requisite arrangements."

For a moment, Lilias buried her face against his shoulder; then she lifted it, rosy and happy, to the dark, flushed one bending over her.

"A week can make no difference, William. I have tried you, and proved you; we love each other fondly. William, I will be your wife to-night."

His handsome face lighted up with a proud, triumphant smile, and he kissed her fondly, just as approaching footsteps warned them.

"Lilias, Lilias, where is the key of Uncle Peter's safe? I want the diamonds; it is high time I was off, and Sir Irvine Tressell never likes to see a lady later than ten."

Clarice came rapidly down the stairs to the apartment where, in the shade, Lilias and her lover stood. She could not see them at all plainly, for the gas was turned down to a twilight-darkness.

"On the ebony cabinet in my room, Clarice."

As Lilias replied, Clarice frowned in displeasure.

"It seems to me, Miss Bradley, you had better invite your followers into the breakfast parlor another time. The drawing-room is intended for the lady of the house, remember."

Lilias made a careless curtsey.

"Uncle Peter is master, not you, Clarice. I shall use the drawing-room just as long as he sees fit."

"You are a bold minx, and shall be turned out of this house, as sure as that my name will be Lady Tressel."

Clarice Mountjoy ascended the steps again, while Lilias deprecatingly explained and apologized to her lover.

"Never mind, dearest," replied William Sherrard. "In our new house she shall not annoy you, whether she be Lady Tressell or anybody else."

"Poor girl, she does not enjoy life much. She is in love, hopelessly in love, with this Sir Irvine Tressell you heard her mention."

"Who is he, do you know?"

"I have never seen him; I never have cared to see anybody since I knew you, Will."

He pressed her hand tenderly.

"And now, Lillie darling, I will wait here while you get ready for a quiet wedding at the church, where all things are waiting, for I knew you would consent. Send Uncle Peter down; I wish to talk to him."

He kissed her as she left him, so happy, and with the same peculiar smile playing on her lips.

"The noble fellow!" she murmured; "how impatient I am to tell him my secret!"

With rose-tinged cheeks, and a proud consciousness of beauty in her sapphire eyes, she hastily made her toilet; smiling the while, and anon trilling a little air that relieved her full heart.

It was a heavy, dead silk of rich, golden-white that she wore, and over it a filmy lace robe, that floated like a cloud about her slender form. Around her neck she clasped a necklace of rarest diamonds, and fastened a coronet about the veil that rested among her sun-bright curls.

"He will be so surprised," she repeated, joyfully, as over the magnificent bridal costume she put a plain, unpretending muslin robe, simple and sweet.

Down the stairs she went, and into the drawing-room, which, now that Clarice was gone, and Uncle Peter entered, was a blaze of light.

"Lillie, darling, you look a very angel! My bride, my little treasure!"

With extended hand, her lover met her near the door.

"And you, William—you are dressed fit for a Queen's levee! Why, Will, I am afraid you could not afford this expensive wedding-suit!"

She blushed, as if conscious of saying more than she should have done, but he caught her hands, and laughed gayly.

"We will economize after, to make up, pet. Come, Uncle Peter, you must give the bride away."

Together the two entered the carriage in waiting, and drove rapidly to the church, where, at the altar, the clergyman stood ready to unite them.

The ceremony was brief, and Lilias heard but little of it. She only understood that she was being married, and to her chosen one.

The congratulations were over, and the pair re-entered the carriage, Uncle Peter returning home.

"William, may I tell you a little secret, the only one I ever kept from you—the only one I ever will? See, my husband; see my wedding-garments."

She threw aside the disguising robe, and displayed her elegant costume. In amazement he gazed at her.

"Silk, laces, diamonds! My dear wife, I do not comprehend."

A delighted smile answered him; and then she spoke: "William, you did not take a penniless wife. You have married me for myself, not my money, for I am wealthy, dearest; the sole heiress to the great wealth of my deceased parents. Uncle Peter is my guardian whom I desired should appear to own the estate, while I personated the orphan niece, a dependent on his bounty. I feared my wealth would allure those who otherwise would not have cared for me, but now I have found you, my dearest husband, to be all I can desire. We are rich, William, independently rich."

"Lillie," he murmured, bending his head to her shoulder, "my Lillie, this is indeed a surprise. But what of your cousin, Miss Mountjoy?"

"She is an adopted child of a friend of mine, who, on her death-bed, gave her to my mother. Poor Clarice, also, will be penniless, unless she marries her rich lover, Sir Irvine Tressell."

William made no reply, for the carriage stopped at a splendid mansion, brilliantly lighted.

"We will alight here for a few moments, and then I shall bear you to your future home. Come, darling, let me tell you my secret now."

Her shawl being removed in the dressing-room, she was joined at the door by her husband.

"Lilias, do not be surprised at anything you may hear. Will you promise?"

"I will promise, but I am bewildered. Whose house is this—whose guests down stairs?"

"A friend of mine, dearest Lilias. Lady Armstrong, who holds a reception, is the hostess."

"And Cousin Clarice is here," said Lilias, "and I shall see her lover. I am ready, William."

She glanced into his face. His eyes were overflowing with merry mischief, and his cheeks were flushed with pleasurable excitement. Up the stairs they went, and to the door of the crowded reception-room.

He handed a card to the footman, who announced them with a loud, sonorous voice—"Sir William Irvine Tressell and Lady Tressell!"

Every eye turned on the pair. Lilias started and glanced timidly at her husband's face. She met an assuring look, and a whispered, "Don't be vexed, my darling."

He pressed her arm closely to his side, and she returned the silent caress. In that caress all was forever explained.

Radiant in her diamonds, Clarice Mountjoy had been anxiously looking for her lover's arrival. She was in the music-room when he came, and his presence was unknown to her.

A half-hour afterward, some one tapped him on the shoulder with a fan.

"Sir Irvine Tressell, I am glad you are here at last. You remember the dance you are engaged to me for?"

She smiled brightly upon him, but he bowed very gravely.

"Miss Mountjoy will be good enough to excuse me. I am already engaged for the entire evening."

He spoke coldly, almost sternly, and she raised her eyes to his. They were regarding her intensely; and a vague fear that, after all, she might lose him, stole over her.

"Miss Mountjoy, will you take my arm a moment?"

The invitation was brief and cool; but how delightedly she accepted it.

"I have a friend I must introduce you to. You will find her a lovely woman, as beautiful in mind as in person."

He led her to a solitary figure, who leaned against a statue in the deserted music-room.

"Miss Mountjoy—my wife, Lady Tressell, late Miss Lilias Bradley."

With a shiver of helplessness, Clarice gazed upon her cousin's flushed, beautiful face, and, with a low cry of anguish, covered her face with her fan.

Sir Irvine gazed sternly upon her.

"You will regard my wife as a fit occupant of a breakfast parlor, together with her followers? You will turn her out of her own house, wherein you are the dependent charity-child, as sure as your name will be Lady Tressell? You have merited your reward, Clarice Mountjoy; and when I tell you what my wife, in the goodness of her heart, would never tell you, that the very diamonds you wear are hers, you will learn to be more kind, more human, toward those in a humbler station than yourself."

Clarice had heard him through, silent and motionless; and, when he had finished and given his arm to his beautiful bride, she bowed a haughty acknowledgment, swept proudly from the room, and entered her carriage. That carriage never carried her home. Whither she went, or what became of her, they never knew.

The War Likely to Become General.

It is now morally certain that the war cannot be localized as between Russia and Turkey. Already several smaller powers are involved, and it is only a question of time how soon some of the larger powers will be. Roumania is already dragged into it, and must speedily take sides. Servia also is drawn into a critical position. Although she has but just finished her campaign and concluded a treaty of peace with Turkey, the Porte has intimated to her that she must take up arms again, this time upon the side of Turkey.

Meanwhile, the Russian Pan-Slavist emissaries are already laboring with Prince Milan to secure his co-operation. Whether Servia will throw off her newly-restored allegiance to Turkey or will ally herself with Turkey against Russia remains to be seen, but, whatever course she may pursue, she is not likely to prove a very dangerous foe to any one. Montenegro has resumed her hostilities against the Turks, and these invincible mountaineers will prove a serious thorn in their side. Crete is rising in insurrection against Turkish authority. Egypt, of course, has furnished her contingent of troops, and Persia is reported to have a secret understanding with Russia. Of the great powers, Austria is the most likely to be involved. The slightest tendency to insurrection in Servia, or the first intimation of territorial acquisition on the part of Russia, will compel Austria to occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina and thus array herself against the Turks. England can only be involved in the remote contingency that Russia manifests designs against Constantinople, and Germany in a still more remote contingency. The only powers that are certain not to be drawn into the war are Italy and France.—Chicago Tribune.

Photographing a Heart Beat.

One of the most remarkable applications of photography is that by which it is now made to register, and in the most accurate manner, the mechanical motion of the heart. The device by which this result is attained is, indeed, a triumph of inventive skill. It consists of a thin india-rubber bag, to which a short glass tube is attached; sufficient mercury is poured into the apparatus to fill the bag and a portion of the tube, and the instrument is then placed over the heart of the person to be examined. Arranged in this manner, every pulsation of the heart is indicated by a corresponding movement of the mercury in the tube, and, by suitable photographic apparatus, provided with a moving sensitive slip of paper, a perfect registration of the extent and rate of the pulsation is obtained. The interesting fact is made known by this process that the fall of the pulse sometimes takes place in successive horizontal lines, the column reascending two or three times before falling altogether.

War Against Tramps in New Jersey.

The Legislature of New Jersey has approved an amendment to the law "to define and suppress tramps," commanding that all tramps be arrested, and that the commanding magistrate shall receive 25 cents and the constable making the arrest 50 cents for their services. Constables or officers who refuse to arrest tramps are to be fined $10 for each offense, the money to go to the poor fund of the district in which the officer resides.

Knowledge is Power.

This is a nation of enlightened freemen. Education is the corner-stone and foundation of our Government. The people are free to think and act for themselves, and that they may act wisely it is necessary that they be well informed. Every individual gain increases public gain. Upon the health of the people is based the prosperity of a nation, by it every value is increased, every joy enhanced. Health is essential to the accomplishment of every purpose; while sickness thwarts the best intentions and loftiest aims. Unto us are committed important health trusts, which we hold not merely in our own behalf but for the benefit of others. In order that we may be able to discharge the obligation of our trusteeship, and thus prove worthy of our generous commission, it is necessary that we study the art of preserving health and prolonging life. It is of paramount importance to every person not only to understand the means for the preservation of health, but also to know what remedies should be employed for the alleviation of the common ailments of life. Not that we would advise every one to be his own physician, but we entreat him to acquire sufficient knowledge of his system and the laws that govern it, that he may be prepared to take care of himself properly, and thereby prevent sickness and prolong life. In no text-book will the people find the subjects of physiology and hygiene, or the science of life and the art of preserving health, more comprehensively discussed or more plainly taught than in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," by R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y. It is a volume of over nine hundred large pages, illustrated by over two hundred and eighty-two engravings and colored plates, is elegantly bound in cloth and gilt, and is sent, postpaid, to any address by the author at the low price of one dollar and fifty cents a copy. Nearly one hundred thousand copies have already been sold, and the present edition, which is revised and enlarged and more especially adapted to the wants of the family, is selling very rapidly. It treats of all the common diseases and their remedies, as well as of anatomy, physiology, hygiene, human temperaments, and many other topics of great interest to all people, and is truly what its author styles it, "Medicine Simplified."

Bismarck.

This month the reading public is to be delighted with the authentic biography of the foremost statesman in the world, disclosing curious researches into his ancestry and lively incidents of his youth and student life, coupled with a close analysis of his remarkable public career down to the present time—a translation from the German, with an introduction by Bayard Taylor. A spirited, absorbing and instructive narrative, replete with anecdote, wit and wisdom, its pages gather luster here and there from characteristic speeches and private letters of Bismarck himself. The story of his life is rendered doubly vivid by upward of one hundred illustrative home scenes, battles, portraits, etc.

It will be sold by canvassers, whose time for real Bis-marks the hour of its publication. Persons desiring to arrange for its sale can write to Weston Hulbert, 114 Monroe street, Chicago, and secure advance sheets.

Five Thousand Books Given Away for the Asking.

While Dr. H. James was attached to the British Medical Staff in the East Indies, his high position enabled him to call about him the best chemists, physicians and scientists of the day, and while experimenting with and among the natives, he accidentally made the discovery that CONSUMPTION can be positively and permanently CURED. During the many years of his sojourn there, he devoted his time to the treatment of Lung Diseases, and upon his retirement he left with us books and papers containing full particulars, showing that every one can be his own physician and prepare his own medicine, and such information as we have received we now offer to the public without price, only asking that each remit a three-cent stamp for postage. The Wise Course in Rheumatism.

Rheumatic patients who have been induced to submit to depletion by blood-letting, or to take colchicum and other drugs of an equally pernicious character, will consult their well-being by abandoning such insane procedure, and using as a substitute Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which will infallibly afford them the much-desired relief, and is absolutely safe. This benign vegetable depurant cools the blood by expelling from it the inflammatory elements which give rise to maladies of a rheumatic and gouty type, and rectifies disordered conditions of the stomach, nervous system and bowels which usually accompany them. As rheumatism has a tendency to attack the heart, the desirability of an early resort to the Bitters is obvious, since the danger is increased by every moment of delay.

DR. WILHOFT'S ANTI-PERIODIC OR FEVER AND AGUE TONIC!—Wilhoft's Tonic has established itself as the real infallible Chill cure. It is universally admitted to be the only reliable and harmless Chill medicine now in use. Its efficacy is confirmed by thousands of certificates of the very best people from all parts of the country. It cures malarious diseases of every type, from the shaking agues of the lakes and valleys to the raging fevers of the torrid zone. Try it! It has never been known to fail. G. R. CALIFORNIA farmers sow their wheat in drills and hoe it, thus doubling the product of the grain per acre.

TO DRIVE AWAY THE MELON BUG.—Set a tomato plant into each hill of cucumbers or melons, and you will have no trouble from the striped bugs that are so destructive to these plants. The plants can be tied to stakes, and if well pruned when large, both subjects can proceed with their fruiting without detriment to one another.—Rural New Yorker.

CHANGE THE SEED.—Experiments show, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the frequent change of seeds will lead to the best results. An exchange of those grown on barren or gravel land for those gathered from a limestone soil will, it is claimed, have a good effect. It [illegible] that the continuous sowing of the same kind of seed may be one cause of the deterioration of crops whenever experienced. Make a change of seeds, get good [illegible] better results will [illegible] plainly wrought out.

RAISING ASPARAGUS.—A correspondent of the Gardeners' Monthly tells of a bed of asparagus, some twelve by twenty feet in size, planted on good level soil, which, when its growth became strong, was year by year covered with two or three inches of good rich mold. Through this shot the stalks and crept the roots. The method was followed up every season with the result of larger growth and product, till the bed became an oblong mound some two or three feet in height, and a perfect wonder as regards the quality and quantity of asparagus furnished for the table. The yearly blanket [illegible] the only [illegible]. The bed was never dug with a fork or spade.

TAKING timothy hay as a standard of comparison, it requires 100 pounds of it to supply a certain amount of nourishment. It is estimated by careful experiment that the same amount of nourishment can be obtained by using the following quantities of food: Clover hay, 95 lbs; rye straw, 335 lbs; oat straw, 220 lbs; potatoes, 196 lbs; carrots, 280 lbs; beets, 345 lbs; ruta bagas, 262 lbs; wheat, 49 lbs; peas, 44 lbs; beans, 46 lbs; rye, 49 lbs; barley, 51 lbs; corn, 56 lbs; oats, 59 lbs; buckwheat, 64 lbs; and oil cake, 94 lbs.

THERE seems to be a prevalent idea that it is not profitable to milk a cow more than eight or nine months, and most dairymen dry off their cows early and let them go dry three or four months. This is not the best practice. A cow is kept for milk, and she should be bred to holding it out as long as she can, with due regard for health. It has been proved in the cases of thousands of cows that have lived to a good old age that they can be bred to give milk ten months in the year, bear a good, healthy and strong calf, and be ready for a good milking season the next year.

FIGURING THAT PAYS.—Farmers are not given to calculating how many grains of wheat placed in a row it would require to circle the earth, or problems of a similar nature, but a little arithmetic of this kind applied to more practical subjects is worth the while, as, for instance, the following: Let two machines, one cutting four feet wide and the other five, follow in grain for one day, each being drawn a distance of 24 miles, the former will have cut 12 acres, the latter 15 acres. To cut 100 acres of wheat the former must travel 200 miles, the latter only 160. A saving of 40 miles' travel with a heavy load at the end of so long a journey is a matter of no small importance. It is a saving, too, of 40 miles walking, or 10 miles for each of the four binders. It is a saving, also, to the farmer of two days' labor for himself and team, and the wages and board of the four binders for two days in cutting 100 acres of grain.—Rural New Yorker.

About the House.

We may live without poetry, music and art;
We may live without conscience, and live without heart;
We may live without friends; we may live without books;
But civilized man cannot live without cooks.
He may live without books—what is knowledge but grieving?
He may live without hope—what is hope but deceiving?
He may live without love—what is passion but pining?
But where is the man that can live without dining?

THE juice of ripe tomatoes will remove the stains of walnuts from the hands.

SPICED CUCUMBER PICKEL—NICE.—Two dozen large cucumbers sliced and boiled in vinegar enough to cover them one hour; set them aside in hot vinegar.

BUTTER can be kept in warm weather by setting it under a dish contained in unglazed earthen-ware crock, inverted. Wrap a wet cloth around the covering vessel and place the whole where there is a draught of air.

CLEANING ZINC.—Zinc that is used under stoves should never be dampened. If it becomes soiled or dim, rub with soft flannel and a little fresh lard. Cleaned in this way a zinc may always be kept as bright and clean as when first purchased.—Exchange.

TO COOK EGGS.—To boil eggs—do not boil them. Put them in water nearly at the boiling point, and let them remain from six to eight minutes, when they will be cooked through but not hard. To test them, lift one out of the water; if it dries off quick it is well done. You will know the reason why they should be cooked in this way when you eat them.—Correspondence Country Gentleman.

DIRECTIONS FOR KEEPING FURS DURING SUMMER WEATHER.—1. Beat the furs lightly and well with a light cane or switch and shake afterward. 2. See that they are entirely free from dust or loose hairs. 3. Take a few pieces of camphor, rolled in thin paper, and place with each article in packing. 4. Always put in a dry, cool place and dark, and, if time be had, you may look at them every five or six weeks. However, if put away carefully as above, they will keep for any length of time free from moths or insects.

TO COOL A ROOM.—If the heat of a room occupied by an invalid is oppressive, it may be greatly lessened by hanging in the room [illegible] some towels or canvas well wetted [illegible] absorbs caloric. That chemical process will lower in a few minutes the temperature of a room by five or six degrees, and the humidity distributed in the air makes the heat more supportable. By that system the patients find themselves, even in the height of summer, in an atmosphere refreshed, analogous to that which prevails after a storm.

CLEANSING A BRUSSELS CARPET.—First have the carpet well shaken, then tack it down in the room where it is to remain; sweep it as thoroughly as possible; take a pail of hot water, put in two tablespoonfuls of pulverized borax; wash the carpet all over the surface, using a flannel cloth. For grease spots or very dirty places, use a scrubbing-brush freely, and a very little soap, taking care to rinse the soap out well after scrubbing; change the water quite often; rub the carpet well with a dry cloth after washing, and open doors and windows so as to dry the carpet as quickly as possible.

Hydrophobia.

DR. HAMMOND—A dog perfectly healthy, or at least free from rabies, may produce the disease by his bite through his saliva, as I have already stated. You remember the case of McCormick. In that case the dog was exhibited to the Neurological Society more than a month after he bit McCormick, and, as hydrophobia runs its course in seven or eight days, and as the dog invariably dies, he either could not have had it, or he could not have been the dog in question. Remember, it takes a wound to produce death. You might swallow the saliva and it would not kill you unless you had, perhaps, an abrasure on your lip. The saliva is only poisonous when communicated through a wound. You get lockjaw, or tetanus, from a simple wound, and hydrophobia seems to be tetanus plus a group of other symptoms.

Reporter—From all this it would appear that the science of medicine knows very little about hydrophobia.

Dr. H.—We can recognize the origin and symptoms of hydrophobia as we can those of scarlet fever or measles. To this day no one has discovered the primal origin of scarlet fever. We know that we cannot cure hydrophobia. Remember that there never has been a cure on record. It is necessary not to confound the prevention with the cure. There are a great many people who claim to have invented cures for hydrophobia, but they mean cures after the bite and before the poison has been developed. This is an easy matter, but no cure has as yet been effected after the poison (which lies dormant in the system a few weeks, and sometimes even several months, and even several years) has been developed. In the early part of last fall a distinguished officer of the army came to me, who had been bitten by a dog manifestly hydrophobic. I cauterized the wound with a red-hot iron, and I regard him as perfectly safe.—New York Herald's Interview with Surgeon General Hammond.

A Sagacious Lobster.

A striking instance of sagacity in a lobster is recorded by Mr. Barker, of the Rothesay Aquarium, in a letter to one of the Scotch papers. It seems that three lobsters were placed in a tank previously occupied by flat fish, and in which, inadvertently, a flounder had been left buried in the shingle, where it died. One of the lobsters, "a veteran of unusual size," soon discovered the dead body of the flounder, and, dragging it from its resting place, retired with it to a corner of the tank. Shortly afterward it was noticed that the flounder was missing. It was impossible that the lobster could have eaten it in the time, and the handle of a net revealed the fact that upon the approach of the two lesser lobsters he had buried the flounder beneath a heap of shingle, on which he now mounted guard. Five times within two hours was the flounder unearthed, and as often did the wily lobster rebury it with his huge claws, each time ascending the pile and turning a bold front to his companions.

A Fool and His Money.

One day last week a Schenectady man cashed a draft for $700 at a bank, and received $300 in small bills, which he put in his pocket, thinking by its size that the package contained the full amount. He was leaving, when the cashier handed him out the balance, $400, in new, crisp five-dollar notes. The man took them, and, supposing they were advertising notes, distributed them among his friends. He was astonished at the eagerness of all to secure them, and was stunned when attempting jokingly to pass one in a store he was informed that the bills were good. He spent all that night and the greater part of the next day in rushing around collecting the bills he had given away.

Brigham Young Re-elected.

The semi-annual Mormon Conference has just been held at St. George, Utah, Brigham Young and most of the prominent Mormons being present. It was generally expected that, as Brigham has seen nearly 76 years of this world's cares, he would have asked a release from at least a portion of his official duties. The most pliant of his apostles were prepared to accept Brigham the Second for a ruler. A determined opposition to his election sprung up on the part of the President, apostles, and a few of that college with whom the leading men of the church are in secret sympathy. Accordingly, Brigham was re-elected "Prophet, Seer, and Revelator" for another term of six months.

Cattle in Australia.

In Australia cattle are far in excess of the demand, and will not sell for more than can be realized from their hides, tallow, horns etc., for exportation. The flesh is almost valueless. An immense establishment has been started there for boiling the meat into condensed soup or extract. The meat, cut into large chunks, is inclosed in an enormous tight cylinder capable of holding fifty bullocks at a time, and steamed for seven hours. The tallow is then skimmed off, and the meat, mere pulp, is further solidified and canned for exportation. A bullock makes about twenty pounds of extract, as to the nutritious quality of which there is a wide difference of opinion.

ACROSTIC.

Arrayed in dainty robes of palest green;

THE DEAD STAR.

Yonder in empty dark
Wanders, somewhere, a wasted sun, whose light,
Erst breathed abroad with life-creating spark,
Made hanging gardens of the circling night.
Through Time's dark emptiness
Some soul, that genius lit, goes, withered, wan,
Its flame to blackness fallen, purposeless—
The dead star wanders with the fire-spent man!

A BAND of counterfeiters confined in the jail at Knoxville, Tenn., have been successfully operating in their old business. Molds for nickels, 25 and 50 cent pieces, together with metal for molding, were found in several cells, and the men had been manufacturing the coins and sending them out by the wife of one of the gang.

PRINCE LOUIS NAPOLEON will soon return to Chiselhurst. He is the frequent recipient of monetary gifts. Thus, at Florence, recently, he received one morning through the post 150 English sovereigns from an anonymous donor. Many of the sums which come to him in this way, and which are regarded as restitution money, the Prince distributes among the poor.

A SHORT time ago a lady residing at Clifton, England, having an income of £5,000 a year, was so struck by the devotion of a young crossing-sweeper to his mother that she proposed to him, placed him in the hands of a tutor for a couple of months, and, when he had been intellectually veneered and polished, married him at Well's Cathedral. The experiment was not a success, and the lady is now suing for a divorce.

THE town of Salisbury, N. C., is in much trouble. At the close of the Revolutionary war David Stewart was given 475 acres of land for services rendered in the army. He put the deed in his pocket and emigrated to Pennsylvania. Time passed, the town of Salisbury was built on the land, Stewart died, the deed remained locked up, and the town continued to improve until now the land is valued at $5,000,000. And now, too, the heirs of old Stewart have turned up, and claim immediate possession of the property.

THE STIRRUP-CUP.

Death, thou'rt a cordial old and rare;
Look how compounded, with what care!
Time got his wrinkles reaping thee
Sweet herbs from all antiquity.
David to thy distillage went,
Keats, and Gotama excellent,
Omar Khayyam, and Chaucer bright,
And Shakspeare for a king-delight.
These were to sweeten thee with song;
The blood of heroes made thee strong.
What heroes! Ah, for shame, for shame!
The worthiest died without a name.
Then, Time, let not a drop be spilt;
Hand me the cup whene'er thou wilt;
If death such dear distillment be,
I'll drink it down right smilingly.
—Sidney Lanier, in Scribner for May.

A PHILADELPHIA hotel is provided with an electric apparatus that, whenever the atmosphere in any room becomes hotter than 110, rings an alarm in the office. On the day after the fire in St. Louis some young and jocose guests held lighted matches under one of these contrivances, thus causing a false alarm, and the prompt employes turned a stop-cock that immediately caused the thorough wetting of the room. The jokers succeeded in affrighting all the people in the hotel, but the fun will cost them $350, that being the amount of damage done by the water.

TEXAS aspires to be one of the greatest wheat-growing and exporting sections of the country, and Galveston has pleasant anticipations of handling and shipping immense quantities of grain in the future, especially to Brazil and other South American countries. It is claimed that the wheat grown in Texas is peculiarly suited for exportation to hot climates, and that St. Louis manufacturers select it as the best from which to make flour for exportation to Brazil. Texans claim, too, that their wheat contains less water and more gluten than that grown in States further north.

RHODE ISLAND has 2,019 manufacturing establishments, with an invested capital of nearly $50,000,000, and employing 56,450 hands, to whom are paid in wages yearly the sum of $23,707,513, or an average of about $420 each. The raw material used is valued at $76,715,-970, and the value of products yearly is $126,659,875. There has been a large increase during the past year in the number of establishments engaged in manufacturing, and in the results of their business. There are 135 cotton factories, with a capital of $24,034,209, employing 22,574 hands, and yielding goods worth $38,927,960.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, MAY 10, 1877.

Hayes was anxious to have the extra session of Congress postponed on account of the heat. It would have been "hot"—for Hayes—had the extra session been called in June.

Bob Ingersoll says: "The president cannot declare that Nicholls is Governor of Louisiana without adding—and Tilden is the rightful president of the United States."

The following item is going the rounds of our Republican exchanges:

"Blue Jeans Williams bitterly denounces the liberal school system of that state. He declares that five months of school in a township each year is sufficient."

As a mater of fact there isn't a word of truth in the statement.

According to an official statement the National debt has been reduced during the past eight years $455,104,648. That is a reasonably good financial record for the Republican party. [Indianapolis Journal.

According to official statement there has been paid into the Treasury by the people, 2,000,000,000, during the past eight years. That is a reasonably bad financial record for the Republican party.

The President has issued his proclamation for an extra session of Congress to convene on next October 15th. We said a few weeks ago he dared not meet the issue, was afraid to meet the criticisms of his own party. He has put off the event until a more convenient season, with many fond anticipations, that time will assuage the wide-spread dissatisfaction in his party. We knew Hayes was but an ordinary man in ability, but we did not know before he combined cowardice with mediocrity.

Mr. Hayes has provided for Packard, or is about to provide for him, it is said. He proposes to make him Sub-Treasurer. Mr. Hayes selects his position for peculiar reasons. He is determined not to give Packard any office in Louisiana to which any political power is attached, and, as Packard will not leave the State for an office, he must make him Sub-Treasurer. We learn something daily. The latest addition to our information is that when a man cannot be trusted in politics he should be put in chargeof some public money, and made aTreasurer.[Enquirer.

The Inter Ocean gnashes its teeth over the southern policy. With a frantic "last wail" of a calf with a broken leg it begs the president to pause and kicks furiously at Stanley Matthews for his advice to the Louisiana commission. With the renewal of the ties of good feeling between the north and south which must follow the restoration of self-government there will be no use for such radical howlers as the Inter-Ocean and the Times. The bloody shirt will be furled around the legs of the whole Morton wing of the republican party.—The rule of the bayonet will give way to the ballot and prosperity will follow peace. Let it come quickly.

Kars, which comes into prominence in the war, is the citadel of the Turkish military power in Asia. It stands upon the river Kurs, in the northeastern portion of Armenia, midway between Mount Ararat and the Black Sea, and upon the road between Tiflis and Erzeroum, the capital of Armenia and the centre of traffic between Turkey and Northern Psia. It is a very strong fortress, both naturally and artificially, and is mounted with hundred pound Krupp guns, and otherwise provided against attack. It is the scene of the memorable and successful defense of Sir Fenwick Williams, in the war 1854-6 Kars can hardly be taken except by siege, but its possession is necessary to the occupation of Armenia. The Russians may, however, confine their present operations to Trebizond, on the coast across the Antitaurus mountains. Of this district the capital, Trebizond, Risch and Batoum are the principal seaports, and it is for the possession of the easternmost of these, Batoum, that the first battle of the war appears to have been fought.

New York, May 7.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg says: The Russians have taken Kars. The Russian army attacking, numbers 50,000 men. Seventeen thousand Turks were captured. Turkish ironclads are guarding the Black Sea befor Odessa.

A word to the wise. If you are suffering with a severe Cough or Cold, call on your druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup, and save large doctor bills. It relieves almost instantly. Price 25 cents. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Reader! if you have the ague go and buy a bottle of Dr Harter's Feve and Ague Specific (it will only cost you 75 cents). We assure you that it will cure you. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and all diseases of lungs and chest, are readily cured with Dr. Marshall's Lung Syrup. It never fails. Try it. Price only 25 cents. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

The grain traffic continues steady with a slight advance in prices over last quotations. The heavy rains that have fallen during the past ten days have prevented farmers from hauling their products to town; though in truth, there is but a small quantity of surplus wheat in the county, and only small lots will be offered before the fall crops come in. On yesterday the following prices were offered for the best grades of wheat: Amber, No. one, $2.03c., No. two, $1.[illegible] Oats have taken a slight skip upwards, since our last report, and best quality of white oats being 47c., corn, 52.; Eggs, 8c.; butter, 12c.; potatoes, $1.00@$1.25c.; hogs, live weight 4½@5c.; dressed, 5½@6c.; hides, green, 7 cents.

There is one enthusiastic Hayesite left in this town, who still believes that his Fraudulency is entitled to the presidential chair. But then evidently that fellow does not read the papers.

Mr. Henry Krager, a former resident or this township, died at Kendallville on last Saturday. His disease was consumption, and he had been failing for the past two years. Another estimable citizen has "gone over to the majority."

Passenger train No. 5, which passes this station going east, at 8:00 a m., ran into a cow at Butler Sunday morning, ditched the entire train and smashing things generally. It seems that the animal had got into the station yard through the carelessness of some person in charge of the same, and when the train moved out of the station, at a slow rate of speed, was struck by the locomotive this side of the switch and near the coal bins. Had the train been running at a high rate of speed, the accident might have proved serious. No one aboard of the train was hurt. But that cow—well, it is safe to say that nothing was left but a handful of hair, and a thimbleful of blood.

We understand that Peter Dragoo has added an agricultural department to his business. In trade, Peter combines the elements of both the Yankee and Jew.

He is a married man, and receiving a letter the other day through the U. S. mail—he, poor fellow, all innocence, broke the seal in the presence of a few admirers, when lo! out popped a lock of hair,—only a simple golden curl, the property of some blonde,—this and nothing more. Well, if that party goes suddenly bald-headed we may know what happened him! Lafe, beware!

Our young friend, Cast Cissel, who has been clerking for F. G. Freid, for the past year, will go to Kendallville next week, where he has procured a situation as salesman.

"Uncle Ben" is fitting up a corner in the post office for stationery and literary papers,

There was a social dance at he town Hall last Friday evening, and the affair wound up with a grand "free and easy."

LOVELAND.

WATERLOO

At last the Red Ribbon Reform movement has reached Waterloo, and is attracting considerable antention. The series of meetings held at Agricultural Hall last week, culminated on Sunday afternoon in the organization of a Club, with the following corps of officers:

Oliver Smith, President; A. Y. Rosenbury, 1st Vice President; Philip Morell, 2nd Vice President; Isaac Williams, 3rd Vice President; Lem. R. Willard, Secretary; Emory Till, Financial Secretary; Mathias Zerwis, Steward; P. Montovan and W. Zimmerman, Marshals; J. H. Stough, Sergeant at arms; L. R. Willard, Ezra Patterson, J. G. Johnson, Committee on Constitution and By-Laws; R. Wm. McBride, Ezra Patterson, R. M. Lockhart, G. T. Abby, A. B. Darby, Executive Committee; S. Z. Dickinson, Charles Bassett, Marion Bemenderfer, Financial Committee.

According to the constitution it is proposed to adopt, it is no purpose of the Club to engage in litigation, or the prosecution of either seller or drinker of ardent spirits. It is solely intended as an organized effort to get men to quit drinking liquor, "by moral suasion." If this can be accomplished, there will be no liquor sellers, and consequently none to prosecute. It will be no doubt remarked by many, that most of those who have promised to reform will fail. With many, this will undoubtedly be the case; but the Club proposes to try them again, at least the "seventy and seven times," before giving them up as hopelessly lost. Every good citizen should make it a point, not only to encourage these men who are trying to reform, but as far as possible to keep temptation out of their way.

A largely attended general meeting of those interested in the cause, was held in the United Brethern Church, on Sunday evening, and other evening meetings have been held during the present week. The movement gives promise of taking permanent hold upon the community.

The women's Christian Temperance Union, and auxiliary movement, in connection with the Red Ribbon Reform Club, has organized in town with the following officers: Mrs. W. H. Fenneman, President; Mrs. H. O. Haines, Vice President; Miss Ida Blair, Corresponding Secretary; Miss Emma Mitchell, Secretary; Mrs. John Shull, Treasurer.

B.

JUNCTION.

Who saw Whit kick the boss,

Mr. Clark is building a picket fence in front of his lot.

Mr. Spangler, Mr. Florida and Mr. Sammons, are on the sick list.

Mr. W. A. Pratt and wife, are visiting friends and relations in West Virginia.

The excursion to Avilla on last Sabbath, was very poorly attended from this place.

Ned Kinney, from Garrett is assisting in the freight department during Mr. Pratt's absence.

Our old friend [illegible], has adjourned to Avilla, where he intends going into business.

The Mail train north, on Ft. W. J. & S. R'y. last Monday evening, was delayed about three hours, on account of being off the track at St. Johns.

Those who joined the excursion to Baxter springs Kan., on the 28th inst, from this place were Isaac Ruth and and wife, Dave Bodine and Lu. Bowers.

Goth Mathews has purchased the saloon and out buildings owned by James Smith, for two hundred and fifty dollars. Mr. Smith will move to Lagrange in a few days where he will go in the saloon business again.

SPENCERVILLE.

Spencerville lodge No. 422 I. O. O. F., observied the 58 aniversary of the Institution of the order, on the 26th day of April, assisted by a delegation from Maysville lodge, and a few of the brethren from Hicksville lodge. A procession was formed which marched through the principal streets, preceded by the Spencerville Cornet Band, after which they repaired to the M. E. church, observing the ceremony as provided by the grand lodge of the U. S., and listening to an instructive and interesting address, delivered by Rev. Bro. Shafer of Lagrange. At a regular meeting it was resolved that, we, as a lodge return our thanks to the good citizens of Spencerville for their liberality in in providing for the entertainment of the brethren from abroad, and to the members of the Band who furnished the music free of charge, to the ladies and gentlemen for the music at the church, and to the trustees of the M. E. church, for the use of said church. Also resolved that this resolution be sent to each of the county papers for publication.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arraves in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the who'esale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

Ah, these early spring Mornings! What is more delightful than to spring airily from bed at 5 o'clock in the morning and take a stroll, breathe the fragrance-laden air and listen to the chirping of the birds among the trees! What, indeed, unless it is to lie snugly abed and wonder what people mean by prancing about in the damp air at such an hour.

Now is the summer of our content made disglorious winter. Hank Little has gone down to Hicksville and is trying to rob Auburn of her greatest laurel. He distorts Goldsmith without a twinge of conscience, and says, "Hicksville, the lovliest village of the plain." But the euphony is destroyed. Nothing can ever detract from that famous line, "Sweet Auburn, lovliest village of the plain."

Now is the spring time of youth, when sweet flowers and blossoms laden the air with their fragrance. It recalls pleasant associations to the old, and creates them for the young. Poets have always regarded spring as a fruitful theme for their prolific pens. "When the spring times comes, gentle Annie," has lingered with us since we were a tow-headed boy.

The Louisiana Jubilee Singers, gave an excellent concert here last Friday night, and what is unusual, pleased everybody. There were some excellent voices among them, and there was a melody in their singing seldom heard in other troupes. "Old Black Joe" by the "Get on and off man" was splendid as was also Jackson's character songs. The alto singer had a wonderful voice, and the whole troupe was good.

Our splendid old friend, Major McFaden, of Logansport, well known to many of our readers, has written a series of letters to the Logansport Pharos, and we reproduce one on the first page of this paper. It will certainly pay to peruse it, as it is written in that happy humorous vein so characteristic of the Major. We have been out on the prairies with him after game, and by Godfrey's Cordial, we know he speaks the truth.

Normal Institute.

At the solicitation of many friends in this and other parts of the county, a Normal Institute will be organized at this place on July 16th, to continue six weeks. Further notice concerning the school—its object, nature of the work, &c., will shortly be given through a circular. M. Seiler.

The Poor Old Tramp.—Is the title of a new and beautiful song and chorus by Will L. Thompson. Author of the famous "Gathering Shells from the Sea Shore." Dealers are ordering it by the thousand. Our jovial friend, Tom Cool, says there are great fears that the potato bugs will have a hard time this summer. They are now offering $2.00 a bushel for seed potatoes, so that farmers my plant and thus furnish them a field of labor. A high joint commission was held and by a vote of 8 to 7 it was decided to send out an investigating committee to examine the books of our merchants, and see who were likely to plant this year. It is thought many of them will migrate south, in order to get the benefit of Hayes' new policy.

We are in receipt of the "Southern States," a newspaper edited by our old and brilliant friend, Will H. Kernan. Formerly we were in the habit of reminding Will that his political sentiments would be more appreciable to those more radically extreme, and we believe he has now reached the field of his labor. He is a clever gentleman, a good newspaper man, a brilliant writer and has been guilty of executing some excellent poetry. As a southern editor he will meet with success, which we heartily wish him to the bulliest degree.

The Hon. John D. Defrees, of Indiana has received from President Hayes the appointment of Public Prenter, 'vice' Clapp, whose resignation takes effect June 1st. This is the second time Mr. Defrees has held the office, and from a personal acquaintence we believe he would rather starve than steal, which is hardly the case with his predecessor. The famous speech attributed to Ben. Hill last winter, at Fernando Wood's reception, and copied by republican papers as genuine, was written by Mr. Defrees, and Mr. Hill would not deny it, as he said, it was a better speech than he could make, and would credit therefor. It was an able burlesque.

Maurice H. Boren, living south-east about six miles, in Jackson township, met with a severe loss in the total destruction of his house and contents by fire last Saturday. It is thought the roof ignited from a spark. Mr. Boren was in the field working at the time, and when he became aware of the fire he hastened to quench it, but finding he could not do this, he next turned his attention to his sick wife, the mother of a child a week old. By the time she was cared for the fire had done its work and, but very little of the furniture was saved. Mr. Boren is a hardworking, honest farmer, and has a family of seven children. It would be but an act of christian charity to extend him needful assistance. His loss is about $1200. We hope all will contribute their mite.

Board of Education.

The County Board of Education, says the Waterloo Press, convened at the office of Superintendent Barns, in this place, on Tuesday. There was no business of general interest before the meeting, except receiving reports of the enumeration from the trustees, making out programme for township institutes, and completing arrangements for teachers to leave, at the close of eatch term, a report as to the condition of the schools, class, grade and degree, of advancement of each pupil in the schools, as well as the kind and condition of school furniture, apparatus, etc. Below will be found the enumeration of children of school age in the county, together with the figures for last year:

OUR TOWN ELECTION.

Increased Democratic Majority.

The town election last Monday was not an animated affair, neither party taking much interest in the result. It was a rainy day—just such weather as is generally regarded as favorable to ducks, but for some reason it did not pan out so.

The following is the vote for the different offices, the first named being Democrats:

This gives an average majority of over fifty, a heavy increase over last year. A good many republicans voted with us, as their party had sprung a false issue as to the salary of the school Board. They could not forget that that Board had the ability to erect a school building which is worth $2,000 more than it cost, and none but grumblers and those who set by and do nothing, think they got too much.

Our gallant German candidate, in the fifth ward, Mr. John Reesch, did good work. Towards the close of the polls some one remembered a vote in that ward not in yet, "Vell, he votes against me, but go and get him for the rest. I haf enough in de pox." And so he had.

The annual election, in the incorporated villages of the county, occurred on Monday. Below we give the results, as fully as we could obtain them, up to the hour of going to press.

WATERLOO.

Two tickets were in the field, one nominated by the Greenback Club, and the other by citizens composed of all parties. The Greenbackers came to grief, although their vote was largely in excess of the strength of their party in town. Indeed, other questions than politics largely controlled the voters in their choice of candidates. The vote polled was very light, in addition to the general luke-warmness, the would-be "outsiders" abstaining from voting entirely.

Below is the result, the successful candidates being on the citizens ticket:

Scattering votes were cast for men who were not candidates, the highest number being ten, given to J. P. McCogue, for Trustee in the 2nd ward. The total vote cast was 203.

BUTLER.

Our correspondent at Butler favors us with the following report:

All of the old officers have been reelected except Marshal, John H. Baxter being elected to that position, vice W. W. Tomlinson, whose term has expired. Trustees—J. J. Rank, Jonathan Hazlett and Abner F. Pinchin. No opposition to any except Pinchin: Simon Steifel ran against him, but was defeated two to one. Clerk—Hambright Reese; Treasurer—Isaac Ochs; Assessor—Elihu Ocker; Marshal—John H. Baxter: a spirited fight was made against him by Wm. Aldrich and James Chambers.

GARRETT.

Last Monday was one of the most exciting days Garrett has witnessed since its early settlement. The morning sun rose in all her majesty and the little burg of Garrett was redeemed from lawless bull dosers and rowdyism. The citizens of Garrett declared that day that law and order should prevail, by giving their voice almost unanimously in favor of the citizens ticket. The following gentlemen being elected:

Trustee, 1st ward, H. S. Morse; trustee 2nd ward, J. W. Wagner; trustee, 3rd ward, W. Y. Johnston; Treasurer, N. B. Rowe; clerk, H. M. Bicknell; assessor, J. Spencer.

These are all gentlemen of ability and integrity, highly interested in the welfare and prosperity of our town, and will look to the best interest of the same. The bull dosers made an attempt to defeat the citizen's ticket, by introducing the following ticket:

Trustee, 1st ward, A. S. Parker; trustee, 2nd ward, E. Lile; trustee, 3rd ward, H. Smith; Treasurer, Wm. Depoy Clerk, W. Hambleton; Assessor, Harrie Murphy.

The citizens are under many obligations to Messrs. Vaughn and Curtis, who learned in the early part of the day that the town would have to poll two hundred and fifty votes, or the election would not be valid. They immediately suspended business and canvassed the town thoroughly like two little men, and drumed every vote out. There never was as much interest manifested in any election here before and any one would naturally suppose, judging from the amount of wind spent that Parker was bladder blower at some putty factory. BONSONNER.

Washington wants to get up a fancy dress ball on the evening of the Fourth of July. This is none of your common balls, either. It is proposed to hold it out of doors with the five-dollars-a-yard pavement and sixteen blocks of Pennsylvania avenue for a ball room floor. Cannon are to be fired at every change of tune; twenty thousand people are to skip on the gravel; one hundred thousand dollars are to flow into the empty pockets of the managers, the world is to stand still one night, a general armistice being declared on the Turkish frontier out of respect for the occasion. This is the outline of the grand scheme which is proposed in honor of the finishing of the new pavement, and it is believed to fairly rival the pavement as a costly humbug.

Buggies For Sale.

I am offering several new, well made buggies both double and single, at very reasonable rates. They are of my own manufacture, and warranted for two years. I will sell them on one year's time. Please call at my blacksmith shop and examine them. JAMES ANDERSON.

OUR BANK.

At the last annual meeting of the Stockholders of the First National Bank Geo. Hazzard was elected Vice President, and he then intended to move here and become one of the executive officers of the institution. He found that he would not be able to come to Auburn, when he resigned the position and Wm. McIntyre was chosen in his stead and made one of the executive officers. Mr. McIntyre's well known reputation of long standing in this county, as one of our first citizens, coupled with his business capacity and experience, will, we doubt not, add to the already well known reputation of the bank. We are permitted herewith to give a list of the stockholders and the amount of stock owned by each, viz:

George Hazzard	$26,100
William McIntyre	7,000
Isaac Hague	2,500
James V. Hazzard	2,500
Ephriam Berry	2,100
Joseph E. Shilling	1,200
Jacob Walborn	1,000
George H. K. Moss	1,000
James McClellan	1,000
J. R. Lanning	1,000
Guy Plum	1,000
Joseph H. Ford	1,000
Mrs. Mary Mott	1,000
John Sugars	500
Mrs. Catharine Sugars	500
Thomas C. Mays	100
Dohlman & Co	500
Total	$50,000

By the above it will be seen that the stock of the bank is being rapidly absorbed by our own citizens. When Mr. Hazzard first came to Auburn to organize the bank, it was with difficulty that enough parties could be found here to complete the organization, but as was then predicted the institution has proved to be of such a character that it is now sought after by our best and conservative citizens.

The Board of Directors has been increased from five to nine, and now consists of Joseph H. Ford, Wm. McIntyre, Joseph R. Lanning, James McClellan, George Hazzard, Guy Plum, Isaac Hague, Jacob Walborn and Joseph E. Shilling. The officers are Joseph H. Ford, President, Wm. McIntyre, Vice President, James V. Hazzard, Cashier.

WANTED.

100,000 lbs of wool wanted at the New York Store, Auburn, Ind., for which the highest market price will be paid. We have in exchange all kinds of woolen goods, such as Jeans, flannels, blankets, &c. We will also pay cash if desired. 3m no16.

A TILT.

"It may be so, but I don't believe it."

"It's because you don't use your eyes; you're prejudiced."

"Perhaps I am."

"I know you are. It would be foolish to talk against custom-made clothing. Those who prefer it and can afford it, have a right to it, but I won't listen to your slurs against 'ready-made;' my experience is all against you. I have bought ready-made of SAM, PETE & MAX, and found it to fit as nicely, last as long and look quite as well as custom work, and for much less money.

"You seem interested in the Star Clothing House."

"I am, but not in the sense you mean. I think that a house that has done so much to raise the tone of ready-made clothing business, and at the same time reduce the prices for the people deserves a good word."

"But you detract from the custom trade."

'Not a bit of it! It is not that I love Cæsar less, but Rome more! The truth is custom work has not become poorer, and gone down, but ready-made has become better and risen up! Now do you see it?'

"I wouldn't acknowledge it if I did."

"Of course you wouldn't. Those beaten in argument seldom do. Good morning.

Its rules of business dealing with the people:

1.—ONE PRICE.
2.—CASH PAYMENT.
3.—A GUARANTEE.

THE EAST.

Suit has been entered in the New York courts by Cornelius J. Vanderbilt against his brother William for $1,000,000, on alleged breach of contract, under which it is asserted he withdrew from the contest of the late Commodore V.'s will.

The suit of the English owners of the famous Emma Mine against Trenor W. Park and others, who sold it, to recover the $5,000,000 paid for it, alleging there was fraud, deceit and misrepresentation on the part of Park in regard to the resources of the mine, has terminated in New York, after a four months' trial, in a verdict for the defendants.

During the temporary absence of James Hurd, of North Weare, N. H., his insane wife killed their son, aged 10 years, and hanged herself....At Nashua, N. H., James F. Whitney, aged 6 years, in a quarrel with a playmate, Louis Shattuck, was fatally stabbed by the latter.

The New York Gold Exchange has passed out of existence....The Union Banking Company, of Philadelphia, has failed; liabilities about $600,000....Gov. Hartranft, of Pennsylvania, has signed the death warrants of Andrew Lanahan, of Luzerne county; Edward Kelley, Michael J. Doyle, and John Donohoe, of Carbon county; and Thomas Munley, of Schuylkill county, all "Molly Maguires." The executions will take place June 21....A portion of the roof of the new Postoffice building in New York fell in, a few days ago, killing three workmen and seriously injuring three others.

The Presidents and Secretaries of the American Popular Life Insurance Company and the Centennial Life Insurance Company have been indicted by the New York Grand Jury for perjury in swearing to false statements of the financial condition of the companies....John P. Phair, who was curiously rescued from the gallows in Vermont, a short time ago, through a Boston merchant's having read his confession in a newspaper, has been further reprieved until April, 1879....Another prominent citizen of New York—John T. Daly, proprietor of the Windsor Hotel—has mysteriously disappeared.

A carriage containing five persons was struck by a railroad train near Pompton, N. J., the other day. Simon Demerest, Miss Taylor, of Paterson, and a young man, were killed, and the other two fatally injured.

THE WEST.

The people of Western Nebraska indulge the most sanguine hopes that the recent heavy snow-storm and cold snap in the western part of the State will have the effect to entirely destroy the grasshoppers....Judge Schaeffer, of Utah, has rendered a decision in the divorce case of Ann Eliza vs. Brigham Young, to the effect that there was no marriage between the parties, and that Ann Eliza is not entitled to a decree of divorce.

The Coroner's jury in the inquest on the victims of the Southern Hotel fire, at St. Louis, censure the proprietors of the hotel for neglecting to provide for the extinguishing of fires; for keeping in the store-room and wine-cellar a large amount of inflammable material without adequate watching; for removing from their office the gong necessary to alarm the inmates of the hotel in case of fire; employing only one watchman, and he a very inefficient man, and supplementing his duties as such with other matters; for lack of rules and instructions to their employes as to their conduct and duties in case of fire; and for their making no efficient efforts on the night of the fire to awaken their guests and employes....The Chicago Times thinks the excitement in the grain market is about over, and says: "If anybody believes in another upward bound of prices he will be doomed to disappointment. Farmers and speculators who have grain, pork, or anything marketable to sell are advised to sell now instead of yielding to the tendency to wait for still higher prices."

A freight train on the Danville and Vincennes railroad jumped the track in the suburbs of Chicago, a few days ago, resulting in the killing of two men and the wounding of five others.

The Toledo Blade publishes a comprehensive crop report, gathered from observation in about 300 places in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri. The tenor of the reports is highly gratifying in all the wheat-growing districts. The prospect is unusually good, better than has been known for years. Many call it the best ever known. There was but little, if any, winter-killing. Preparations are making everywhere for the planting of an uncommonly large acreage of corn.

Advices from the grasshopper regions of the West represent that the recent cold weather has made serious inroads upon the crop of grasshoppers. In some sections the pests have been destroyed altogether. Numerous swarms of blackbirds have appeared in some localities, and are playing havoc with the infantile 'hoppers.

Terre Haute, Ind., is greatly excited over the foul murder of one of her prominent citizens, A. C. Mattox, who, as he was passing along an unfrequented street at night, was set upon by a highwayman, robbed and fatally shot. The assassin escaped....Sam Orr, a noted desperado and murderer, was executed last week at Mount Vernon, Lawrence county, Mo....The court docket of Rockford, Ill., is burdened with $100,000 worth of libel suits.

THE SOUTH.

Ex-Senator William G. Brownlow, of Tennessee, died recently at his home at Knoxville in that State, aged 72.

A dispatch from Meridian, Miss., says: "An old feud culminated in a terrible tragedy, on the 29th ult. On the 26th John W. Gully, a prominent citizen, was waylaid and assassinated. Upon the affidavits of two negroes several alleged conspirators in the assassination were arrested. On the 29th a large party of men fired upon the prisoners, killing J. P. Gilmer, A. McClellan, John Chisholm and David Rosser, and mortally wounding William W. Chisholm."

The question of the title to the State offices in South Carolina was settled at Columbia, by the counsel for the Republican claimants, who went into the Supreme Court and moved to withdraw the answers from file, and consented that judgment be entered in favor of plaintiff. The Hampton State officers were advised of the entry of judgment, and Gov. Hampton issued instructions to remove the seals from the several offices. The Republican claimants gracefully yielded, and the Hampton officials are now in full possession of all the offices.

There is a hitch in the payment of the Packard police and legislative employes by the Nicholls Government, in New Orleans. It was agreed that they should be paid out of the contingent fund, but the Attorney General has [illegible] the constitutionality of such payment.

WASHINGTON.

Ex-Gov. Noyes, of Ohio, it is said has been tendered and has accepted the position of Minister to France. It is also reported that ex-Gov. Fletcher, of Missouri, may be tendered the mission to Vienna. Gov. Noyes will not sail for France until his nomination shall have been confirmed by the Senate at the approaching session....A Washington dispatch says: "There are to be no more pardons for whisky thieves. The President is understood to have said that the sole survivor of the whisky ring, Joyce, must expect to serve out his full term. Judge Devens is thoroughly in sympathy with the President in this matter."

The Attorney General has issued a circular setting forth his determination to reduce the expenses of the Department of Justice $40,000 annually. This will be done in a great measure by reducing the salaries of Assistant District Attorneys, and in many cases dispensing with them altogether....The President has appointed Judge John E. King Collector of the Port of New Orleans, in place of James F. Casey.

There are indications that the Treasury Department is contemplating another whisky-ring war. The laws as to gauging, it is said, are to be more strictly observed, and the subordinate revenue officers are to be moved about from station to station more than they have been since the last whisky raid....The revenue from internal taxation in the year ending May 1 exceeded by nearly $2,500,000 the amount collected in the preceding twelve months. The authorities confidently expect that the receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30 will come fully up to the estimate of $120,000,000....The Comptroller of the Currency reports the amount of United States bonds on deposit as security for the circulation of national banks on the 1st of May, $340,732,800, an increase of $2,000,000 since the publication of his report Nov. 1, 1876. The net increase of national-bank circulation for the month of April was $124,000. Amount of additional circulation issued, $1,452,260. The amount of national-bank circulation outstanding May 1, was $318,364,667....John D. Defrees has been appointed Public Printer in place of A. M. Clapp, resigned.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is of the opinion that there is not a barrel of illicit whisky in the market, and that none is being manufactured, except in remote mountainous sections of the South.

Secretary Schurz contemplates great reductions in the pension service. The districts will probably be consolidated and reduced one-half. ....Gen. George A. Sheridan, of Louisiana, is an applicant for the post of Minister to Central America....Ex-Gov. Thomas C. Fletcher, of Missouri, wants to fill the Austrian mission....Secretary Schurz has appointed the following Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company: John C. S. Harrison, of Indiana; Francis B. Brewer, of New York; James F. Wilson, of Iowa; Joseph H. Willard, of Nebraska; and Daniel Chadwick, of Connecticut.

POLITICAL.

Gov. Packard, it is said, is an applicant for the Collectorship of the port of New Orleans. ....It is reported that John D. Defrees will succeed A. M. Clapp as Government Printer.

A Washington dispatch says: "Gen. Banks can hardly be considered a compromise candidate for the Speakership. He has intimated to his friends that it is by no means certain that he can support Hayes' Southern policy."

Senator Blaine has been chosen Chairman of the Maine Republican State Committee for the eighteenth consecutive year....The Pennsylvania Republican State Convention has been called to meet at Harrisburg on the 8th of August.

A Washington dispatch says: "The number of applicants for the position of Consuls from Ohio is on the increase. The President has intimated that he thinks the Buckeye State has its full quota of officers."....The entire Republican city ticket has been elected in Indianapolis by majorities ranging from 500 to 1,500.... Secretary Sherman has determined to rigidly enforce the letter and spirit of the law which requires that appointments in the treasury shall be equally distributed between the several States and Territories.

A political combination is being effected at Washington by the friends of Gen. Banks, looking to his elevation to the Speakership. So says a capital correspondent....The Republican State Convention of Iowa has been called to meet at Des Moines on the 27th of June.

GENERAL.

The eighth annual report of the Board of Indian Commissioners is made public. The report reviews what has been done under the peace system and deprecates the want of good faith of the Government in its treatment of the Indians. It concludes with the following recommendations: Immediate compliance on the part of the Government with the terms of existing treaties with all Indians; appropriation for consolidating agencies; generous appropriation for educational purposes; discontinuance of tribal relations; extension of the law for the protection of life and property; allotments of land; establishment of industrial and agricultural boarding schools; compelling the attendance of all between 7 and 18 years of age; issue of supplies to be made to heads of families; increase of salaries to Indian Agents.

The Quebec (Canada) City Council passed some measures obnoxious to certain citizens, whereat the City Hall was besieged by a mob while the Council was in session. The mob forced their way into the Council Chamber, breaking every piece of furniture in the room, destroyed papers, and made a general wreck. The police were powerless to preserve order, and the military were called out. Before dispersing the mob hurled a volley of stones at the City Hall, smashing every window in the building....The celebrated Stevens battery, which cost about $3,000,000 has been sold to an agent of the Russian Government for $1,000,000. The battery was begun before the war of the rebellion by the late Edwin A. Stevens, of Hoboken, N. J., and was designed by him to be the most formidable ironclad afloat. It was intended by its builder as a present to the State of New Jersey.

A fearful catastrophe occurred at Montreal, Canada, a few mornings since. The dismantled walls of a large factory building which had taken fire a short time before, and upon which the firemen were working, suddenly tottered and fell outward with an awful crash, burying lower buildings adjoining in the ruins, and overwhelming a large number of people in the appalling shower of red-hot bricks. Nine men were killed outright, and ten were wounded in various degrees of severity.

THE LOUISIANA COMMISSION.

Text of Their Report to the President—A Brief Summary of Their Labors at New Orleans.

The following is the report of the Louisiana Commissioners to President Hayes:

NEW ORLEANS, April 21, 1877.

To the President of the United States:

Sir—In accordance with your request, the undersigned have visited this city and passed the last sixteen days in ascertaining the political situation in Louisiana and endeavoring to bring about a peaceful solution of its difficulties. In view of the declaration in the letter of the Secretary of State that we should direct our efforts to the end of securing the recognition of a single Legislature as the depository of the representative [illegible] leaving, if necessary, to judicial or other constitutional arbitrament within the State the question of ultimate right, and in view of your determination to withdraw the troops of the United States [illegible] as soon as it could be done without endangering the peace, we addressed ourselves to the task of securing a common Legislature of undisputed authority competent to compose the existing political contentions and to preserve the peace without any aid from the national Government. To this end we endeavored to assuage the bitterness and animosity we found existing on both sides, so as to secure public opinion less unfavorable to such concessions as were indispensable to our success in obtaining such Legislature and such general acquiescence in its authority as would insure social order. We have had full conferences with the two gentlemen who claim the gubernatorial office, and with many other members of their respective governments, in their executive, judicial and legislative departments. We have also conversed very freely with large delegations of men of business, with many of the District Judges, and with hundreds of prominent citizens of all parties and races, representing not only this city, but almost every parish in the State. We have also received many printed and written statements of fact and legal arguments, and every person with whom we came in contact has shown an earnest desire to give us all possible information bearing upon the unfortunate political divisions in this State. The actual condition of affairs on our arrival in this city may be briefly stated as follows: Gov. Packard (we shall speak of both gentlemen by the title they claim) was at the State House with his Legislature and friends, and an armed police force. As there was no quorum in the Senate, even upon his own theory of law, his Legislature was necessarily inactive. The Supreme Court which recognized his authority had not attempted to transact any business since it was dispossessed of its court room and the custody of its records on the 9th day of January, 1877. He had no organized militia, alleging that his deficiency in that respect was owing to his obedience to the orders of President Grant to take no steps to change the relative position of himself and Gov. Nicholls. His main reliance was upon his alleged legal title, claiming that it was the constitutional duty of the President to recognize it, and to afford him such military assistance as might be necessary to enable him to assert his authority of Governor. Gov. Nicholls was occupying Odd Fellows' Hall as a State House. His Legislature met there, and was actively engaged in the business of legislation. All the departments of the city Government of the city of New Orleans recognized his authority. The Supreme Court nominated by him and confirmed by his Senate was holding daily sessions, and had heard about 200 cases. The time for the collection of taxes had not arrived, but a considerable sum of money in the form of taxes had been voluntarily paid into his treasury, out of which he was defraying the ordinary expenses of the State Government. The Nicholls Legislature had a quorum in the Senate upon either Nicholls' or Packard's theory. The Packard Legislature had a quorum in the House on its own theory of law, but, as already stated, not in the Senate, and was thus disabled from any legislation that would be valid even in the judgment of its own party. The commission found it to be very difficult to ascertain the precise extent to which the respective governments were acknowledged in the various parishes outside of New Orleans, but it is safe to say that the changes which had taken place in the parishes after the organization of the two governments on the 9th of January, 1877, were in favor of the Nicholls Government. The claim to the legality of the Supreme Court, composed of Chief Justice Manning and his associates, who were nominated by Gov. Nicholls and confirmed by his Senate, rests upon the same basis as the title of Gov. Nicholls and his Senate. The claim to the legality of the Supreme Court composed of Chief Justice Ludeling and his associates rests either upon their right to hold over in case Nicholls' court is illegal, or upon the legality of the Kellogg-Packard Senate, which confirmed the judges, upon the nomination of Gov. Packard, and while it had a Returning Board quorum. We have briefly sketched the actual position as we found it. We will now state the legal question upon which the right of these respective Governments depends. The constitution of the State of Louisiana requires that "the returns for all elections for members of the General Assembly shall be made to the Secretary of State." It also provides that "the qualified electors shall vote for Governor and Lieutenant governor at the time and place of voting for representation. The returns of each election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officers to the Secretary of State, who shall deliver them to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on the second day of the General Assembly then to be holden. The members of the General Assembly shall meet in the House of Representatives and examine and count the votes." It will be observed that this provision of the constitution requires the returns of the votes for Governor and Lieutenant Governor to be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officers to the Secretary of State, and the same provision is made in substance as to the members of the General Assembly. But in 1870 the Legislature passed an act, amended in 1872, which created a body called the Returning Board, consisting of five members, to be appointed by the Senate, and to "be the returning officers for all elections in the State." The act provides that "the Commissioners of Election at each poll or voting-place shall count the votes," making a list of the names of all persons voted for and the offices for which the votes were given, the number of votes received by each, the number of ballots contained in the box, and the number rejected and the reasons therefor, and to make duplicates of such lists and send one to the Supervisor of Registration of the parish of Orleans, and one to the Secretary of State. The law further requires the Supervisors of Registration to consolidate the returns received from the different polling-places, and forward them with the originals to this Returning Board. The act further provides that if there shall be any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery or corrupt influence, at any place within said parish at at or near any poll or voting-place or place of registration, which riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation and disturbance, bribery and corrupt influence shall prevent, or tend to prevent, a fair, free, peaceable, and full vote of all qualified electors, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner to make a statement of such facts, and forward the same to the Supervisor of Registration with his returns of election, and the Supervisor of Registration shall forward the same to the Returning Board. The Returning Board is required to investigate the statements of intimidation, and to exclude from the returns which it makes to the Secretary of State the returns received by it from the polls or voting-places where a fair election has been prevented by the causes above named.

The same law further declares that it shall be the duty of the same Secretary of State to transmit to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and to the Secretary of the Senate of the last General Assembly a list of the names of such persons as, according to the returns, shall have been elected to either branch of the General Assembly, and it shall be the duty of the Clerk and Secretary to place the names of the Representatives and Senators-elect so furnished upon the roll of the House and of the Senate respectively, and those Representatives and Senators whose names are so placed by the Clerk and Secretary respectively in accordance with the foregoing provisions and none other shall be competent to organize the House of Representatives or the Senate. It is claimed by the counsel for the Nicholls Government that this act, so far as it interposes the Returning Board [illegible] powers of exclusion between the parish Supervisor of Registration with his consolidated returns and the Secretary of State, in when applied to the election of members of the General Assembly, of Governor, and of Lieutenant Governor, a plain violation of those provisions of the constitution of Louisiana which say the returns of all elections of the General Assembly shall be made to the Secretary of State, and in reference to Governor and Lieutenant Governor the returns of every election shall be sealed up and transmitted by the proper returning officers to the Secretary of State, who shall deliver them to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. On the other hand, it is insisted by the counsel for the Packard Government, that the Legislature has the power to create this Returning Board, and give it the authority with which [illegible] by them, that the constitutionality of the act has been settled by the Supreme Court of the State, but the Nicholls party denied that the question was decided by the Supreme Court in a manner that could be considered authoritative. It should be further stated that it is claimed by the counsel for the Nicholls Government that the Legislature could not create a Returning Board and clothe it with these powers with regard to the appointment of Presidential electors, since the provisions of the State constitution, on which they rely, relate only to the election of members of the Legislature, of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. We quote the following from one of their printed arguments: "Indeed, as to Presidential electors, the mode of the appointment is by the constitution of the United States left to the discretion of the Legislature of the State. Therefore, the General Assembly of Louisiana might create any tribunal whatever and confide to it the appointment of electors for President and Vice President. Consequently, it may properly authorize such a tribunal in case of the election of Presidential electors by the people, to count the votes and decide and declare who were entitled to seats in the Electoral College." As matters stood on our arrival here, the legal title of the respective claimants to the office of Governor depended upon the question we have stated. There was no judicial tribunal, acknowledged to be authoritative by both parties, by which it could be solved, for the reasons already given. The only hope of a practical solution was by the union of so many members of the rival Legislatures as would make a Legislature with a constitutional quorum in both Senate and House of members whose title to their seats is valid under either view of the law. With a Legislature of undisputed authority, the settlement of the other questions could, as stated in the letter of instructions to our commission from the Secretary of State, be gradually worked out by the prevalent authority which the legislative power, when undisputed, is quite competent to exert in composing the conflicts in co-ordinate branches of the Government. Within the last three days this [illegible] State has been accomplished. In consequence of the withdrawal of members from the Packard to the Nicholls Legislature, the latter has eighty-seven Returning-Board members in the House and thirty-two Returning-Board members in the Senate. Sixty-one members constitute a constitutional quorum in the House, and nineteen in the Senate. It is proper that we should say, in conclusion, that it was in view of the foregoing facts, especially the consolidation of the Legislatures, and our knowledge of the condition of Louisiana, derived from personal contact with the people, that we were induced to suggest in our telegram of the 20th inst. that the immediate announcement of the time when the troops would be withdrawn to their barracks would be better for the peace of Louisiana than to postpone such announcement to some distant day. The Commissioners, holding various shades of political belief, cannot well concur in any sketch of the probable future of Louisiana. We have forborne in this report to express any opinion on the legal questions arising upon the foregoing statement of facts because our letter of instructions seemed to call for a statement of facts rather than an expression of opinion by the Commissioners. We all, however, indulge in confident hopes of better days for all races in Louisiana. Among the reasons for these hopes are the resolutions of the Nicholls Legislature and the letter of Gov. Nicholls herewith submitted, and which have already been given to the public. With an earnest hope that the adjustment which has been made of the political controversies of Louisiana will be of lasting benefit to that State, and will be approved by the patriotic people of all sections, we have the honor to be your obedient servants,

Fire Insurance Statistics.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters was in session in New York last week. The President, in an address, remarked that not one dollar had been lost to the public through the failure of any member of the organization, and this was owing to adherence to the rules and decisions. Capital employed for the year shows an increase from $55,383,020 to $56,629,440, upon which a dividend of 13.67 per cent. was paid. The aggregate of premiums received for the year 1876 was $45,178,275, against $49,808,256 for the previous year. The decline in premiums was $4,634,981. The losses were $23,118,183 for 1876, against $24,076,604 for 1875. The decline in losses is $958,421. The loss ratio has thus increased from 48.33 to 51.17 per cent. This indicates either that the average rate of premium is decreasing or the losses increasing. The percentage of losses paid to premiums received was, for New York State companies, 49.17 per cent.; companies of other States, 52.79 per cent., and foreign companies 47.18 per cent. The number of local boards at the present time is 1,217, with a membership of 9,508 agents. The increase in the number of boards is 106, and in members 506.

In regard to incendiarism and arson the President said that three years ago subscriptions were begun to a fund for the conviction and punishment of incendiaries, and, since that time, a large number of rewards for conviction have been paid. The number of rewards offered from April 1, 1876, to April 1, 1877, is 161, amounting to $59,990. Twenty-one convictions have been secured during the year.

Reno's War Record.

Considerable curiosity has been evinced as to the war record of Maj. Marcus A. Reno, whose recent court-martial has attracted attention throughout the country. He is a graduate of West Point, class of 1857, and is therefore past the period of youthful indiscretion, having been in continuous service twenty years. He was promoted at once into the First Dragoons, on duty in Oregon, where he remained on duty until the war of 1861. At this time the dragoons were changed to cavalry, and Lieut. Reno became a Captain in the First Regiment, which was formed of the First Dragoons. During the years 1861 and 1862 he took part in ten engagements in the campaigns against Richmond, for which he received his first brevet. In 1863-4 he participated in seven battles, and was breveted Lieutenant Colonel. He was on staff duty until the close of the war, having in 1862 commanded the Twelfth Pennsylvania Cavalry and received a brevet as Brigadier of volunteers. In 1865 he was detailed to the important position of instructor of tactics at the Military Academy.

THE NANCY CLEM MYSTERY.

[illegible] Dramatic [illegible] Four Trials—Two Convictions, and Twenty Months of a Life Sentence in an Indiana Penitentiary.

[Indianapolis Cor. Chicago Times.]

The Cold Spring tragedy, or the Clem [illegible] this city eight years ago. The death of Jacob Young and his wife, shot down side by side at a lonely spot on the bank of White river; the arrest soon afterward of Mrs. Nancy Clem for the murder, with two male accomplices, one of them being her brother, Silas Hartman; the long series of hard-fought trials that followed, ending five years later in the release of the woman after four trials for murder, two convictions, and twenty months of a life sentence spent in the penitentiary; the strange but incomplete revelations of mysterious financial transactions on a large scale which came out in these trials, and the constantly heightening thrill of strange horror and mysterious interest that first convulsed the immediate neighborhood, and later spread in continually-widening circles over the whole country, as the singular revelations went on—all these are still too recent to have been forgotten.

Now the mystery is coming to light in several civil suits, in which Mrs. Clem will figure variously as witness and party. In one of these suits, to which she is not a party, the court two or three weeks since ordered the taking of her deposition. This was done privately and at great length, Gen. Ben Harrison, of the counsel in the suit, conducting it. For a whole week this extraordinary woman, who was never on the witness stand in the whole course of the judicial proceedings against her, was subjected to a close examination, by a skilled lawyer, and it has been made clear that Mrs. Clem, Young, the murdered man, Abrams, an accomplice in the murder, and others whose connection with these was more or less obscure, were engaged in a strange course of dealing in money, which placed them in relations of confidence and of large credit, without visible foundation, with some of the strongest banks and most conservative business men in the city. Mrs. Clem, or more frequently the others, who acted as her agents and go-betweens, were able to procure sums ranging up to $10,000 from such banks as Harrison's and Fletcher's, and from [illegible] Wright, then and now a prominent business man; R. S. Dorsey, and others. These loans were without visible security, and apparently made by the lenders without knowledge of the business in which they were to be used. It seemed to be enough for them that for a time the loans were promptly paid with gratifying usury. This did not last, however.

When the denouement came it brought with it not only murder, but bankruptcy and robbery. The balances were all on the wrong side. When Young was killed he owed the banks and others over $40,000, and his assets were not $6,000. Also, $7,000 on his person the day of the murder disappeared from the body. The theory of the prosecution was that himself and wife were killed to shut their mouths and cover up the spiriting away of this and other large sums by Mrs. Clem.

It also appears that Mrs. Clem used the money and credit of men and women whose confidence she was able to gain by some mysterious power—personal magnetism, perhaps—to furnish a gang of gamblers with means to carry on their business, while she shared in their gains. She was, she says, in intimate relation with the gamblers' business. At times, she cooked meals for them. At other times she stood guard while the play was progressing. She was paid for all these services. On one critical occasion she received $500 for watching at the door.

The Transit of Venus.

Progress is reported at the Greenwich Observatory in reducing the observations made on the last transit of Venus. Two of the most recent calculations required the use of 3,000,000 figures. The French attempts at obtaining new figures for the sun's distance by the study of the photographs taken during the transit have been reported as turning out badly. It is even doubted whether the photographs can be used at all for this calculation. Better results are hoped for at Washington from the photographs taken by the American expeditions, but the work proceeds very slowly, because the appropriations by Congress were much smaller than had been expected.

RUSSIA'S ADVANCE.

Physical and Military Conditions Governing the Plan of the Invasion.

Entering the Dobrudscha—Cutting the Turkish Lines of Supply.

A Combined Movement.

The Russian invasion of Turkey, so long expected by those who put no faith in the efforts of diplomacy to delay an inevitable conflict, is an accomplished fact. The Czar's Rubicon, the Pruth, has been crossed, and his columns are marching southward and westward, developing the grand line of battle in which they will move forward for the conquest of the Ottoman empire in Europe. The possibilities of the campaign are therefore of absorbing interest, filled as they must be with the fate of one if not of many nations. The accompanying map is intended to show the exact positions of the opposing armies in European Turkey at the opening moves of the grim game of war, and, therefore, none of the unnecessary details of topography are presented in it that might tend to confuse the reader when studying the preliminary movements.

It will be observed that geographically Turkey bears the same relation to Russia as Spain does to France—that is, the territories of the two empires are united by a comparatively narrow neck of land, which is bounded on the one side by Austria and on the other by the Black sea. Instead of the mountain obstacles of the Pyrenees, which would present themselves to a French invading army moving into Spain, the Russians find almost equally difficult ones in the complicated river systems that intersect the country between Kischeneff and Rustchuk, the most formidable being of course the Danube, with its broad and rapid current. The Russians, aware of the delays that must necessarily attend transportation in a region like Roumania, which is poorly-provided with common roads and has only one line of single-track railroad running through its length, appear to have adopted the bold plan of crossing the Danube in force from Belgrade and Galatz into the region of the Dobrudscha, or that which lies between the Danube and the Black sea northward of Varna and Schumla. The effects, in a military sense, of crossing the river at the points named will be twofold. The obstacle of the Danube itself will be overcome without opposition at the outset of the campaign by a force large enough to take care of itself in the enemy's territory, and the river will at once cease to be under the exclusive control of the Turks as a line of defense. The Turkish gunboats now patrolling the Danube westward of Silistria cannot pass the torpedoes and earthworks that will be placed and constructed by the Russians at Galatz and Brahilo to prevent their escape and to close the river against any others that might attempt to pass up to their assistance. But then the Russian army will enter a very narrow territory, and, as the Turks control the river Danube as yet to where it trends northward near Sistova, the Russian communications will be endangered as soon as the army marches southward of Hirchova. The danger to the Russians in their advance through the Dobrudscha is further increased by the fact that they will be confronted by the united garrisons of Rustchuk, Schumla, Silistria and Varna, which troops can readily concentrate on the line of the Kustendji railroad and defend that important line of supply. If defeated and forced back, the Turks have another line of defense—namely, that of the Varna, Schumla and Rustchuk railroad, which, although longer and more difficult to hold, is nearer their base of supplies, and furnishes its own points of refuge in the fortresses named in case of disaster.

This movement by the Russian army, although facilitated somewhat by the railroad, will still be a slow one, owing to the length of the territory needing defense. Evidently from their movements they mean to cut the railroad lines between Kustendji and Varna, the supply ports of the Black sea and the Danube. If these lines are severed the Turkish troops in the field will be forced into the fortresses; the fortresses will then become isolated and cease to be mutually defensive. Schumla, like Metz, will be starved into surrender, and the Russian army will have no enemy between it and Adrianople. Such a result is worth attaining at the expense of the most daring enterprises, and among these may be classed the invasion of the Dobrudscha. If Rustchuk falls the railroad southeastward from that fortress becomes at once a line of supply for the Russian army, and one that cannot be seriously interrupted by any Turkish forces. The cutting of the line between Varna and Schumla would be more fatal to the Turks than a break between Schumla and Rustchuk, because it would deprive the most important fortress in Turkey of all means of supply. A determined effort will therefore be made by the Sultan's army to defend these railroad lines, and the heaviest fighting of the war is likely to take place along them.

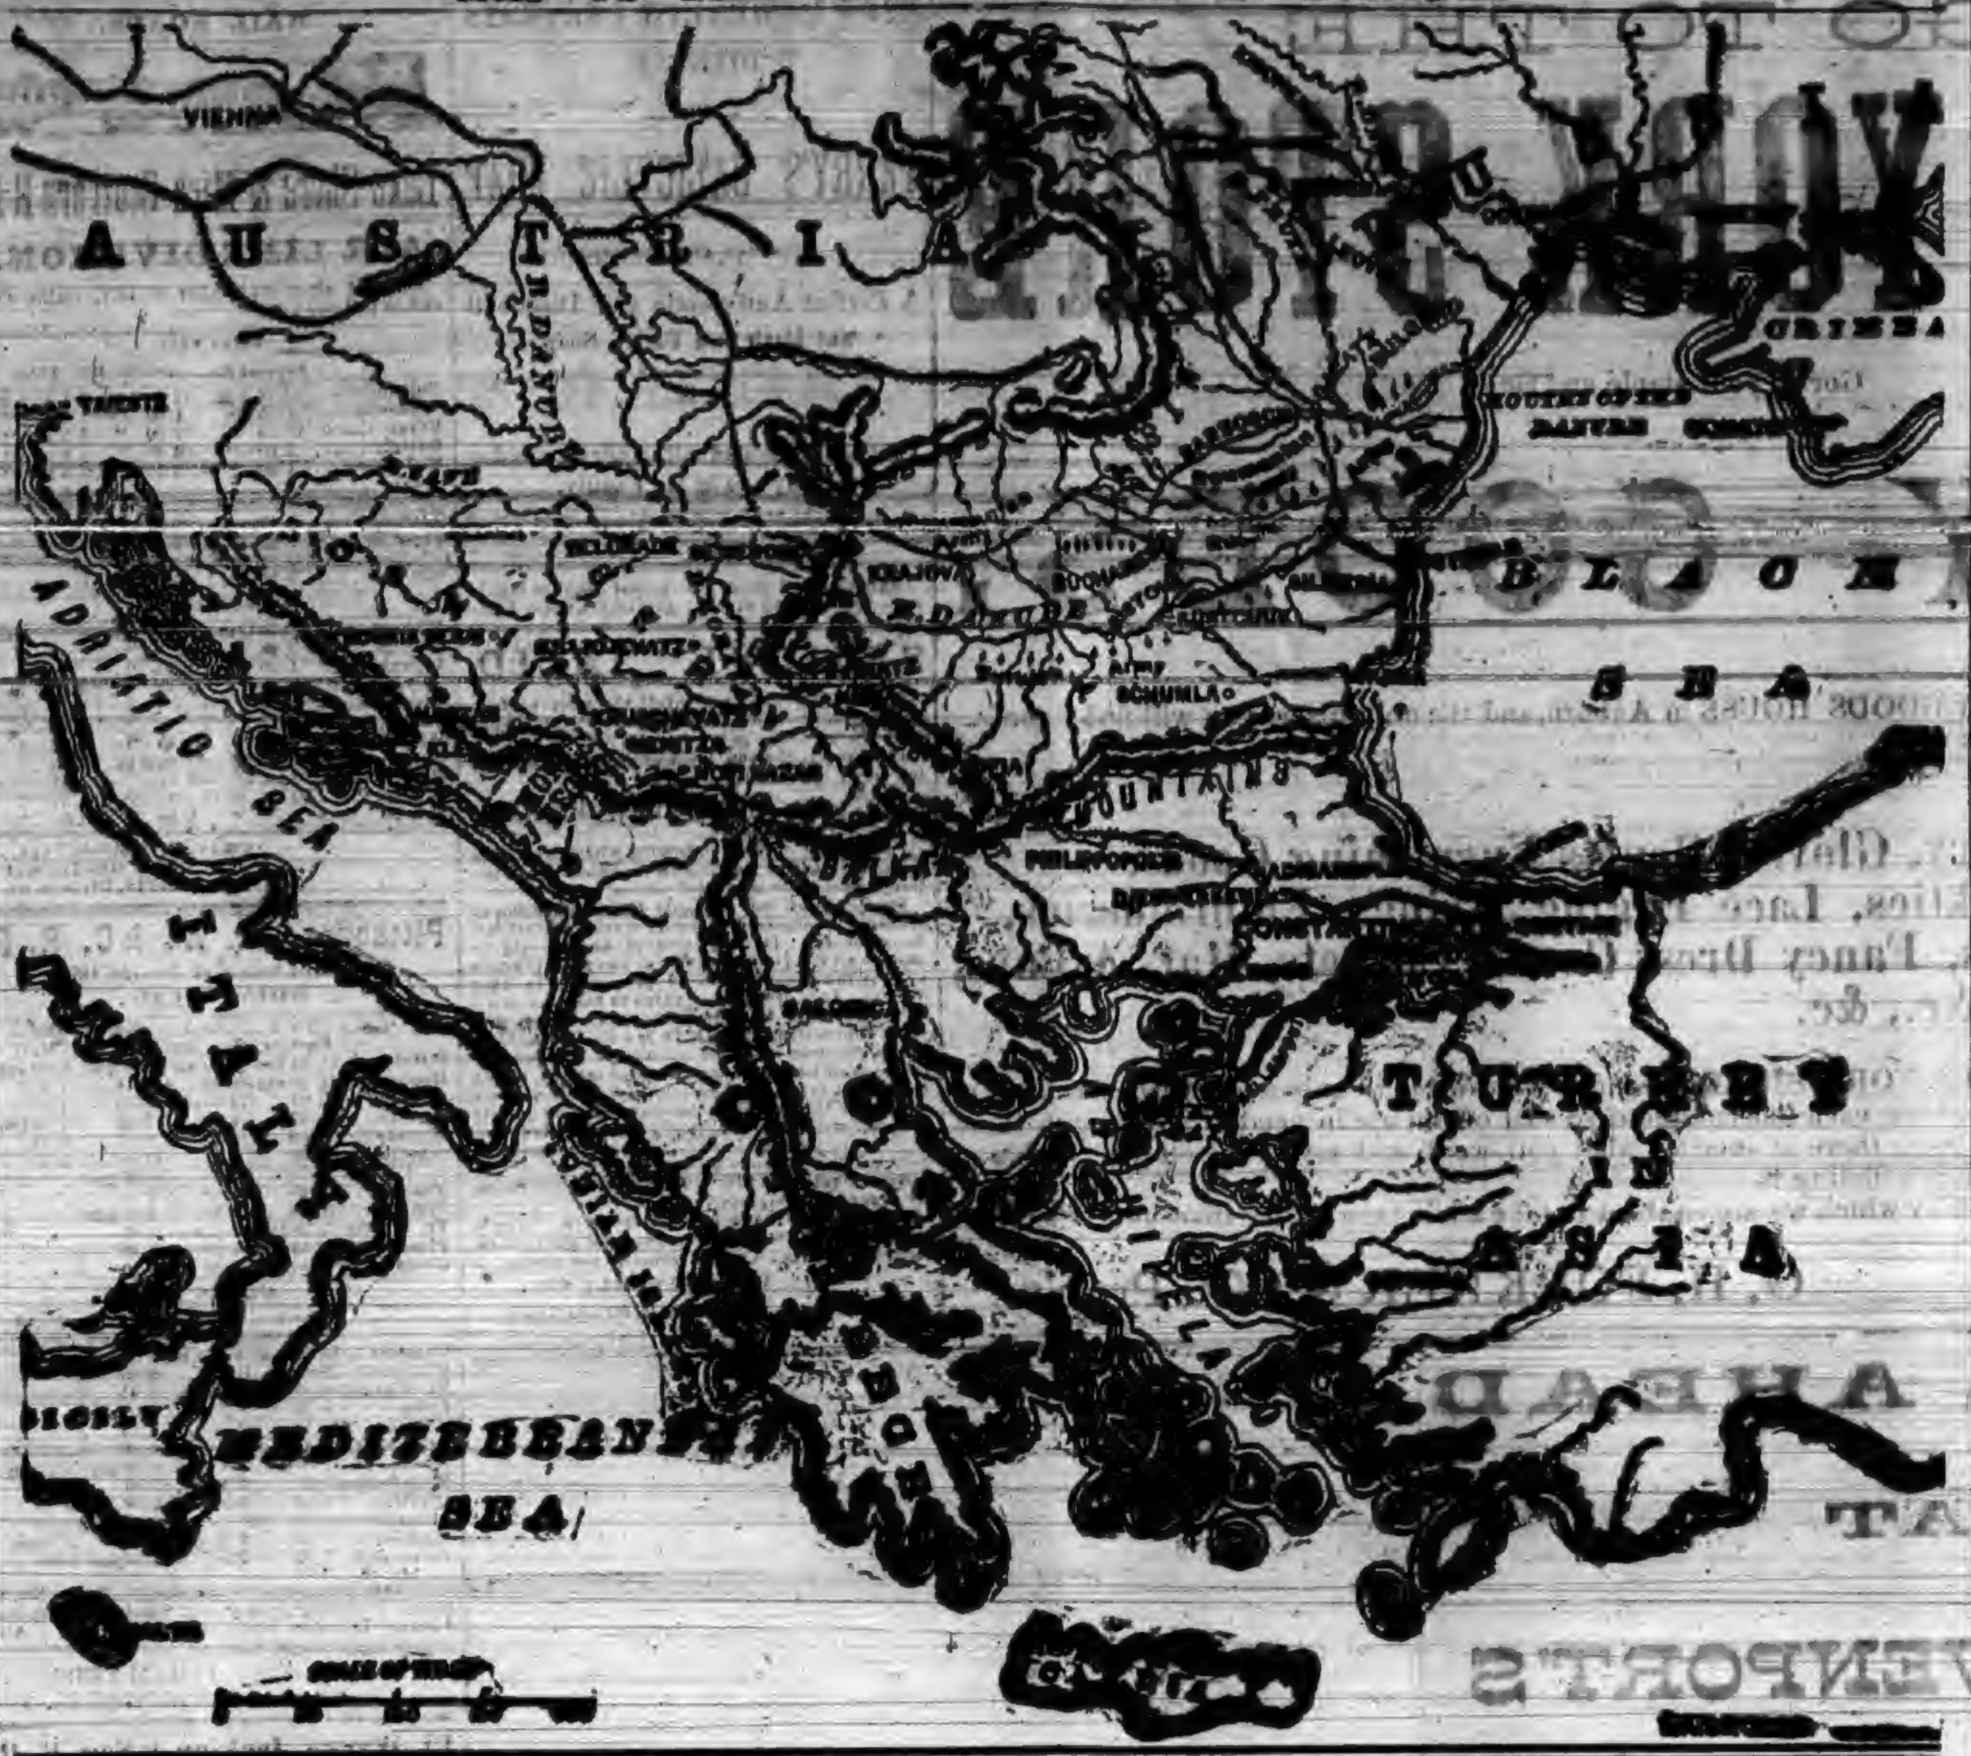
France and Germany.

One of the most noteworthy and significant events of the present troublous times in Europe was the recent speech of Gen. Von Moltke, the great Prussian military leader, in the German Parliament. The debate was on the war estimates, which included a grant for 105 new Captaincies, which Von Moltke advocated as a measure of great necessity, in view of the complete and colossal work which was being inaugurated by France in the reorganization of her army. In his remarks, Von Moltke said that he wished for a long peace, but the times did not permit such a hope. On the contrary, the day was not far distant when every Government would be compelled to strain all its strength for securing its existence, the reason being the regretable distrust of Governments toward each other. He pointed warningly to France. The French military budget exceeded that of Germany 150,000,000 francs per year; French journals were extremely bitter in their tone; the French army was the pride of all political parties; and everything that was granted to the military received the approval of the people. He would not say if France was arming with a definite purpose, but he did not believe that peace would long be maintained. Von Moltke is prophetic. The victories of the French at Jena and Austerlitz were dimmed by the German triumphs of Gravelotte and Sedan, and the humiliating conditions imposed by the conquerors have neither been forgotten nor forgiven.

An Ungrateful Client.

Tom King was arrested in Paris, Texas. The charge against him is for stealing Gov. Throckmorton's horse. Gov. Throckmorton volunteered to defend him, believing from his actions that he was innocent, and did succeed in acquitting him. When King was called to be discharged by the court, he was missing, and it was soon discovered that the Governor's horse was also gone.—McKinney (Texas) Advocate.

MAP OF THE SCENE OF WAR IN EUROPE.



A FAMOUS LEGAL STRUGGLE.

Myra Clark Gaines' Forty Years' Litigation—The Marvelous Energy with Which the Little Woman Prosecuted Her Suit.

The romance of reality has seldom appeared so prominently as in the famous suit which has reached a final decision in New Orleans. The prosecutor, Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines, first brought her case into the courts more than forty years ago, and the time, the talk and the papers pertaining thereunto make Dickens' Jarndyce case rather a tame affair in comparison. Nearly every American lawyer of the past half century has sharpened or dulled his wits on this dispute, even when not stimulated by a retainer on either side, while hosts of able jurists have taken part in the struggle until a higher court summoned them into another sphere with their labors unfinished. The plaintiff herself has on occasion appeared in court as her own attorney, and by her wit and wisdom damaged the saying that he who is his own lawyer has a fool for a client. The prize which Mrs. Gaines contested for was a double one. An enormous fortune and the greater satisfaction of established legitimacy gave the stimulus which has sustained her through a struggle which few men would have dared to attempt.

The conclusion of this celebrated contest calls up a flood of romantic incidents such as even lawsuits seldom reveal. It portrays the life of a woman devoted first to the establishment of her legitimacy, then the reclamation of a vast fortune which had been by various devices withheld from her. For nearly half a century has she fought against the adversities and vicissitudes of a litigant. Sometimes suffering from bereavement, deserted by friends, misled by grasping attorneys, left even to plead her own cause in the presence of the ablest lawyers of Louisiana before a captious and prejudiced Judge, she has never ceased to contest for those rights of birth and estate to which she laid claim. The dust of years has accumulated upon the volumes of evidence to support her claim, and she has grown gray in protesting against the miscarriage of justice which placed others in possession of her property, but finally she has achieved a grand triumph, placing within her reach upward of $30,000,000 worth of property.

Few people will be ungenerous enough to begrudge her the completeness of her triumph, and thousands of women who are the victims of similar circumstances, over which they had no control, will bless her for the persistence through which she has established a precedent of which they can avail themselves. May she live long to enjoy the millions which, though long ago hers by right, she has so splendidly earned by her own efforts!

MRS. GAINES' FIRST APPEARANCE AS HER OWN ADVOCATE.

After her marriage to William Wallace Whitney, son of Gen. T. Whitney, of New York, Mrs. Gaines became aware of her origin and parentage, and in 1853-4 the suits were instituted and pressed with great vigor. And it is in connection with these early attempts, begun thirty-five years ago in the First District Court of New Orleans, that the principal interest rests. On one occasion, as recently set forth in the New Orleans Democrat, there was a scene in the court-room which will ever be remembered by those who witnessed it. A lady, in the absence of her counsel, assumed the task of conducting and arguing her own case. The lady was then in the full bloom of matronly beauty. Petite of figure, but graceful and symmetrical, with a face of rare intelligence and vivacity, of fair and rich complexion, with eyes of gypsy brightness, but mellowed by feminine sensitiveness and emotional intensity, with an abundance of rich auburn hair, tastefully arranged, elegantly and fashionably attired, and speaking in tones of peculiar melodiousness, but with a thrilling earnestness and emphasis, her appearance in the character of an advocate and counsellor in a court, where females are rarely seen and from which ladies shrink with so much repugnance and horror, could but excite a profound interest in the usual attendants of court proceedings.

Sitting near enough to aid the speaker with suggestions and with papers, was a tall, aged military gentleman, clad in the full uniform of a General of the United States army, who appeared to be entirely absorbed in the argument, and to watch with intense interest every gesture, utterance and expression of the lady speaker, and ever and anon glancing around at the lawyers seated at the table, at the presiding Judge, and at the quiet, thoughtful faces of the jurors. Over six feet in height, with remarkably erect and somewhat stiff carriage, with a face indicative of great power of will, and eyes flashing with courage and defiance of all opposers, with iron-gray hair, brushed straight up from a broad brow—and standing erect in the fashion of Andrew Jackson—it needed but the yellow belt, gold trimmings and sword by his side to proclaim the position and identity of this veteran. He was no less a personage than Maj. Gen. Edmund Pendleton Gaines, the senior General in our army; the hero of the defense of Fort Erie in 1812, one of the most gallant affairs of the war with England, and of many other victories; the bosom friend of Andrew Jackson, and the trusted agent of Thomas Jefferson to arrest the person and thwart the plan of conspiracy which Aaron Burr came to this State in 1806 to put in operation. After the death of Mr. Whitney, of yellow fever, Myra married the General. In forming this alliance the gallant veteran assumed, as one of the most sacred duties of his life, to devote all his energies and means to the maintenance of the claims of his wife and the vindication of the honor and character of her father, who had been his intimate friend.

It was in the discharge of this obligation Gen. Gaines now appeared in court to support his wife in the prosecution of her case. The lawyers retained for her had been involved in a quarrel with the Judge, and had retired from the court. Left alone without attorneys, with some of the most distinguished members of the bar opposed to her, Gen. Gaines asked that the court would allow the lady to conduct her own case. Some altercation ensued between the Judge and Gen. and Mrs. Gaines.

The Judge objected to the tone and style of the lady, and reminded Gen. Gaines that he would be held responsible for her acts and language.

Thereupon the veteran, rising to his full height, avowed his personal responsibility for everything the lady might utter, in any manner and form in which a gentleman could respond to such a demand. Then, gracefully touching his sword handle, he glanced at the lawyers on the opposite side, against whom Mrs. Gaines had launched some pretty fiery invective. To which His Honor responded with much temper that no distinctions of persons or sexes were allowed in that court, nor would any menace of authority in official rank have any influence or be regarded with any awe or deference there. Thereupon Gen. Gaines, bowing low to the Judge, begged to assure His Honor that in appearing before him in uniform and with his sword he did so in conformity to the regulations of the service out of respect for the court. No one would be more prompt to draw his sword in defense of the authority of the civil tribunals of his country, and, at the risk of his own life, to defend the person and execute the orders of the Judges of the Federal or State Governments.

After this little tilt Mrs. Gaines resumed her argument and pursued it to the close. The jury retired to consult on their verdict, which was quickly returned in favor of Mrs. Gaines.

Thenceforward the lady assumed personal charge of her case, and has pursued the same with the most marvelous tenacity, energy, and fertility of resources, through a litigation the most prolonged, complicated, extensive, and eventful which has ever been prosecuted in the Christian world.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

The Russo-Turkish Conflict in History—Shifting Attitudes of the European Powers.

[From the Springfield Republican.]

It is as well to disabuse ourselves in the beginning of the idea that there is anything very new in the present situation of the Eastern question. On the contrary, it is a situation which has repeatedly arisen between Turkey and Russia and Turkey and her Christian subjects within the last 300 years, and from which Turkey has never escaped but once without loss of territory and of power. If the history of the past 300 years means anything, it means that the rule of a Turkish minority over Christian majorities is intolerable and is steadily being thrown off.

At the middle of the 16th century, the Turkish empire in Eastern Europe was at the summit of its power. It dominated Greece, Lower Hungary and Transylvania, the two provinces which now make Roumania, and was the menace of all Christendom. But with the death of Solyman II. on the one hand, and the accession of Peter the Great on the other, Russia began to rise and Turkey to fall. Turkey had been so humbled at the end of the second century of the struggle that in 1774 she conceded to Russia the free navigation of the Black sea and of the Dardanelles, admitted the independence of the Crimea and gave to Russia the protectorate of the Greek church in Turkey, and the guardianship of the principalities on the north of the Danube. It is this ancient treaty of Kainardji which Mr. Gladstone now claims was superseded at the treaty of Paris by pledges of similar protection at the hands of Europe, instead of Russia. Empress Catharine gained further acquisitions from Turkey long before Napoleon recast the map of Europe, and the Eastern question was the one sphinx whose riddle the great Frenchman could not solve. At the peace of Tilsit in 1807, Alexander proposed to him to divide Turkey, but Napoleon for once was overmatched in audacity and recoiled from the project, not out of love for the Turk, but from dread of Russia. In 1812 Turkey lost Bessarabia to Russia, the province through which the Russian army will now reach the frontier. In 1829, Turkey lost Greece, and for the next ten years had a disastrous struggle with Egypt, which the interposition of Europe alone reduced to subjection.

The discontents of the Christians along the Danube and in Asia brought on a new disturbance, and in 1853 Russia formally occupied the distressed Danubian principalities, whose semi-independence has since been conceded. This brought on the Crimean war, in which all Europe sided with Turkey against Russia—Prussia and Austria alone remaining neutral of the great powers. The treaty of Paris, by which this was terminated, and which was signed in March, 1856, recognized "the independence and integrity of the Ottoman empire," forbade all foreign interference in its internal affairs, guaranteed the liberties of the Danubian principalities, but as vassals of the Porte, gave back to Turkey that part of Bessarabia through which the Danube empties, abolished the Russian protectorate over the Greek church in Turkey, and forbade either power to maintain arsenals on the Black sea and to any power the navigation of that water by ships of war, its commerce remaining open to all. The Porte promised reforms to the Christian subjects or rayahs. A fortnight later France, England, and Austria signed another treaty guaranteeing the independence and integrity of the Turkish empire, and agreeing to consider any infraction thereof a cause for war. In 1861 the Danubian provinces, Moldavia and Wallachia, declared their virtual independence and chose Charles of Hohenzollern their Prince, Turkey not daring to deny him recognition. Russia said nothing. The Cretan rebellion was subdued by the help of the English in 1868. In 1870 came the downfall of France, when Russia repudiated that portion of the treaty of Paris which excluded ships of war from the Black sea, and a conference at London was forced to accept this modification of the treaty.

Of the 10,000,000 inhabitants of European Turkey, not counting Servia and Roumania, about 60 per cent. are Christians. In this fact lies the vitality of the Eastern question. Whether the Turks can remain in Europe at all is a debatable question; whether they can remain there as a dominant race, holding in virtual subjection millions of men and women of a hated faith, is no longer open to argument. Mr. Gladstone has sensed the truth in coming to the conclusion that Turkish domination must go out bag and baggage.

Nothing is more curious in this recital than the changing attitudes of Europe. In the beginning, when there was no Russia, all Europe fought the Turk, whether in Palestine or before Vienna. Then Russia [illegible] single-handed when she [illegible] as yet [illegible] and had aroused no jealousies. A century ago Russia began to be feared more than the Turk, and Napoleon discerned the usefulness of Turkey in the balance of power. Half a century ago Turkish atrocities, Byron and generous classical sympathies united Europe in behalf of Greece. Europe was next united in helping the Sultan subdue his Egyptian vassal. In 1856 Europe went with Turkey against Russia. To-day Europe declines to take sides at all, and this conclusion seems to be literally the lately-comprehended lesson of the ages.

Beating a Tramp.

The Detroit Free Press tells of a tramp who recently called at a house near that city, and told a most pitiful story of his woes and sufferings, and asked for something to eat. At first the lady of the house was disposed to run the poor wretch away hungry, but her nature overcame her prejudice and she said: "Poor man, and you want something to eat?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"You shall have it. Sit right down here."

He sat down, she gave him some coffee, a piece of meat and a biscuit. When he had finished eating he said:

"Madam, did you really believe my story?"

"No, sir," she answered.

"You thought I lied, did you?"

"I knew you did."

"But you gave me food."

"So I did. My boy found a dog yesterday and gave him more than he could eat. I simply gave you what was left to save filling up the slop-pail."

Of ten different countries which used the Suez canal last year, England engrossed nearly four-fifths of the traffic, 2,343,512 tons out of a total of 3,072,107.

For the very accurate and comprehensive map of the theater of war in Europe, printed in this issue, we are indebted to the New York Herald.

COUSIN WILL.

BY PHILIP MORSE.

I strolled last night in musing mood,
Reflecting on my lonely state;
Till, wearied out at last, I paused
[illegible]
I stood one blissful moment, while
A sweet voice soothed my ear; the next
It rose into a shriek, then sobbed:
"O sir, how could you keep so still!
When all the time I know you knew
I thought you were my cousin Will."

* * * * *

These stars are moons, or rather months
Just five have flitted since that night,
[illegible]
With [illegible] eyes, [illegible] such wealth
Of [illegible]

* * * * *

"So late!" I've just come from the club;
My wife sits silent, but a light,
Unseen before, lurks in her eye.
Once more I muse on that calm night,
When first she met me at the gate,
And wonder, while her eyes flame still,
If ever I, in days to come,
Shall wish it had been cousin Will.

—Scribner for May.

PITH AND POINT.

EVERY honeymoon has a man in it.

A PLACE for reflection—The mirror.

A MAN always feels put out when he is taken in.

[illegible] creditors—Those who don't dun.

THE warmest kind of a hat—One that's got stove in.

A HEARTY man will grow round on square meals.

THE favorite flower for wedding bonnets—Marry-gold.

"You're a cardinal-nosed thing!" is the latest womanism.

A GENTLEMAN with considerable face—The man in the moon.

THE longest periods in a boy's life—Those between meals.

ONE of woman's [illegible] writes—Putting a "P. S." to a letter.

WHY is a man in bed like a book unbound?—Because he is in sheets.

WHY is the letter "g" like matrimony?—Because it is the end of courting.

WHAT piece of coin is double its value by deducting its half?—Half-penny.

THE phrase "excuse haste and a bad pen" was the [illegible] of a runaway pig.

A DOG fight is not a notable spectacle, although it is undoubtedly a display of cur-rage.

AN Ohio man makes brick, but he is high-born, and calls himself "a sculptor in clay."

WHAT is that which lives in winter, dies in summer, and always grows with its root upward?—An icicle.

A [illegible] lady is so modest that she never looks at anything with a naked eye, and goes into convulsions over a bare statement of facts.

IF there was a bird on a peach, and you wanted the peach, how would you get it without disturbing the bird?—By waiting until the bird [illegible].

"DID you notice how splendidly I went through the [illegible] at the ball last night, Tom?" "Yes, and I also noticed that you kept it up all the way home."

"I AM afraid it is mixed goods," said the lady to the clerk. "O, no, madam, impossible," replied the polite gentleman; "all our camel's hair shawls are made of pure silk direct from the worm."

ON his return from India, Brown was asked how he liked tiger-hunting. "It is very good sport if you hunt the tiger," he replied; "but, if hard pressed, he sometimes takes it into his head to hunt you, and then it has its drawbacks."

"MY boy," said a solemn-visaged evangelist to a lad who had just emerged from a hair-pulling match with another boy, "do you expect to rove hereafter in a land of pure delight?" "No," said the lad, "I've bursted another button off'n my trousers, and I expect to get licked for it."

AUNT EMILY—"Why, Nellie, don't you know it is unkind to catch hold of your sister and pull her hair?" Nellie (who doesn't see it)—"Well, auntie, I saw you holding Cousin Frank round the neck quite tightly, yesterday, when [illegible] hair, and he didn't say anything."

THE Japanese are advancing in civilization. They usually favor condemned felons with the choice of the mode of death. An interesting murderer having been recently asked how he would like to be executed, promptly replied, "By proxy."

THE Court (severely). "Prisoner, this is not the first time you have been here. You have been convicted six times of vagrancy, twice of theft, once of—" The prisoner. "Your Honor, let's omit all these irrelevant details, and come to business."

THERE are two periods in every man's life when he feels, deep down in his heart, that if the earth would open and swallow him up it would be a pleasure to him—one is when he steals up stairs with the old man's razor to take his first shave; and the other is the first Sunday in a high hat.

"MY wife tells the truth three times a day, [illegible] at the same time [illegible] mischievous glance [illegible] in the morning, she says, 'Oh, dear, I must get up, but I don't want to.' After breakfast she adds, 'Well, I suppose I must go to work, but I don't want to.' And she goes to bed saying, 'There, I have been passing all day, and haven't done anything.'"

A Missouri Tragedy.

A terrible tragedy was recently enacted near Richland, Pulaski county, Mo. Harris Hubbard, a young man living with his father, was suspected of horse stealing. A warrant for his arrest was placed in the hands of a constable, who proceeded with a posse of men to the Hubbard residence and demanded the surrender of Harris. The officers were resisted by the family, whereupon the constable and his aids returned the fire, killing the old man Hubbard dead and severely wounding two children. A young lady was also shot in the hand and shoulder.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but naturla that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St, Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

Ladies and Gentlemen of Audurn and Vicinity.

I am aware the usual notice of selling at cost is stale, obsolate and even doubtful yet I frankly confess I will sell my entire stock at actual cost. I am truthful when I assert this. To convince yourself please call and examine goods and prices.

Ladies' gold chains, 14 karat solid, $1.10 dwt; gent's gold vest chains, 14 karat solid, $1.10 dwt; 18 karat solid plain rings $1.10 dwt; ladies' gold watches, formerly $65 at $45; gent's gold watches at factory prices; american silver watches at cost; silver plated castors 3, 4, 5, and $9; silver plated cake baskets 4, 5, 7 and $8; silver plated tea spoons $1.50 set; silver plated table spoons $3.50; silver plated steel table knives $.50 dozen; solid silver table spoons—also do, forks, $16; solid silver tea spoons, twist, &c., $8@$9; solid silver thimbles, 45c. all other goods sold in same proportionate reduction. Endless variety of clocks at actual cost. Vienna regulators, at $20 and $28. Superior quality of spectacles, at makers prices. Diamond rings, cameo, do., set rings and all others at wholesale prices. Also ladies' fine gold sets at manufacturers' prices.

I will give each purchaser of $5 worth of goods a chance ticket in the drawing for a clock valued at $200, first prize: also as a second prize, a beatiful $100 music box. Each ticket entitles the holder to a chance in both prizes.

Also, I wish to inform the public that I have made arrangements with the various manufactures of watches, jewelry, silver ware &c., to send any goods on selection, so that those who wish anything in this, line and not in stock, will have an opportunity to buy of me at the small commission of 10 per cent, and in every instance goods warranted as I represent them, as the reputation of the firm is sufficient guarantee to all.

Respectfully, GEO. J. E. MAYER.

In the Sweet By-and-By.

Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine" It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. With the Tourists, the San Juan Guide keeps fitting company, and the two publications are mailed free to all writing for one or both to T. J. ANDERSON, Topka K.

Notes and Items Of Early Times.

BY MAJOR M'FADEN.

It was a glorious sight to stand in the morning and see the great sun climb up out of the prairie and start on his daily round, to light up the world, looking as if he was coming up out of the mighty ocean, and as I stood and gazed with wonder and amazement, I thought of the immortal words of Pope:

"'Tis impious; God never made an independent man.
'Twould jar the concord of his general plan;
See every part of that stupendous whole,
Whose body nature is and God the soul."

The prairies in the summer time are beautiful and elegant, and are beyond description. I have often thought that the Garden of Eden had been located in one of these grand old prairies, somewhere on the head waters of the Kankakee or Tippecanoe.

"This is the Almighty's garden,
And the mountains. Stars and Sea,
Are naught compared in beauty
With God's garden prairie free."

Now I will finish the lost Indian.

During the coming summer, after the squaw had gone in the spring, father had left with the ox team and wagon to haul a load of wheat from Logansport to Michigan City and return with a load of salt for Mr. Isral Johnson (now dead). I was way up in the big woods, digging ginseng to sell (as there was a good market then for it,) to buy some fish-hooks, powder and led, and tea for mother. The dogs barked up a large tree, with the top broken off, and seemed to be hollow at the top. There stood against the tree an Indian ladder. It is made of a small tree or sapling, the limbs not trimmed very close, and leaned up against a tree to climb up on, to cut out honey, coon or any other game. An Indian never cuts down a big tree, but always manages to get up with his ladder, and cut out the game with his tomahawk. Every old settler remembers an Indian ladder, as some of them stood for years after we came here.

As the tree was very hollow I concluded to cut it down, and when it fell, there in the hollow was my poor lost Indian. He had climbed up the tree after a coon or something, and lost his hold at the top and fallen to the bottom on the inside. He could not get out and perhaps was injured so that he could not help himself. And, oh, my countrymen! what a death he had died! He was dried up and looked like an Egyptian mummy. He was very crooked and I had hard work to straighten him out. I laid him on a mossy log and covered him over with green boughs and wild flowers, and started for the Indian camp on the Tippecanoe, to let them know of his fate; but when I got there they were gone. I afterward ascertained that they were at Lake Manitou fishing. I returned home, and as it was some distance to the nearest neighbors and being a very busy time, I concluded to bury him alone. I took my shovel and started. When I came near, there sat a great Artic owl—white as the driven snow—on the log near by the Indian. As I approached he flew up on a limb, close by. I found that nothing had disturbed the Indian. I went to dig the grave, and did the best I could, and then laid him tenderly and carefully. The white owl watching me all time, and if I could believe that sandhill cranes turned into white cranes, I would then believe that that Indian's spirit was in that white owl, or it was his guardian angel, or the spirit of some departed friend, and I have never killed another owl since I placed some bark and leaves on the body, and covered him up as well as I could, wept over him, placed a large stone at his grave, carved his name on a beech tree close by, and left him to rest until the great day of judgment, when the sea shall give up its dead and they shall be gathered from the four corners of the earth, and then I expect to meet that Indian and tell him the story of what I did for him and his. And then if the good Lord wants to send me to the happy hunting grounds, 'tis well.

And now, my dear, kind friends, I am done and must close for the present, and you must let me rest for awhile and gather strength, and then I will tell you some wonderful and terrible stories about how the Indians came to that Indian's grave and buried him over again, and what became of the papoose; how I was nearly scalped by an eagle when I was climbing up to get some young eagles out of the nest, &c.

The great trouble is that I have to stick so close to the truth that some parts of my stories are not as interesting as they might be. At some future time I will relate some interesting incidents about fishing and hunting on the Wabash. Tippecanoe and Kankakee, and about the Morgan Raid and Feather Bed Brigade, and how our big Corporal stood guard, and of a trip years ago to the Fort Wayne Fair with several lady friends, and how we saw the gorrilla and stuffed snakes, &c.

I will bid you all an affectionate farewell until we meet again.

THE FIRST MAN.

Some repairs were needed to the engine when the train reached Reno, and while most of the passengers were taking a philosophical view of the depot, and making them selves as comfortable as possible in the depot, in walked a native. He wasn't a native Indian, nor a native grizzly, but a native Nevadian, and he was rigged out in imperial style. He wore a bear skin coat and cap, buckskin leggings and moccasins, and in his belt was a big knife and two revolvers. There was ligtning in his eye, destruction in his walk, and as he sauntered up to the red hot stove and scattered tobacco-juice over it, a dozen passengers loked pale with fear. Among the travelers was a car painter from Jersey City, and after surveying the native for a few moments he cooly inquired,

"Aren't you afraid you'll fall down and hurt yourself with those weapons?"

"Wh—what?' gasped the native in astonishment.

"I suppose they sell such outfits as you've got on at auction out here, don't they?' continued the painter.

"W——what d'ye mean—who ar' ye?' roared the native as he walked around the stove and put on a terrible look.

"My name is Logwood,' was the calm reply, "and I mean that if I were you, I'd crawl out of them old duds and put on some decent clothes!'

"Don't talk that way to me, or you won't live a minit!' exclaimed the native as he hopped around. Why, you homesick coyote, I'm Grizzy Dan, the heaviest Indian fighter in the world! I was the first white man to scout for Gen. Crook! I was the first white man in the Black Hill! I was the first white man among the Modocs!'

"I don't believe it!' flatly replied the painter. "You look more like the first white man down to the dinner table!'

The native drew his knife, put it back again, looked around, and then softly asked:

"Stranger, will you come over behind the ridge and shoot and slash till this thing is settled?'

"You bet I will!' replied the man from Jersey, as he rose up. "Just pace right out and I'll follow!'

Every man in the room jumped to his feet in wild excitement. The native started for the back door, but when he found the car painter at his heels with a six-barrelled Colt in his hand, he halted and said:

'Friend, come to think of it, I don't want to kill you and have your widow come on me for damages.'

"Go right ahead—I'm not a married man!' replied the painter.

"But you've got relatives, and I don't want no law suits to bother me just as spring is coming.'

"I'm an orphan, without a relative in the world!' shouted the Jerseyite.

"Well, the law will make me bury you, and it would be a week's work to dig a grave at this season of the year. I think I'll break a rib or two for you, smash your nose, gouge out your left eye, and let you go at that!'

"That suits me to a dot!' said the painter.

"Gentlmen, please stand back, and some of you shut the door to the ladies room.'

"I was the first man to attack a grizley bear with the bowie knife!' remarked the native as he looked around. "I was the first man to discover silver in Nevada. I made the first scout up the Powder River. I was the first to make hunting-shirts out of the skins of Pawnee Indians. I don't want to hurt this man, as he seems to be kinder sad and down hearted, but he must apoligize to me.'

"I won't do it!' exclaimedthe painter.

"Gentlemen, I never fight without taking off my coat, and I don't see any nail to hang it on,' said the native.

"I'll hold it—I'll hold it,' shouted a dozen voices in chorus.

"And another thing,' softly continued the native, "I never fight in a hot room. I used to do it years ago, but I found it was running me into consumption. I always do my fighting out doors now.'

"I'll go out with you, you old rabbit-killer!' exclaimed the painter, who had his coat off.

"That's another deadly insult, to be wiped in blood, and I see I must finish you. I never fight around a depot, though, I go out on the prairie, where there is a chance to throw myself.'

"Where's your prairie? Lead the way!' howled the crowd.

"It wouldn't do any good,' replied the native, as he leaned against the wall. "I always hold a ten dollar gold piece in my mouth when I fight, and I haven't got one to-day—in fact I'm dead broke.'

"Here's a gold piece,' called a tall man, holding up the metal.

"I'm a thousand times obleeged to you,' replied the native, shaking his head. "I never go into a fight without putting red paint on my left ear for luck, and I haven't any red paint by me, and there isn't a bit in Reno.'

"Are—you—going—to—fight?' demanded the car painter, reaching out for the [illegible] bab.

"I took a solemn oath when a boy never to fight without painting my left ear,' protested the Indian killer. 'You wouldn't want me to go back on my solemn oath, would you?'

"You're a cabbage, a squash, a pumpkin dressed up in leggings!' contemptously remarked the car painter, as he put on his coat.

"I'll give ten thousan dollars for ten drops of red paint!' shrieked the native. "Oh! why is it that I have no paint for my ear, when here is such a chance to go in and kill!'

A big blacksmith from Illinoise took him by the neck and run him out, and he was seen no more for an hour. Just before the train started, and after all the passengers had taken seats, the "first man" was seen on the platform. He had another bowie-knife and had also put another tomahawk in his belt There. was red paint on his left ear, his eyes rolled and in a terrible voice he called out:

"Where is that man Logwood? Let him come out here and meet his doom'

"Is that you? Count me in!' replied the car painter, as he opened a window. He rushed for the door, leaped down and was pulling off his coat again, when the native began to retreat, calling out:

"I'll get my hair cut and be back here in seventeen seconds. I never fight with long hair. I promised my dying mother not to.'

When the train rolled away he was seen flourishing his tomahawk around his head in the wildest manner.

TO OUR LADY READERS.

Let us tell you what reached our desk this week. A magazine which supplies information on every article a lady or child can wish to wear, from the sole of her feet to the top of her head. Each article is richly illustrated; underneath stands the description, with the number of yards it takes to make it; and then comes the price at which you can purchase it. All classes are provided for. The wealthiest and the least wealthy—all can find qualities suited to their means. Interleaved between the fashion descriptions we find page after page of original reading-matter; not such as over-loads so many publications, but bright, suggestive, instructive contributions by our best lady writers, on subjects in which every sensible woman takes pleasure and interest. "The Kitchen," "The Home," "The Cultivation of Beauty," "The Education of Children," "The Art of Dress-making," etc., etc.—all are standard articles on standard subjects.

Now, when we say, further, that this magazine, a monster volume of 116 pages, it is only the "Spring" number of a publication which costs but 50 cents for a whole year's subscription, our readers will understand why we consider it somewhat remarkable. It is published by Ehrich & Co., 187 and 189 Eighth Avenue, New York City, the enterprising merchants, who thus meet a great demand of ladies who live away from the great metropolis, and yet are eager to learn of the vagares of fashion and of the price for which these vagaries can be purchased. The accompanying directions, according to which goods should be ordeC, are so clear and simple that a child could thus order its wardrobe. You will not regret subscribing to "EHRICHS' FASHION QUARTERLY."

THURSDAY, MAY 17, 1877.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

The body of John T. Daly, the wealthy New Yorker who recently disappeared so mysteriously, was found the other day, hanging by a handkerchief to the door of a deserted house on Long Island. Financial embarrassments rendered him insane, and led to his committing suicide.

The Attorney General of New York is said to be disappointed with Tweed's confession, and opposed to granting his release in exchange therefor....A serious mining disaster occurred near Pottsville, Pa., a few days ago, resulting in the death of six miners and the serious injury of seven others. The accident was caused by an explosion of fire-damp.

The Philadelphia International Exhibition, for the season of 1877, was formally opened by President Hayes on the 10th inst. There was a respectable attendance, including a large number of distinguished people. The show bids fair to be a success.

THE WEST.

A Salt Lake dispatch states that the feeling aroused throughout the United States by the testimony at John D. Lee's trial, relative to the Mountain Meadow massacre, has led the Latter-Day Saints to apprehend the arrest of Brigham Young and other heads of the church, accused of sanctioning the commission of that horrible crime. The Saints have determined to resist any movement against Brigham Young by the Federal authority, and to this end they are secretly arming and drilling....Advices from Camp Robinson, Neb., report the surrender of Crazy Horse and his band of hostiles.

At Fontanelle, Neb., a few days ago, a man named Taliaferro shot and killed Marguerita Belindi because she refused to marry him. The murderer then shot himself through the heart. They were both recently from Italy.

The Gentile residents of Salt Lake City are considerably alarmed by the war like attitude of the Mormons. Brigham Young, during services in the Tabernacle, on Sunday week, is credited with using very intemperate language. He said, if the Gentiles "wanted blood they could have it, and, indeed, they were likely to have more of it let out of their veins than they could spare." The Mormons are said to be drilling and organizing all over the Territory, and an outbreak is predicted at an early day.

A man named Winters has brought suit against eighty-one members of the Nebraska Legislature, for damages in $50,000 for false imprisonment. Subpœnas have been issued to each member, which will compel an extraordinary reassembling of the Legislature.....The Grasshopper Bounty law, passed at the last session of the Minnesota Legislature, has been negatived by every county directly interested, they having petitioned the Governor not to appoint receivers of grasshoppers, fearing that the amount of the proposed bounty, if paid, would be more destructive to the taxpayers than grasshoppers....A serious conflict between striking coopers and the police occurred in Cleveland, O., the other day. There were a good many bruised heads after the affair was over, but fortunately nobody was killed.

THE SOUTH.

Near Glasgow, Ky., a few days ago, four United States Marshals sought to arrest two illicit distillers named Reynolds. In resisting, both were shot, one being mortally wounded. The officers at first refused to be arrested, but subsequently surrendered, several hundred civilians having volunteered to assist the Sheriff in taking them if necessary. They refused to give up their arms for a while, but at last surrendered them in open court, when the Judge had cleared the room of spectators. There was considerable excitement over the affair.

WASHINGTON.

At the meeting of the Cabinet last week it was resolved that Congress shall not be convened until the 15th of October. An examination of existing laws and of the War Department's financial condition has satisfied the administration, it is said, that the army can be subsisted and clothed until the date named without further Congressional action, while only one pay-day will be skipped....The State Department has, from our Minister to Mexico, official information of the release of the American Consul at Acapulco, and Secretary Evarts has instructed our Minister to enter a formal protest, and demand from the Government of Mexico an apology, and full reparation for the outrage....President Hayes has declined the invitation of the Boston Board of Trade to visit that city during the present month, on the ground that, owing to the condition of public business, he cannot protract the time which will be spent by him in Philadelphia and New York.

A Washington correspondent, who has had a conversation with him, reports the President as "frank and outspoken as to his purpose to recommend a liberal system of public improvements."...President Hayes has issued his proclamation convening Congress in extra session on the 15th day of October.... It is rumored that ex-Secretary Bristow will be nominated to succeed Judge Davis on the Supreme bench when Congress meets....An official statement issued by the Treasury Department shows that the decrease of the United States debt from March 1, 1869, to April 30, 1877, was $455,104,642.

The Attorney General has ordered rewards to be offered for the apprehension of the lawless distillers in the mountainous regions of Georgia, who have so far successfully eluded the pursuit of the authorities....Forty pension agencies have been abolished by order of the Secretary of the Interior, leaving eighteen offices for the disbursement of pensions....The Secretary of the Treasury has called in for redemption $10,114,550 of 5-20 bonds of 1865, May and November. The amount called in constitutes the residue of those issued under the act of March 3, 1875, dated Nov. 1, 1865. The call is for $8,581,000 coupons and $1,533,550 registered bonds. The principal and accrued interest will be paid at the treasury on and after Aug. 5, 1877.

The Mexican border troubles were the subject of discussion at the Cabinet meeting the other day, and it was agreed that organized cattle-stealing, and other depredations upon property in Texas, of American citizens, must be effectually stopped without further delay or inattention on the part of the Mexican authorities....Ex-Senator Carpenter has permanently located in Washington for the practice of his profession....Secretary Sherman, notwithstanding adverse reports, is very hopeful as to the success of the negotiation of the 4½ per cent. loan.

The proposed consolidation of pension agencies will be completed by the end of June. Orders have been issued to the several Agents throughout the country to have their accounts ready for inspection by the 1st prox., with a view of closing up their business by the end of the fiscal year. ....An order has been issued by the Secretary of War for the discharge of 2,500 men from the United States army between now and the 1st of July. This reduction will restore the army to its numerical strength previous to the increase which was authorized by Congress in consequence of the necessities of the campaign against the hostile Sioux. The nominal strength of the army will be reduced to about 19,000.

GENERAL.

A Chicago journal thinks the drama has sadly degenerated in that city, or rather that the popular taste for the higher order of dramatic entertainments has declined; and, to substantiate the claim, cites the fact that at only one place of amusement—McVicker's Theater—is the legitimate drama being played. The truth is, the theater-going public has itself alone to blame for such a condition of things. If people would stay away from those places where trashy and sensational plays are presented, and patronize first-class and reputable theaters, where the higher elements of the drama find a home, we should soon have less of the former and more of the latter.

There will be great rejoicing at the downfall of the gigantic sewing-machine monopolies. All attempts of the sewing-machine patentees to secure continuations of their patents at Washington have failed, and a number of the most valuable of these patents come to an end this month. The sewing-machine corporations have worked faithfully for the pro[illegible] renewal of the patent of the last, and one of the most important inventions extant—the four-motion feed—has been denied.... The boilers of the Anchor steamer Sidonian exploded when three day from Queenstown, on her last trip from New York. The Captain, three engineers, two firemen and a trimmer were killed by the explosion, their bodies being terribly mangled and disfigured.

The United States treasury has been made richer by the payment of $1,000,000 of the $1,500,000 loaned to assist in the completion of the Centennial Exhibition buildings at Philadelphia. The remaining $500,000 will be paid shortly....The schooner Francis Berriman collided with a steam barge at East Tawas, on Lake Erie, and immediately went down, drowning two men. Loss on vessel and cargo, $130,000.

The President and Secretary of War have approved the verdict of the court-martial which recently tried Maj. Reno on a charge of slandering the wife of Capt. Bell. The sentence was that he be cashiered and dismissed the service; but, in consideration of his eminent services and brave conduct upon many battle-fields, the President mitigates the punishment to suspension from rank and pay for two years.

The steamship Dakota, of the Williams & Guion line, bound from Liverpool to New York, went ashore at Point Limas, forty miles from Liverpool. There were 200 passengers on board, all of whom, together with the crew, were safely landed. The vessel, which was valued at $750,000, will prove a total loss. It is the most serious marine disaster, from a monetary point of view, that has occurred for the past two years.

POLITICAL.

At a meeting of the New York Historical Society, a few nights ago, to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Empire State's political birth as a free and independent sovereignty, Charles O'Conor, who was the orator for the occasion, delivered an address, in which he said he would abolish the system of legislative representation by districts, would reduce Legislatures to one House, and would take a new Governor by lot each month from the Legislature. The Presidential term of office he would modify on the same plan.

THE TURCO-RUSSIAN WAR.

The Russian army in Asiatic Turkey, Turkish reports to the contrary notwithstanding, has thus far made a successful advance into Armenia, and seems to have been victorious in every important encounter with the Turks.... All the Russian ports in the Black sea have been declared in a state of blockade by the Sublime Porte.

General distrust of England is spreading in Russia, and the Government is strengthening the fortified points and planting torpedoes in the harbors of the Baltic.....A cable dispatch states that Austria has determined to occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina. Whether this movement will be of advantage to Russia will be seen from the course of future events—an understanding possibly having been effected between Russia, Austria and Germany.... In Asia the Russian forces, numbering about 140,000, are advancing in a semi-circle towards Erzeroum, while the Turkish forces are concentrated in a triangle of Erzeroum, Olti, and Kars. ....A dispatch from the seat of war in Roumania says: "The bulk of the Turkish forces appear to be massing toward Silistria and Rustchuck, and this is the direction in which the Russians, by their movements, would appear to indicate a desire to pass the river, but the Turks seem still content to remain passively on the defensive."

A sharp engagement is reported between Turkish gunboats and the Russian batteries at Tamrova, below Galatz. The Russian camp was fired by a shell....The Russians commenced to bombard the Turkish town of Widdin from Kalafat, on the opposite bank of the Danube, on the 8th inst....A dispatch from Bucharest says the murder of a number of Roumanians by Bashi-Bazouks has greatly intensified the war feeling in Roumania....It is said Servia will observe strict neutrality.... Gen. Tchernayeff has been readmitted to the Russian army....The Czar has returned to St. Petersburg, where he was enthusiastically received....Turkey has granted general amnesty to the Bulgarians.

A Vienna dispatch to the London Times of May 7 says: "News of the unsuccessful attempt of the Russians to carry Kars by coup de main is confirmed by Russian bulletins, which speak even of two attempts to storm the citadel. The supposition that the Russians will not sit down before Kars, but will invest and proceed with the bulk of their forces toward Erzeroum, seems likewise to have already found confirmation, for both wings of the army appear to be moving to turn the positions of Sogahanle and Dagh, and thus force Moukhtar Pasha to withdraw and leave the passes open for the Russian main force."

Cable dispatches chronicle an engagement between the Russian troops and the army under Moukhtar Pasha, on the road from Kars to Erzeroum. The Turks are said to have been defeated, with the loss of 14,000 men....The upper part of the Dobrudscha is almost deserted. All the Mohammedans have gone south. The Christians have been taken off by passing steamers....A Vienna dispatch reports that the Turkish commander has resolved to make the first stand in defense of the Dobrudscha on a line from Kustenji to Chernavoda, and his next defense within precincts of the quadrangle formed by the fortresses of Rustchuk, Varna, Shumla, and Silistria. Two monitors will be stationed so as to harass the Russians when they attempt to cross the Danube, which will most likely be near Nikopolis....If a London dispatch is to be believed, the banner of the Prophet is to be raised by the Sultan, and the faithful of all Asia, numbering countless millions, are to be summoned to the rescue of the Crescent in Europe.

The Prince of Roumania has assumed personal command of the Roumanian army, which, it is stated, will form the right wing of the Russian army operating on the Danube....Defense works are being constructed around Constantinople....A St. Petersburg correspondent says the approaching mobilization of the Russian Guards is a measure for the protection of the Baltic coast dictated by the increasing jealousy of England......Bashi-Bazouks crossed the Danube, at Kirnodki, and Roumanian peasants, armed with guns and axes, drove them back, killing two.... The tribes in the Caucasus are reported to be rising, and threaten serious trouble for the Russians....Servia has pledged Austria that she will not disturb the peace....The Sultan refused to allow the New York Herald correspondent to accompany the Turkish army in the field, for the reason that the Herald is hostile to the Turks.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

Ex-Queen Isabella of Spain has appealed to the Pope to use his influence with her undutiful son, King Alphonso, to dissuade him from contracting a marriage with a Princess not of the Catholic faith. It is said that the Pope is indisposed to interfere....The freedom of the press has been suspended in Constantinople, and the authorities are considering the necessity for putting the city under martial law....England is making preparations for war on an extensive scale.

It is announced that Russia has effected a loan of $20,000,000 through a syndicate of French, German and Dutch bankers....Thomas Carlyle, the well-known English essayist, has written a letter bitterly condemning the anti-Russian tendency of public opinion in England, especially in Government circles....The little republic of Transvaal, in South Africa, has been annexed by Great Britain.

The cable furnishes us with the text of Lord Derby's reply to the Russian circular. For a diplomatic note, written by one grave and formal Minister to another, it is couched in very plain, not to say sharp, language. Lord Derby writes: "In taking action against Turkey on his own part, and having recourse to arms without further consultation with his allies, the Emperor of Russia has separated himself from European concert, and has at the same time departed from the rule to [illegible] to reserve the consequences of such an act."...Advices from Egypt state that the King of Abyssinia has again declared war against the Khedive, for violating the frontier. The Khedive, in consequence, has refused to further assist the Porte.... A cable dispatch conveys intelligence of the death of Henry Sawyer, for twenty-three years the Consul of the United States at the Paramaribo colony of Surinam, South America.... The Captain General of Cuba has issued a decree pardoning all persons heretofore banished from the island for political offenses.

Lord Derby, in defending his reply to the Russian manifesto, in the House of Lords, the other day, bluntly said he did not wish to doubt the good faith of the Czar's peaceful promises to Lord Loftus, but he could not forget that at the same moment Russia was preparing for war, and that very different declarations had been made by the Czar himself at Mosco. He contended that England had a right two express an opinion on the merits of the quarrel, since such an expression had been invited by the presentation of copies of the manifestoes of both the belligerents.

A fleet of German iron-clads is to be sent to the Mediterranean sea. The intention is, of course, to put Germany in a position that will make her navy effective in any diversion she may choose to attempt in behalf of Russia, when the English fleet is dispatched to the Bosphorus....British officers have been dispatched to Egypt, under orders to select a site for an intrenched camp commanding the entrance to the Suez canal.

Four thousand French pilgrims visited the Pope the other day, and presented him with 79,000 francs....Trouble is brewing in Poland, and Russia threatens the restoration of martial law throughout the country.

A Chamber of Horrors.

A gentleman has just died in Paris who owed most of his celebrity to the quaint manner in which he managed to disembarrass himself of his creditors. No sooner did a dun present himself than he was ushered into a room hung round with a variety of mirrors, some convex, others concave, etc. In one the unfortunate creditor beheld himself with a head as flat as a flounder, in another his features were nearly as sharp as a knife, in a third he had several heads, and in a fourth he was upside down. Here he had the broad grin of a clown, there the long-drawn visage of an undertaker. On one side of the room he saw himself all head and no body; on the other side it seemed as if a dwarf had put on the boots of a giant. No applicant, however pressing, was known to resist this chamber of horrors for more than a quarter of an hour.

Co-Operation.

A new feature of co-operation has been developed in Massachusetts. The New England Shoe and Leather Association has inaugurated a bureau of debts and debters. Its object is to create a fund to employ counsel, to prevent business failures and compel better settlements. Every subscriber is to contribute annually according to the amount of business transacted, as follows: $100,000, or under, $25; between $100,000 and $250,000, $50; between $250,000 and $500,000, $75, and $500,000 and over, $100. Each subscriber is entitled to receive the benefit of the total fund during the current year of his subscription. Attempts will be made to have the special counsel take charge of the business of a man likely to fail, and, by a species of arbitration, determine a compromise that will protect both the debtor and creditors from the ravages of public legal controversy.

Died for Love.

Two human bodies, tightly fastened together by means of a strong cord, were recently taken from the river Seine at Rouen, in France. They were those of a young man of 20, named Henri Dominois, and a maiden of 18, named Eliza Dupre, his sweetheart. Henri was the son of M. Dominois, who occupies a good position in life, and Eliza was a simple work-girl, pretty and honest, with whom he fell desperately in love. A letter found in the pocket of the young man told in a few plain words their short but tragic story. "Our parents," said this little manuscript, "would not allow us to marry, and we resolved to perish together in order that we might not be separated in paradise." The bodies had remained in the river from March 6, when the two young people disappeared from their respective homes.

Wealth of the Bonapartes.

An official French document recently made public, which purports to give only the real estate held by, or in trust for, the ex-Empress Eugenie and her son, rates the Paris property at $1,065,000, on which there are mortgages to the extent of $240,000. Her other estates are valued at a like sum, on which an incumbrance of $200,000 exists. Other members of the Bonaparte family also hold a large amount of property in various countries. The personal property of the imperial exiles is variously estimated, varying from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000.

Problem Solved.

In the secret language of the tramps, the letter "H." on the gate-post means that the residents will give the caller a handful of grub; "S." that he will get a seat at the table; "S. M." that he will get a square meal, and "G. B." that he will get the "grand bounce." Now that the secret is out, let every house-owner hie himself to his gate-post and dig in letters deep and that cannot be misunderstood, the mystic sign "G. B.!" Here, at last, is the complete solution of the tramp problem.

Of the Prince of Wales' sons, only Prince George is intended for the naval profession, although both the two elder are undergoing instruction on the Britannia training ship. It is said that there is a good deal of fagging on the ship, and the two young Princes will have to learn to be ordered about.

THE BELLIGERENTS.

Estimate of the Fighting Forces of Turkey and Russia.

[From the New York Tribune.]

In Turkey the army has been organized under regulations issued in 1871. Its ranks are entirely supplied from the Mohammedans, except in certain privileged districts, such as Albania and Bosnia, which furnish special corps of their own. In the rest of Turkey every able-bodied Mussulman of 20 years and upward is bound by law to serve in the standing army, but notwithstanding this law a young Turk of the wealthier classes can always obtain exemption from the service. The period of service is nominally twelve years; that is four in the Nizam, or standing army, two in the Redif or reserve, and six in the militia, but practically the soldier remains in time of peace only three years under the colors, and is then sent on unlimited furlough. The number of recruits levied yearly is from 30,000 to 40,000 men, about 20 per cent. of whom are supplied by European Turkey, and 80 per cent. by Asiatic Turkey. The total military forces of Turkey, exclusive of the "sedentary" army formed of those who have served twelve years, is as follows:

	Regiments.	War footing.	Peace footing.
Infantry	36	117,300	100,800
Cavalry	24	22,410	17,280
Field artillery	6	7,800	7,800
Artillery in fortresses	4	8,200	8,200
Engineers	2	1,600	1,600
Detached corps in Candia, Tripoli, and Tunis	8	16,000	16,000
Total	80	170,370	148,680
Reserve			148,680
Auxiliaries			75,000
Irregulars			87,000
Total of forces			459,360

TURKISH NAVAL ARMAMENTS.

The war fleet of Turkey consisted, at the end of the year 1875, of twenty ironclad ships and seventy other steamers. The greater number of the ironclads were built in Great Britain. The Turkish navy was manned, in 1875, by 30,000 sailors and 4,000 marine troops. The time of service in the navy is eight years. Divided into three classes, the Turkish ironclad fleet is as follows:

	Number.	Guns.	Av'ge Horse-power.
Frigates	7	114	971
Corvettes	8	35	862
Gunboats	10	10	150

THE NAVAL STRENGTH OF RUSSIA.

Great progress has been made in the strength and efficiency of the Russian navy. It consists of two great divisions, the Baltic and Black sea fleets. Each of these two fleets is again subdivided into sections, of which three are usually stationed in or near the Black sea. The Mediterranean section is now in American waters. In March, 1876, the strength of the Russian navy was returned as follows: 1. The Baltic fleet, 77 men-of-war. 2. The Black sea fleet, 9 men-of-war. 3. The Caspian sea fleet, 5 paddle-wheel steamers and 3 dispatch boats. 4. The Siberian fleet, 11 ships. The total comprises 108 men-of-war, 1,477 officers, and 7,217 seamen, exclusive of small squadrons in the White sea and Sea of Aral. The ironclad fleet (included in the foregoing statement) comprised in March, 1876, the following vessels:

Ironclads.	Number.	Guns.	Horse-power.	Tonnage.
Mastless turret-ship	1	4	1,300	9,662
Frigates	8	76	4,600	36,185
Corvettes	3	10	600	5,161
Turret monitors	14	20	1,600	18,500
Floating batteries	3	74	1,110	10,265
Total	29	184	9,210	74,793

THE RUSSIAN ARMY.

The organization of the Russian army is simple and efficient. Under the law which went into force five years ago, there is an annual conscription to which all men over 21 are subject. The period of service is fifteen years, six being spent with the regiment and nine in the reserve.

Last year the strength of the Russian army, on a peace footing, was as follows: Battalions, 852; squadrons, 281; guns, 1,422; officers, 33,043; rank and file, 732,829, making a total force of 765,872 men. Placed on a war footing, the strength of this army would be 1,213,259 men, including 39,380 officers. The strength of the various divisions of the Russian army, according to an official return, was as follows in 1874. The same relative proportions still probably exist between each arm of the service:

	Peace footing.	War footing.
I.—REGULAR ARMY.
Infantry	364,423	693,511
Cavalry	38,306	49,183
Artillery	47,731	48,773
Engineers	13,413	16,203
Total	457,872	808,670
II.—ARMY OF FIRST RESERVE.
Troops of the line	80,455	74,561
Garrison troops in regiments	80,455	23,740
Garrison troops in battalions	19,930	29,622
Total	180,840	127,923
III.—ARMY OF SECOND RESERVE.
Troops of all arms	207,812	276,664
General total	846,424	1,213,257

In preparing for the present war the Russian Government called out or "mobilized" only part of the reserve. According to trustworthy reports, the army organized for the conflict consisted recently of 275,000 men, 20,000 cavalry, and 900 guns.

Effective Temperance Lecturer.

Seven years ago Francis Murphy kept a saloon, kicked a man down stairs, and was sent to jail for manslaughter. Last December he conducted a most remarkable temperance movement in Pittsburgh, where he obtained 20,000 signatures to the pledge. Subsequently he visited eighteen towns in Northern Pennsylvania and Western New York, and induced 35,000 persons to sign the pledge. In Buffalo a vigorous campaign was opened against intemperance, and about 2,300 converts put themselves on record. Mr. Murphy is now meeting with unequivocal success in Philadelphia, where his disciples already number 10,000. He preaches what he calls gospel temperance, and does not favor prohibitory legislation.—New York Tribune.

Toads and Bees.

The mooted question as to whether toads eat bees has been settled by M. Brunet, a writer in La Nature, who asserts that, going into his garden one day, just before a storm, he observed the bees crowding into their hives. Near one of the hives was a toad which every now and then rose on his forelegs and made a dart, with surprising quickness, toward blades of grass. He was found to be devouring bees which were resting on the grass blades awaiting their chance to enter the hive. M. Brunet waited until twelve victims had been devoured, expecting to see the toad's voracity punished with a sting, but no such result occurred. The toad was twice removed to quite a distance from the hives, but both times he returned to the spot in a few hours.

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

Hon. Caleb Cushing thinks our country, particularly the agricultural population, will be vastly benefited by the war in Europe.

The great Dupont powder mills, near Wilmington, Del., have been busy of late supplying Turkish and Russian orders for powder.

In California there are thirty savings banks, with deposits of $72,542,700, [illegible] the past year there has not been a failure among them. Rates for interest vary from 7½ to 9 per cent.

The trade of the United States with Russia and Turkey for the fiscal year 1875 was as follows: Russia, imports $1,399,759, exports, $11,481,758; Turkey, imports $579,706, exports $4,244,884.

The Shoe and Leather Reporter discusses the probable effects of the European war on the trade it represents, and comes to the conclusion that it will create an abnormal demand for all kinds of leather, and that prices will be largely enhanced.

The French Government has published the statistics of the value of imports and exports into France during the first quarter of this year. The total of exports and imports together is $335,800,000, less by $8,700,000 than for the same period last year. The only import which shows an increase is that of articles of food.

The existing troubles between Russia and Turkey, and the unsettled condition of other European powers, have already created a demand upon this country for timber suitable for ship-building, and the agents of several foreign powers are in the United States for the purpose of purchasing. Two cargoes were recently shipped to France, and it is said more have been purchased for Great Britain.

Hon. Caleb Cushing, late Minister to Spain, severely criticises the action of Congress in abolishing Consulates. He maintains that our Consuls do not cost the Government anything, and that they are simply treasury agents who develop American commerce, and who ought to to be in every corner of the globe where there is a prospect of trade. He believes that the commerce of England is largely due to its extensive Consular service.

The Canadian Government finds itself seriously embarrassed in its finances by the construction of the Pacific railroads. Between 1867 and 1876 the public debt has grown from $92,000,000 to $152,000,000. The Intercolonial has cost $21,000,000, and to keep it running takes $500,000 to $1,000,000 a year. Besides this, the Government is at work enlarging the canals; and in Quebec and Ontario large railway expenditures are being made by the provinces out of the subsidies supplied by the Dominion Government.

The silk industry of Lyons, France, is in a languishing if not desperate condition, and the French Government intends to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase by the State of silk fabrics in Lyons, "in order to give work and relief to the suffering operatives." The silk business in China is also considerably depressed; but in America, according to the report of the Silk Association, the industry was never in a more thriving condition. The products have developed from $2,000,000 to $25,000,000 within the last few years.

Two plans are on foot in Massachusetts to utilize the Hoosac tunnel for through railroads to the West. One proposes to charter a Boston and Chicago Railway Trust Company, with a capital of $100,000,000, $35,000,000 of it to be guaranteed by the Bay State. The other plan has in view the creation of a Boston, Hoosac Tunnel and Western Railway Company to lease and build lines, making a through connection from Boston to the village of Fair Haven, on Lake Ontario, the lake terminus of the Southern Central railroad. Both plans are in the hands of energetic men, and there is a busy time in the Massachusetts Legislature over them. Among the promoters of the latter of the two are Oliver Ames, Estes Howe, Elisha Atkins and George I. Post.

The following statement, by the Bureau of Statistics, shows the imports of wheat to the United Kingdom (Great Britain), during the fifteen months which ended March 31, 1877: "From the United States, 24,299,162 cwt.; from Russia, 10,112,444 cwt.; from British India, 3,986,200 cwt.; from Germany, 2,928,013 cwt.; from France, 571,867 cwt.; from Egypt, 2,452,070 cwt.; from Turkey, Wallachia and Moldavia, 1,441,183 cwt.; from British North America, 2,482,059 cwt.; from Chili, 994,619 cwt.; other countries, 3,683,691 cwt. Total, 52,951,358 cwt., or nearly 100,000,000 bushels, of the value of £28,085,007. During the same period there was imported 7,469,051 cwt. of wheat flour, of which 2,749,579 cwt. was received from the United States.

Sawdust in Mortar.

One of the German scientists recommends the use of sawdust in morter as superior to hair in preventing cracking and peeling off under the action of storms and frost. His own house, exposed to prolonged storms on the seacoast, had patches of mortar to be renewed each spring, and, after trying without effect a number of substances to prevent it, he found sawdust perfectly satisfactory. It was first thoroughly dried and sifted through an ordinary grain sieve to remove the larger particles. The mortar was made by mixing one part of cement, two of lime, two of sawdust and five of sharp sand, the sawdust being first well mixed dry with the cement and sand.

A Yankee, having patented a device for making the tops of fences impassable by cats, advertises as follows: "Practical tests of the invention have shown that it is discouraging to cats in a high degree. Tom cats of exceptional intelligence, who have long treated with contempt such trivial obstacles as spikes and broken glass, have retreated baffled before the teaser."

The British army estimates provide this year for 131,720 men, a net increase of 836; 3,815 men deserted in the past year; 29,350 men joined the line, and 38,437 the militia.

A Grand Hunt.

Bradford is now one of the largest in area and most populous counties in Pennsylvania. The Bucks are a ruling family here. When the Bucks, the grandfathers of the present generation, came here, the place was literally a howling wilderness. Wolves in great droves hunted almost every other living thing.

"About seventy years ago," said old Mr. Buck, "we had a great hunt here—a circular hunt, taking in the country round for thirty miles. It is said that over 600 men were engaged in it, and that was a great many for those times. There was a Captain over every ten men, to see that they did not shoot each other in the excitement. The place of meeting, or rather the center of the circular hunt, was a round hill near Le Raysville, on the head-waters of the Wyalusing. The hunt lasted three days, the first to drive in the game, the next two to kill and divide it. On the morning of the second day the round mountain was covered with all kinds of game, and the growls of bears and howls of wolves, and the rushing of deer in every direction, made the men, many of whom had not hunted much before, nearly crazy. At daylight the firing began. The ring closed in until the men stood eight deep around the circle. The great elk and deer would make a rush from the center of this frightened group, and leap clear over the heads of men and get away. The panthers had to be chased from tree to tree; the wolves would sneak behind with grinning jaws. They were the strong, wiry, northern kind of wolves, and had claws as long as a man's fingers, and as sharp as needles. They could tear a dog to pieces in a twinkling, but their great offense had been the killing of sheep and calves.

The firing continued all day. Toward evening it was tremendous. As it grew dark the men gathered together, and at the word all fired together. The night was spent in dividing the game. The result was 600 deer, thirteen great wolves, ten bears, and three immense panthers. There were no more calves killed by the wolves in that part of the country.—Reading (Pa.) Eagle.

Revaccination.

There is no evidence, according to the London Lancet, to show that revaccination, once efficiently performed at or after puberty, need ever be repeated. On the other hand, the frequent repetition of vaccination, which has become common during alarms of small-pox, is distinctly to be deprecated. Such repetitions are as a rule futile, they are wasteful of vaccine lymph when lymph is most precious; they tend to unsettle the minds of people regarding some of the best-established facts as to the preservative power of vaccination, and they are unnecessary. The official memorandum of the Local Government Board on revaccination says: "Revaccination once properly and successfully performed does not appear ever to require repetition." The nurses and other servants of the London Small-Pox Hospital, when they enter the service are invariably submitted to vaccination, which, in their case, is generally revaccination, and is never repeated; and so perfect is the protection that, though the nurses live in the closest and most constant attendance of small-pox patients, and though also the other servants are in various ways exposed to special chances of infection, the resident surgeon of the hospital, during forty-one years of office, there has never known small-pox to affect any of these nurses or servants.

Short and Sharp.

Mr. Boker, United States Minister at St. Petersburg, returned to his home in Philadelphia, in a recent interview confirms a statement which has been made many times, that the Turkish army is in a demoralized condition and cannot exceed 300,000 men, while the Russian army is in perfect order, and can muster 1,000,000 men, well drilled and disciplined, plentifully supplied with arms and material of war; and that Russia, in six weeks after the war is commenced, can, if she is so disposed, be at the gates of Constantinople, and that, between the two great armies, the Turks will be utterly exterminated.

The Secretary of the Treasury has received an anonymous letter postmarked Washington, D. C., containing the sum of $300 as a contribution to the conscience fund.

THE SEAT OF WAR IN THE EAST.

The progress of the Russian columns in Armenia has been attended by singular good fortune up to the present. With an extended front they have swept forward from the coast of the Black sea to the Persian frontier, meeting scarcely any opposition from the Turks. In reflecting on this remarkable movement several important points present themselves, as indicating pretty clearly the relative strength and morale of the belligerents. Without a preponderating force the Russians could not undertake the invasion of Turkish territory from so many widely-separated points. A concentration of the Turks against any of the advancing Russian columns would place before the latter not less than 40,000 men, with all the advantages of a chosen battle ground and the difficulties of the country. It is, therefore, safe to presume that each Russian column numbers at least 30,000 men, with supporting bodies of cavalry operating in the intervals between the columns. The aggregate Russian strength in the field must therefore be over 100,000, with strong reserves to occupy captured positions and maintain the communications. The seizure of Bajazid by the Russians shows that they are operating from Eriwan, a strongly fortified town southward of Alexandropol. The Turks retired from the place on the approach of the enemy, being too weak in numbers and artillery to attempt a defense. Their withdrawal also indicates the weakness of their whole line, for the strategical value of Bajazid in view of a Persian advance cannot be questioned. Perhaps, under the circumstances, the concentration of the Turks is their best policy, but they must pay a dear price in important positions on the frontier for the safety of Erzeroum, if that city is to be saved by their efforts. The road from Bajazid toward Erzeroum skirts the base of Mount Ararat toward the fortified place or castle of Toprak Kaleh, which covers the pass in the mountain range that separates the valley of the Arras from that of the Mourad. The Turks of Bajazid will, therefore, retire on Toprak Kaleh or on Van, with the probabilities in favor of the first-named position. With Bajazid as their depot, the Russians will advance cautiously westward, timing their movements with those of the Kars column. If the latter is successful in isolating Kars, a concerted movement of the two will force the Turks to abandon the head of the Mourad valley altogether, and retire on Erzeroum. If, therefore, a battle is to be fought by the late Turkish garrison of Bajazid, it will be on the road to Toprak Kaleh.

It is probable that the Russian Army of the Danube will maintain its present position until the Army of the Caucasus has made further progress westward. The policy of forcing the Turks to develop their full fighting strength before attacking them on the European side is the safest for the Russian commanders just now. The passage of the Danube is an operation so full of peril that it will not be undertaken until at least 150,000 men are massed for the purpose. Then comes the selection of the point of crossing, which is one of the gravest problems of the campaign. By forcing the river at Silistria the Russians could avoid a long march in the Dobrudscha, at once threaten Shumla and isolate that fortress from Rustchuk and the west by a series of rapid marches on the railroad at Rasgrad, while an expedition operating from Tchernavoda would cut the Kostendge railroad and thus destroy one of the Turkish lines of supply. With Silistria in their hands the Russians would control the Danube from that point to its mouth and compel the Turks to retire to the Balkans on the west and to Shumla on the east of the Russian line of advance.

WAR TOPICS.

AN eye-witness gives a graphic picture of the Russian method of forwarding guns to Rustchuk. Ten yoke of bullocks to a gun, and never more than an average of four miles a day; while in rainy days no progress is made at all, bullocks and gun sticking fast in the mud.

THE Turks have remained in undisturbed possession of Constantinople for about 425 years. On the 29th of May, 1453—the city was then the capital of the Byzantine empire—it was stormed and captured by the Turks, Constantine the Third, the last of the Byzantine Emperors, losing his life in the defense.

A LETTER from a foreign officer of rank, at present in Constantinople, gives a good insight into the situation and prospects of Turkey. The war she will have to carry on will necessarily be two-fold. It will be an offensive war on the Black sea and in Asia Minor, and a strictly defensive one on the Danube. But no one who does not know the Turkish troops and their inveterate hatred of the "Muscovite dogs" can yet form an adequate idea of the fierceness with which the defense is likely to be conducted. They have also for them the incalculable advantage of fighting at home, combined with the other advantage of not having to care for the devastation of the soil they fight on; Bulgaria's suffering does not touch them. The Russians, on the other hand, will have to operate away from their frontier, to carry with them all their provisions and ammunition, and to keep a vigilant watch on doubtful allies in their rear.

THE last invasion of Turkey by the Russians occurred in 1829-30. On the 26th of July of the latter year the passage of the Balkan mountains was completed by the Russian army, and on the 20th of August the invading army, under the command of Gen. Diebitsch, entered Adrianople and dictated a peace that would have done credit to a veteran poker-player reverent of the powers of bluff. Turkey's fleet had just been destroyed at Navarino, her janissaries had been wiped out, Russia commanded both seas, and threw 100,000 men across the Danube. Braila held out forty-four days; Varna was only won by Youssouf Pasha's treason; Silistria fell after a long siege in the second campaign. By inconceivable negligence the Balkan passes were not fortified, and the Russian Gen. Diebitsch, springing upon these, reached Adrianople with 20,000 men.

GEN. GRANT DUFF has written an article in the Nineteenth Century upon the Eastern question, in which he arrives at the conclusion, from a political survey of Russia, that her real object is rather to gain advantages in Asia than in Europe. He goes on to show that both Austria and England can combine to prevent her taking Constantinople, securing control of the Danube, or permanently acquiring territory in Turkey in Europe, but that no power can stop her progress in Armenia. Austria, France, Italy and Germany have no interest there, and it is beyond the power of England to prevent it. It is his opinion that, whether the Russians establish a protectorate in European Turkey, annex it, or withdraw from it altogether, they will secure Asia Minor and keep it, and, before they conclude a peace with the Turks, will secure certain rights in the Holy Land. The strength of the army which the Government has thrown upon the borders of Armenia, the celerity which has characterized its movements, and the force of the blows which it has already struck, favor the theories advanced by the writer. The real danger to Constantinople may yet come from the Russian army of the Caucasus.

ONE of the most curious features of the war is that the Russians claim to be anxious only to protect their coreligionists in Turkey, while the Turks put forward their solicitude for the fate of "the Mussulmans of the Crimean and the Caucasian coasts, now groaning under the Russian yoke." Such, at least, was the language of the Sultan in his manifesto to the officers and men of of his fleet. Yet neither the Christians in Turkey nor the Mussulmans in Russia evince any desire to be "protected." The Christian members of the Turkish Parliament have publicly declared that their constituents were decidedly opposed to Russian intervention, and are perfectly ready to serve in the Turkish army, and to support such troops as may be sent out to their districts during the coming struggle. On the other hand, the Mussulman population of Russia shows its reluctance to be protected by the Turks in a still more eloquent manner. A division of advanced guards has just been formed at Kischeneff, consisting of three mounted regiments of Ural Cossacks, one infantry regiment of Terek highlanders, and a field battery of six guns, the whole force under the command of the well-known partisan warrior, Gen. Skobeleff. Nearly all the men composing this division are Tartars, consequently Mussulmans.

Our Trade With Russia and Turkey.

The direct trade of the United States with Russia and Turkey is not of sufficient magnitude to make its entire loss have an important bearing upon the general foreign trade of the country, though one or two articles of direct export may be affected somewhat. In the year ending June 30, 1874, the importations into the United States from Russia only aggregated $1,257,170 in value, or less than one-fourth of one per cent. of the total imports. The exports from the United States to Russia, the same year, amounted in value to $10,284,803, or about 1 3.5 per cent. For the year ending June 30, 1875, the imports from Russia to the United States were valued at $1,399,759, and the exports from the United States to Russia, $11,481,758, showing a slight increase in both imports and exports. The imports from Turkey in Europe, in 1874, were valued at $66,695, and the exports thereto at $1,697,320. In 1875 the imports were valued at $72,459, and the exports at $3,454,759. The imports from Turkey in Asia, in 1874, were $449,621, and the exports thereto, $519,752; in 1875 the imports amounted in value to $317,056, and the exports to $473,354. Turkey in Africa, in 1874, sent products to this country valued at $270,631, while the exports thither, from this country, were valued at $322,791. For 1875 the totals were, imports, $190,432; exports, $316,735. The total value of the trade, both export and import, of the United States with Turkey in Europe, Asia and Africa was $23,449,621, and was less than 1½ per cent. of the foreign trade of the United States. Some portion of the direct trade may be cut off by reason of the war, but the exportation of arms, ammunition and war material to the belligerents will be greatly stimulated, while as an indirect result of the war the demand for American breadstuffs and provisions will be greatly increased.

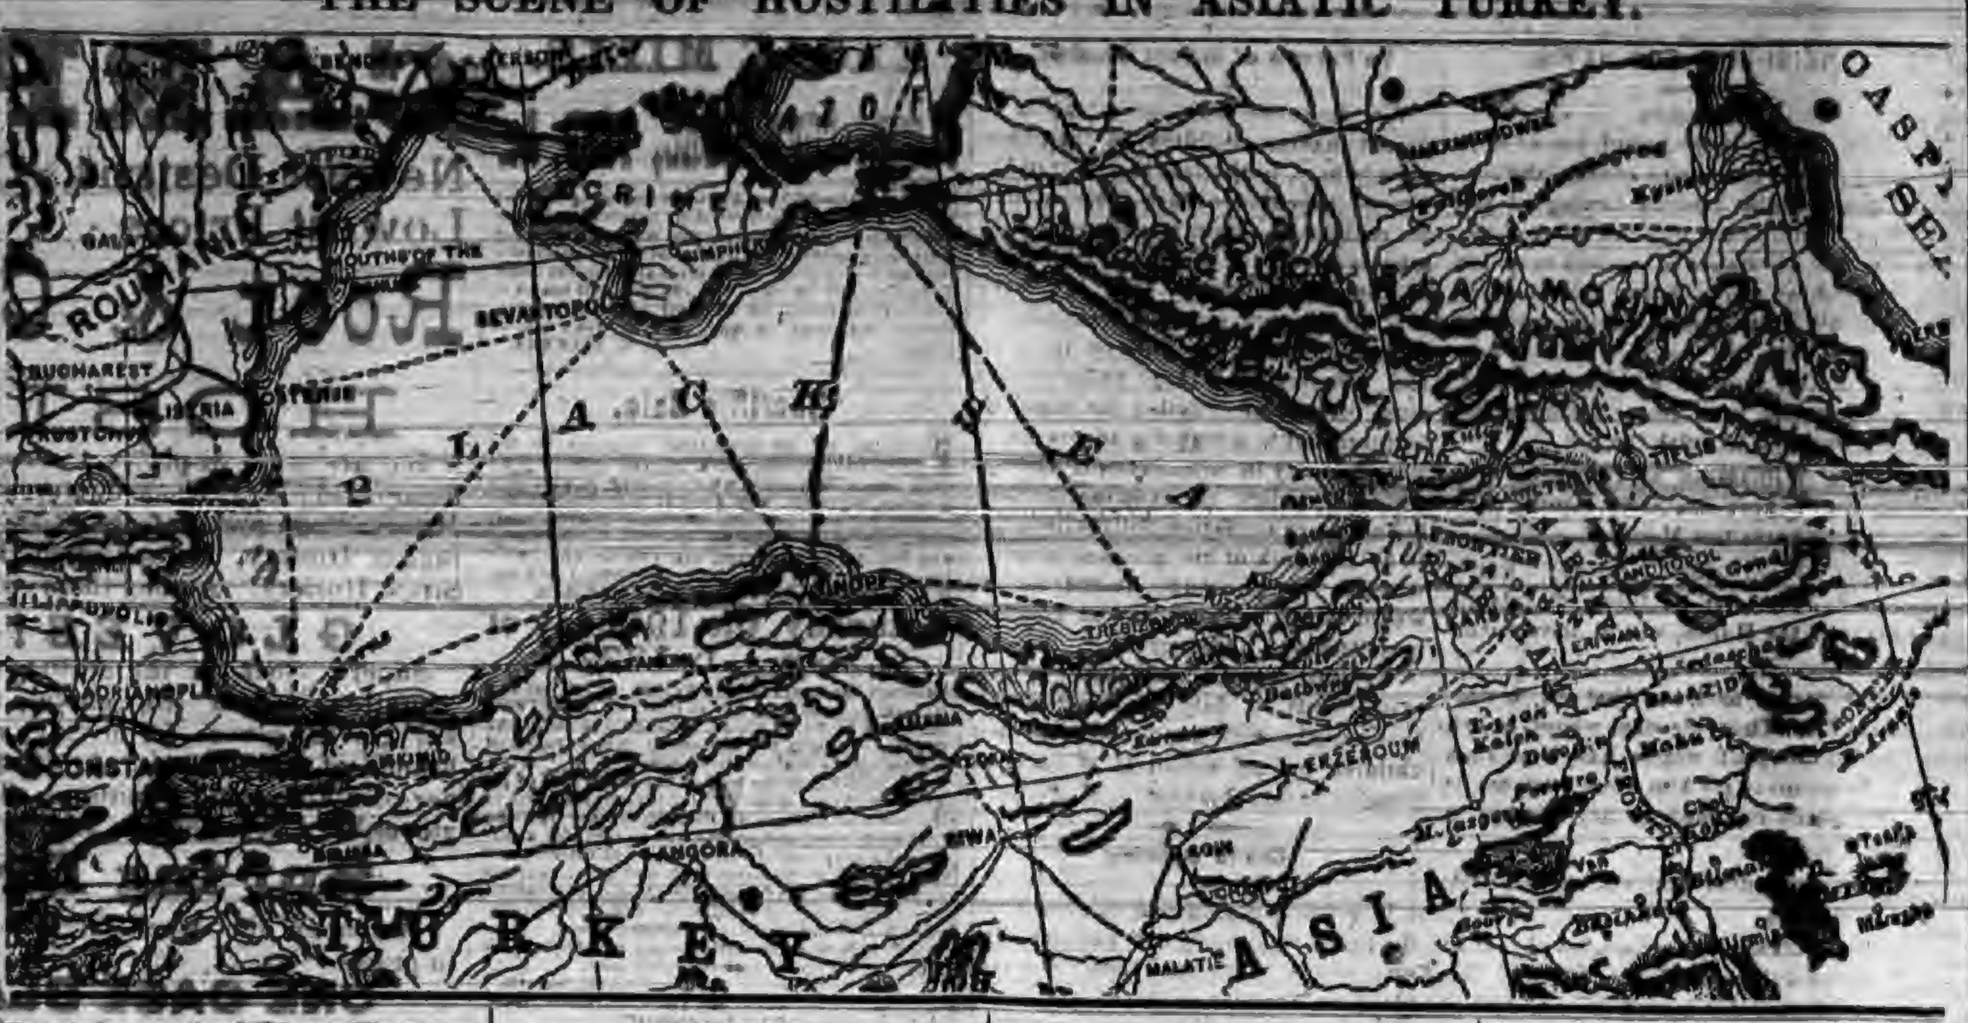
THE SCENE OF HOSTILITIES IN ASIATIC TURKEY.



THE WAR.

The Causes, Direct and Indirect, That Have Led to It.

The Chicago Tribune, in answer to a correspondent's inquiry as to the cause of the war between Russia and Turkey, says: There are two causes—the direct and indirect. The direct may be stated in a very few words: The oppression and persecution of their Christian subjects by the Turks reached such a point of cruelty that the victims broke out in open revolt a year ago. In suppressing this revolt, the Turks were guilty of such inhuman tortures and massacres that Europe, with Russia at the head, protested, and, after meeting in conference, demanded that the Porte should give guarantees of reform. The Porte refused, and Russia, as the champion of the Christians, now takes the field to secure these reforms by the sword, and to ameliorate the condition of the Christians.

The indirect cause of this war is that the Turk is an alien in Europe, an enemy of Western civilization, a sanguinary fanatic by nature, a ruler whose Government is not a Government of law but of plunder, and that there is a general feeling in the civilized world that it is time for this Government to be overthrown or removed to its original Asiatic source. The element of law does not enter into the idea of Turkish Government. Its constitution is an utter dead letter. It has no machinery for enforcing laws. It has promised to make reforms over and over again, which promises remain unfulfilled because it cannot enforce them. The governing power of Turkey is in the hands of a caste that does not number one-sixth of the empire, which exists as an armed camp of Asiatics in the midst of Europe, not to lay down laws, enforce obedience, and administer justice, but to terrorise even to the extent of extermination, if necessary, and in any event to a degree that will make resistance impossible. This caste is not responsible to any authority but its own. If its agents commit outrages there is no redress. Not one of the fiends who perpetrated the Bulgarian horrors has ever been punished; on the other hand, the bloodiest butchers have been promoted to higher seats of honor. Mr. Maccoll, in his recent work on Turkey, speaks of the condition of the Bulgarians as follows:

"The Christians have in most provinces, and notably in Bulgaria, fallen into the temper of slaves; that resistance to the gendarmerie is considered impossible, the Government and its soldiery invariably supporting them, until the armed policemen can do absolutely what they please, and, in a country where chastity is considered of the highest importance and women are reverenced as in Ireland, the honor of families is absolutely at the mercy of any villain who may be admitted into the ranks of the defenders of order. The people, aware that the slightest complaint will be the signal for massacre or torture, have been degraded below the human point, till, when assailed in the way which makes even slaves resist, they only occasionally have the energy to join the brigands, though, strange to say, when they have joined them they fight to the death. It is enough to say that in all rural districts, wherever Turks are annoyed, or resisted, or even affected with a caprice of tyranny, the villages encounter the fate of cities taken by storm in the worst cycles of middle-age warfare. The men are murdered, and the women violated at will and with impunity. No redress is even hoped for; the authorities all side with the gendarmerie or soldiers, and the worst offenders are the Pashas sent to maintain order. The Christian who complains is tortured until he leaves off complaining, and the Pasha who tortures him is considered an energetic officer, and rapidly promoted."

The Turkish Government lives not only by cruelty but by plunder. It is predatory in character, not judicial. It eats the substance of its victims; if they object, it exterminates them. It takes with no idea of returning. It borrows with no idea of paying. It promises with no idea of fulfilling. It lives among civilized nations as the blackmailer, and thief, and swindler live in society. It would have no subject unless as a slave; if it cannot enslave him, it kills him, ravishes his wife, sells his children, and burns his home. As Mr. Maccoll says in another part of his work, speaking of the evil which this war is intended to remove:

"It is the existence of a so-called Government over at the very least 6,000,000 of Christians in Europe and 3,000,000 more in Asia, which, so far from securing even tolerable peace for domestic and social life, and rendering it probable that the human beings born in Christian communities should grow up with the ordinary confidence in industry, courage under wrong, self-respect in conduct, affections in their homes, and good-will toward their neighbors, of average men, actively prevents any such result, substitutes organized plunder for taxation, favoritism of the grossest kind for justice, cows all the manliness out of the men, and all the womanliness out of the women, replaces the noblest affections by the fiercest and the meanest passions, makes dread, chronic servility the only assurance against wholesale wrong, and apathy the one remedy against outrage."

To suppress such an evil as this Russia enters the field, and her legions are now scouring over Roumania and Asia Minor. No horrors of war can equal the horrors of Sclavic persecution. No loss of life can be so terrible as the evil that occasions it. Its removal at any cost of life, money, or misery will be a blessing to the world.

A Genealogical Baby.

According to the Des Moines (Ia.) State Register, there is in that city a baby with twelve living grand-parents. Five generations, all alive and well, form an ancestral tie that few little folks—or big folks, either—ever see. This phenomenon, however, this baby experiences. She has one great-great-grandmother, being 90 years of age, residing in Indiana; four great-grandmothers, ages respectingly 63 and 69, on the father's side, and 68 and 70 on the mother's side; three great-grandfathers living—only one on the father's side, age 71; on the mother's side, one aged 72, the other 71; two grandmothers living, ages, on the father's side 44, on the mother's side, 46; two grandfathers, aged, on the father's side 46, on the mother's side 48, and one father and mother. All the above are a hearty, robust, ambitious class of people, all being to date full of life; and only one who is any way helpless, she being the oldest in the account. The parents are aged respectively 22 and 24 years.

Hospitable Highwaymen.

A young man named Ragan, from San Felipe, Tex., tells the San Antonio Express that as he was riding along the road, a few miles beyond Castroville, two men rode up to him from the brush by the roadside and demanded his money. Both had their faces masked, but did not present their revolvers, which they carried in sight, simply saying, as they told him to hold, that they didn't think it necessary to draw on him, as he was so young. He had $19 in his pocket and a considerable sum in his boots. The last mentioned the robbers failed to find, but took the $19. They then invited the young man to step into the brush and lunch with them, which he, thinking it safest to humor them, did, although his appetite was none of the most ravenous. About 100 yards from the road the men had a good lunch spread, which they partook of heartily, keeping their faces masked, however. After lunch the robbers returned $7 to their victim, and told him he could go. He didn't wait for a second bidding.

A Lay of True Love.

As a young man was looking over a barrel of eggs received at a grocery on Newark avenue, Jersey City, about a month ago, he found the following inscription upon one of the eggs:

If this you see, young man,
Write just as soon as you can,
And let me hear from my favorite egg;
This great boon I humbly beg.
JULIA BRIERSON, Westfield, Ohio.

The youth immediately wrote to the address, inclosing his photograph, and received a reply and picture from the writer of the lines. The correspondence was continued to the satisfaction of both persons, who are to be married next month. It is said the young lady is the daughter of a wealthy farmer, and wrote the lines in jest, never expecting to hear from them.—New York Tribune.

Getting the Drop.

The patent bell-punch has been introduced recently on several street car lines in San Francisco. One company pays a royalty of 40 cents a day for every bell-punch, and as 40 cars are kept on the track the expense of this mechanical detective service is $16 a day, which represents the net dishonesty which the bell-punch must offset in order to be self-supporting. One of the conductors lately had a queer adventure. There was a picturesque miner in the car who had not paid his fare, and, as the conductor went forward and took the little instrument from his pocket, the stranger sprang to his feet, and, drawing a revolver, exclaimed, "I'll be blowed if you get the drop on me."

KIND consideration. Landlady (evidently not up to passing events, who has just let her apartments): "And coals, a shilling a scuttle!" Lodger: "Why, that little tea-scoop thing will want filling a dozen times a day!" Landlady: "O! don't mind giving trouble, sir! Just touch the bell and the servant will attend to it immediately."

WHAT BECOMES OF THE MONEY!

Our Imports and Exports—Why the Balance of Trade Has Settled in Our Favor.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

We have repeatedly published the figures showing the falling off in the import trade of the United States. This, added to the increase in the exports, exhibits a regularly-increasing margin of difference between our exports and imports, or what is called a large "balance of trade" in our favor. The statements of imports and exports for several years, and for the eight months of the present year ending Feb. 28, thus compare:

Years.	Imports.	Exports.	Excess of Exports.
1874....	$595,861,248	$704,463,120	$108,601,872
1875....	553,906,153	643,094,767	89,188,614
1876....	476,677,871	644,956,406	168,278,535
Eight mo'ths of 1876...	300,557,531	487,273,786	186,716,255
Totals..	$1,927,002,803	$2,479,788,079	$552,785,276

Here we have the record that in the three years and eight months ending Feb. 28, 1877, we have exported and sold domestic products to the amount of $552,785,276 in excess of the value of the goods we have purchased. What has been done with the money? In the first eight months of the present fiscal year we have sold nearly $200,000,000 more goods than we have purchased. Where does the money go? What are we receiving for it? That question is not easily answered in detail; but generally we may assume that it is applied abroad to taking up the various forms of local indebtedness. During the war and following the war, and down to the very day in 1873 on which Jay Cooke closed his bank, the American people were actively and industriously engaged in the manufacture of debts. The Southern States succeeded in issuing nearly $300,000,000 of State bonds; the cities of the United States issued all the bonds for which they could find purchasers. Even little rural villages issued their 10 per cent. bonds, and sold them, or gave them away, or had them stolen and sold. The agricultural districts of this State sold over $15,000,000 of bonds, bearing an average interest of 8½ per cent. The municipal debts in Illinois alone exceed $40,000,000. It was the same everywhere. The railroads were industrious in the issue of bonds. Cash was discarded as a means of building railways; railways were built by construction companies. Stock was subscribed and paid for in bonds; the railroad companies paid the construction companies in bonds; the construction companies paid for grading, and bridges, and for iron, and for cars, and for coal, and locomotives, in bonds. Bonds were the universal investment. Every laborer or mechanic on a railway, every man who furnished teams for grading or ties, or stone, or lumber, had his bonds laid away. The bonds were inexhaustible so long as they could be printed and people would take them. These bonds were disposed of as rapidly as possible. Agents of foreign capitalists picked them up in the market and sent them abroad. We were piling up debt most recklessly and laboriously.

We are now buying that debt back, but, unfortunately, are not paying it. A very large portion of the debt that was held at home has been sponged out of existence. More of it is of dubious or very small value. The rest of it was held abroad. The foreign holders of these bonds have been sending them to this country to be sold. At the time of the panic there were probably not less than $1,500,000,000 of European money invested in this country in all the forms of American securities. These have been in the process of return to this country in exchange for our exports. That will account largely for the "balance of trade" which has set in in our favor. How far it is profitable to this country is a matter of speculation. In the meantime, these bonds pay no duty, and are consequently no source of revenue. The importation of $100,000,000 more of dutiable merchandise would yield an average of $35,000,000 of revenue to the Government.

It cannot be said that we are paying our debts by this process. The bonds are merely changing hands—passing from foreign to American holders. Persons anxious to know if the nation is not getting rich from its surplus exports may make their own estimate as to the profits of the exchange of cotton and breadstuffs for railroad, municipal and other bonds and securities.

AMONG the matrimonial announcements of Conjungo, the Paris marriage broker, in the Petit Journal, may be noticed: "Young lady; age 29; fortune 100,000 francs." "Orphan; age 23; fortune 60,000 francs." "Widow without children; age 26; fortune 100,000 francs." "Widow well preserved; age 39; does not look more than 28; no false hair; has preserved all her teeth; plays the piano sufficiently for dancing; temper quick, but heart good; slight mustache; fortune 180,000 francs and an uncle paralyzed on one side, whose doctor only gives him three months to live."

A MAN in Warren county, Ga., has been twice struck by lightning, and still lives. His latest misfortune was matrimony.

SALT is now imported in large quantities from Europe at low rates. Shipowners prefer it to ballast for western passage.

IT was computed in July, 1733, that within the past twelve months Great Britain had exported 800,000 quarters of wheat, valued at £1,000,000 sterling. Times have changed.

OLE C. RUE, of Norway township, Fillmore county, Minn., entered a den of wolves the other day and killed ten of them, and for their heads received $50 from the County Treasurer.

A FARMER'S wife near Dixon, Cal., while closing the gate of a corral into which she had driven some horses, was almost instantly killed by one of the animals running against the gate. It opened outward and fractured her skull.

DEWITT C. ELLIS, Bank of Superintendent of New York State, is charged before the Banking Committee of the State Senate with allowing fifteen insolvent banks to keep upen, thereby inflicting a loss of $6,000,000 to depositors.

DR. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN invented and constructed three clocks, and one of them is owned in the Old King's Arms Inn, in Lancaster, England. It has only three wheels and strikes the hour. It is to be sold at auction in May, with other curious historical objects.

A YOUNG lady at Holyoke, Mass., who tried to cure a sore throat recently by wrapping it in raw liver on going to bed, was awakened in the night by a huge rat that was lunching from the liver, and she concluded that of the two she preferred sore throat.

THE publishers of the Christian Union, Mr. Beecher's paper, recently ordered a new printing press from England, but when it arrived they had no money to pay for it. The manufacturers have begun a suit for breach of contract against the publishers.

THE French society for suppressing the abuse of tobacco, holding that smoking among boys is pernicious to their health, has prepared a petition to be presented to the Assembly, asking for a law to prohibit youths under 16 from using the weed in public places.

A SAFETY envelope to prevent tampering has been devised. On the flap the words "attempt to open" are printed with a double set of chemicals, the first impression containing nutgalls and the second green vitriol. If the flap be steamed or moistened in any way the magic printing will appear.

Robins in the tree-top,
Blossoms in the grass,
Green things a-growing
Everywhere you pass;
Sudden little breezes,
Showers of silver dew,
Black bough and bent twig
Budding out anew;
Pine-tree and willow-tree,
Fringed elm, and larch—
Don't you think that May-time's
Pleasanter than March?

THE Turkish naval force is now composed of 2 imperial yachts, 6 iron-clad frigates, 9 iron-clad corvettes, 2 iron-clad monitors, 4 frigates, 5 iron-clad gunboats, 4 ships-of-the-line, 7 corvettes, 15 coast-guard vessels, 5 schooners, 4 cannon sloops and 53 nondescript vessels—in all 116, with 759 guns and 16,038 men.

SUCH is the terror entertained by the Chinese for the Hatchet Society or Highbinders (a band of Celestial assassins) that Tong Wah Sow, shot by one of the gang and mortaly wounded at San Francisco, refused to divulge the name of his murderer, fearing that if he did the highbinders would wreak their vengeance on his family.

THE Chicago Sun publishes an interview with an old citizen of Kansas, named Dubois, who claims to have been one of a party who, when the Bender family emigrated so suddenly from the scene of their manifold murders in that State, followed their trail, and, having encountered them, had a short, sharp fight, which ended in the summary burial of the whole family.

IN San Mateo county, Cal., two tax-payers own more than four thousand acres; seven more than three thousand, out less than four thousand; ten more than two thousand, but less than three thousand; forty-eight more than one thousand, but less than two thousand; sixty-four more than five hundred, but less than one thousand; one hundred and forty-eight over two hundred, but less than five hundred.

THE Governor of Pennsylvania has signed the bill appropriating $575,000 for the erection of a new State lunatic hospital to relieve the other institutions for the insane, which are generally overcrowded. The hospital is for the accommodation of the insane of Bucks, Montgomery, Chester, Northampton, Delaware, and other counties. The payment of the appropriation will be made in quarterly installments of $50,000.

A CURIOUS scene was enacted at the Church of St. Bartholomew the Great, in London, on Good Friday. According to the provisions of an ancient will the rector proceeded to the churchyard and deposited twenty-one sixpences on the grave of the testatrix as a donation to twenty-one widows, the conditions being that they were absolutely needy and not too stiff in their joints to stoop and pick up the money.

A NEW work has appeared on flying, a subject which has an extraordinary fascination for some minds. It is by the late Charles Mansfield, an accomplished Englishman. The work, "teems with ideas and suggestions for combating nature," and is very curious. Not the least distinguished of aeronauts is Capt. Burnaby, author of the famous "Ride to Khiva," who made a balloon voyage from Cremorne Garden, London, some years ago.

SPRING SONG.

I.

The gentle zephyrs wakening blow,
And day and night they rustle low,
By sweet bowers softly ranging;
Refreshing scent! reviving sound!
That breathe to hearts still winter bound,
"Hope even ye, for all is changing."

II.

The earth grows fairer day by day,
As spring moves on from March to May,
Her wand of magic wielding;
'Tis waved! the sombrest valleys bloom,
And the sad soul smiles through its gloom,
To grief's divine exorcist yielding.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, MAY 17, 1877.

Let us face the truth. Our Southern policy has not only been a curse to the whites, but it has been a curse to the freed people for whose benefit it was adopted.—[New York Tribune.

That is precisely what the Jeffersonian Democracy has been telling you for the past twelve years, and they are telling you several other truths that you will receive before you are many years older.

All the indications point to higher prices for breadstuffs. The exportations to Great Britain this year from this country are thirteen millions bushels less than they were at the same time in 1876, counting from the harvest of 1875. And the English supply is twelve millions of bushels short from other countries. This deficit must now be made up for the most part by our farmers.—Banner.

James Redpath, the once noted abolitionist and for years an influential Republican leader, is out in a long and bitter letter, addressed to a prominent negro politician of Mississippi, in which he advises the colored people to vote the Democratic ticket, and says that Senator Bruce and Wendell Philips agree with him. In his long and bitter attack on Hayes he says; I should refuse to believe that God governs this world if the dastardly treachery of this administration to the blacks is not visited with the destruction of the party; if it submits to the leadership of Hayes, it will not be fit to live, because it will thereby abandon both its principles and its saviors.

Some of the Republican papers, are not afraid to speak out. Here is what one published at Sturgis, Mich., says:

> There is but one way of escape for Mr. Hayes and his apologists. That is to confess that Packard was not elected Governor of Louisiana nor Hayes President of the United States. Any other line of argument at once involves itself in inconsistency.—Hayes and Packard stand or fall together, and if one goes out the other ought to follow him. It will not do to say that Hayes was "constitutionally" elected. This is a mere quibble. The constitution has been misinterpreted if held to warrant the inauguration of a President not really elected. The time has come for plain speaking, and we trust that lots of it will be done at the extra session of Congress. Let that body institute inquiries as to who was really elected President last November, and if Mr. Hayes' title is defective, just "withdraw the troops," and let him and Uncle Sammy fight it.

Governor Williams has appointed the state house commissioners in accordance with the provisions of a law passed by the last legislature. The names of the appointed are: I. D. G. Nelson, of Fort Wayne; W. R. McKeen, Terre Haute; and Gen. T. A. Morris and Gen. John Love, of Indianapolis. Mr. Nelson has been prominently connected with business and agricultural affairs for many years; is a man of ability, and thoroughly reliable. Mr. McKeen is a banker, is a successful business man, president of a railroad, and stands high as a man of energy and skill. Gen. Love and Gen. Morris have been known to the people of Indiana for many years as gentlemen of wealth and enterprise, and men in every way worthy of the higest official position which it is possible for the people to confer upon them. Nelson and Love are Democrats, and Morris and McKeen are Republicans. The governor is president of the commission.

Governor Williams yesterday appointed the following named gentlemen to serve as the new state house commissioners: I. D. G. Nelson, Fort Wayne; W. R. McKeen, Terre Haute; General Thomas A. Morris, and General John Love, of this city. There has been a large number of aspirants for the positions, and the contest has been sharp and active. Since the passage of the new state house bill the governor has been visited by numerous delegations from all over the state, which have urged the claimes of the various candidates. All things considered, it is doubtful whether the appointments could be improved upon, and the selection is another manifestation of the wisdom and great good sense that have marked the official acts of his excellency. The appointees are well known throughout the state as gentlemen of high personal character, unquestionable integrity and of great ability and wide experience in the management of large business interests.

As a rule a sneeze is the warning nature gives that some part of the body is exposed to a cooler temperature than the other parts, and that the sneezer is "catching cold." Next to the warning, what is the use of the sneeze? It throws open the pores of the whole body and induces a gentle perspiration; in a word it throws off the cold. A child rarely sneezes more than twice—perspiration is readily induced in youth; an old man, on the contrary, sneezes half a dozen to a dozen times, with a loudly explosive "catchogue." It is harder to set him perspiring. When one is sitting by an open window and finds himself sneezing, nature tells him he is taking cold. He should get up instantly, walk about and take a full tumbler of cold water to keep up the prespiration that the sneeze set in motion. If he does this he will not be telling after that he has a "cold in his head," or chest, or lungs.

CORUNNA.

Lafe Miller is the proud owner of a fast colt, in whose veins courses the royal blood of the famous Lexington and Gray Eagle. One day last week Lafe, with the assistance of no less than ten men and as many boys, undertook to train his colt—sheep—to the saddle in view of the fall races. Lafe is now able to be around without crutches, and a young man from Michigan has been engaged to finish the job.

Dave Williamson, of Defiance, Ohio, sojourning here for some months past, returned home last Monday.

John Ward, the facetious, sandy haired John, fresh from the classic banks of the Huron, was in town Saturday.

We regret to learn that our townsmans, Mr. Thos. Jordan, whose health during the past winter has been such as to incapacitate him from business, is at present confined to his room with consumption.

The serenaders were abroad last Saturday night.

Dr. Erickson, a prominent physician of Kendalville, and the advisory surgeon of the Air Line Railroad, died at that place last week after a lingering illness.

The excitement over the recent advance in wheat having somewat subsided, the price is gradually taking a downward move, and since our last we note a fall of 8c., for Amber No. one. Small lots continue to come in, and on yesterday the market opened with the following offers for all kinds of grain Wheat, amber, No. one, $1.95c.: No. two, $1.75c.; corn, 55c.; oats, 50c. There is no change in the price of butter and eggs, our shippers offering 12c. for per lb. for prime butter, and 8c. for eggs. Our stock buyers have passed into summer quarters and therefore we pass over the stock quotations. Hides remain at 6c. with indications of an advance of ½c.

Mr. G. H. Munn is making improvements in the way of a sidewalk in front of his store. That is a move in the right direction.

The Rhodes Bros. have not bought out Mr. H. W. Coburn's stock of goods. Coburn squealed, but the boys with courage and pluck, nothing daunted as they could not have a store, bought a team and peddling wagon and a stock of goods and are now doing a fine business on the road.

Mr. A. W. Allen and J. M. Combs will ship their fine trotting horse to New York this week.

Farmers are busy planting corn. The most of them will finish this week, and the frisky implement dealer, will be after them to sell sulky corn plows. Load your shot gun and lay for them.

Married; Mr. Samuel Stafford to Miss Hatty Seeley, all of Newville, 'Squire Gunsenhouser officiating. May joy go with the youthful pair.

'Squire Gunsenhouser has rented his mill to his brother, who with the assistance of Mr. Countryman, will carry on the business.

The 'Squire has bought a farm where he proposes to raise potatoes and clover seed. The 'Squire has the energy to make thing move. Success to you.

Trade unions in this country make a great many mistakes in their time of striking for higher wages. Alluding to the strike of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers on the Reading railroad, the Philadelphia Bulletin, in its local column, says: "The strike virtually ended some time ago, and some of the employes of the company who are now without situations in consequence of their enthusiasm on behalf of the Brotherhood, now complain bitterly that the promises held out to them have not been fulfilled. These men can never obtain employment again from the company. General Manager, Wootten, said last evening: 'I had on my office table in Philadelphia to-day between 1,500 and 1,600 application for positions on the road, of which 500 were from engineers. I do not fear any further trouble from our employees. The road is running smoothly, and we have not had a single accident caused by our new men.'"

Alluding editorally to the result of the strike the Bulletin says: "The general opinion here is that it is over now. The places of the discharged engineers have been filled, and filled by men who are to be retaind permanently. A more hopeless case for strikers probably was never presented."

A letter from D. Bodine, dated Columbus, Cherokee Co., Kansas, May 10, says: Arrived at Baxter Springs last evening. Big excitement about the lead mines. Everybody is going there. It is said that some have made as high as $10,000 in two days. Times do not seem to be as close here. You see no tramps and everybody is busy. I have been looking for grasshoppers but have found none. Can see their trail, however, having gobbled up all the wheat on their way. Corn looks well what is up, and some are still planting. Corn 30c., wheat $1.25c., hay 1.50c.@2.00, stock cheap, land cheap. Peaches are almost as large as acorns. No work here. Met Samuel Miller this morning

Notices have been posted for the ball game to be played to-morrow. Don't fail to see it.

To Parents of School Children.

We desire to call the attention of parent having children in the public schools here, to the fact that it is of the utmost importance that their children be regular in their attendance at the schools during the remaining two weeks of the present term. The last week will be devoted almost exclusively to examinations on the work of the year, and the result of these examinations must determine whether the pupil can be promoted to a higher grade or not.

Irregularity in attendance is likely to result in failure on examination, and failure on examination obliges the pupil to do the work of his grade over again, whereas by punctual attendance he would probably pass, and so could be permitted to a higher grade.

We trust that the importance of this matter will be duly appreciated, and that parents will in no case keep their children out of school if it be at all possible to do otherwise. M. SILER.

Grand Opening.

It gives us pleasure to announce that the grand opening of that popular summer resort, Pleasant Lake will take place on the 25th of this month, under the auspices of that most excellent, clever and genial gentlemen, V. E. Simmons, Esq. The new steamboat "S. K. Hooper" will give all a free ride on that day. The Pleasant Lake Silver Cornet Band, assisted by the ladies Trombone band of Angola, and the H. C. & S. P. Band of Waterloo will furnish music for the occasion.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

A splendid cane will be given to the heaviest man in attendance.

STARTLING NOTICE.

A fine, bran new, glittering, magnificent silver cup will be given to the best looking editor. Now, by St Paul there's work to do. What,—shall little bantams, or long-legged shangais scoop us? Never. We would see the lake drained to its last drop, and Brown and Meyers playing pedro in the cenre thereof, ere Auburn shall be distanced. But give us a fair count, none of your 8 to 7 business. We want to name the fifteenth lady, as we have one down here who thinks Weamer awful handsome. He's got to win that prize. We are pinning our faith on him and if he dont win, lord, wont he catch it.

We are authoized to state that half fare rates will be given on the railroad. A small admission will be charged at the grounds. Let every body turn out.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced, our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

TEAS! TEAS! TEAS.

The reduction of 10 per cent has placed teas so low that now they are as cheap as before the [illegible]. We have a good tea at 25 cents and the very best Gunpowder or Young Hyson at 90 and 80 cents.

Best Gunpowder 90c	Second quality 25 and 40 c.
Second best Gunpowder 40 and 60c	Imperial Best [illegible] and 80c.
Young Hyson 70c and 90c.	Second quality Imperial 25 and 40c.

Japan Uncolored, we have a good Tea at 40c. It is pronounced equal to any 80c tea sold elsewhere. The very best Japan Tea, and English Breakfast, the very best, 60 c. It never sell under $1.25 at other places.

Board of Equalization.

AUBURN, DEKALB CO., IND. May 17, '77

The Board of Equalization for the county of DeKalb, will meet on the first Monday of June 1877, in the Auditor's office, in the town of Auburn, in said county, for the purpose of hearing and determining grievances and to equalize assessments.

ISAAC HAGUE, Auditor.

The house of John Barntt, on north Vanburen street, was considerably damaged by fire last Friday, about midnight The property was insured for double its value, and it is thought it was set on fire. The owner was absent at the time and had been for two days. Several things were stolen after they were taken from the house. The fire department was on hand and did good service.

A. R. Stone & Co, the extensive auction and commission merchant of Toledo, now occupy a large and commodious building on Summit street, and are doing the leading business in that line in that city. Our popular friend W. G. Alexander of that firm, kown to many here, has found a good field for his energy and enterprise and is on the high road to success.

The new Town Board met last Monday night and organized by electing S. C. Swineford President, S. T. Galloway was then re-appointed marshal for the current year, which we believe will give general satisfaction. Mr. G. has been prompt and attentive, and done unusually well in his collection of taxes The hog law is a success under his administration, the first time it has ever been effective in this place.

How many worthy men might be helped along in their struggles and endeavors to build themselves up, thereby directly contributing to the prosperity of the town, if they were properly encouraged and supported by men of captal? Think of this, ye who are in easy circumstances, and experiment a little in that direction. Don't wrap yourself in the cloak of selfishness, calculating upon undue gains and profits that may be wrung from your less happily situated neighbors.

N. & G. Ensley, have erected a large depot near the Eel River track for the storing of agricultural implements. The have also construsted a derrick to lift the machines to and from the car, it being placed directly over the side track. This point is to be headquarters for a large territory, and all machines for a vast extent of country will be consigned to this place. If we had a few more such men, we would have more enterprise.

As we suppose every body read the interesting account in last week's paper, of items of early times, written by Maj. McFaden, of Logansport, and as we suppose you will want to hear about the Lost Indian, the Major has kindly furnished us with a copy of his last letter, which will be found on first page. He promises to write several articles for the COURIER, and we can assure him in advance that they will be read with great interest.

We believe that we can truthfully remark that our streets and alleys are in a more cleanly condition than ever known before. There are a few of them still encumbered with garbage debris, and unsightly wood piles, but this is more from carlessness than intention. Our sidewalks are in a better condition than usual, and the number has been largely increased during the year. We hope an effort will be made to keep the weeds down this summer, so that nought but a green carpet of grass may be seen along our sidewalks.

We have often wished we knew as much as our friend Charley, of the Press. We have often been lost in admiration at his matchless wisdom, and for hours we have sat and gazed upon him in silent wonder. We don't know of another person in the county that is as well posted as Charley—in his own opinion. He now says we know nothing about him or the great Roman Senator of the north-west, nor of things seen or unseen—in fact that we are a mere pigmy in his sight. We feel sorry for this, but we are trying to improve by his example, and we are progressing, for we talked a fellow to death last week.

MARRIED.—On Sunday May 13th., at the M. E. Parsonage, by Rev. Mr. Ervin, Mr. Henry Brandon and Miss Kittie Elwell, both of this city.

There is a neat little package on our table, and we have a suspicion that it contains bridal cake—a memento of the happy occasion. In this season of roses and blossoms when warm summer zephers fan the cheek, and sweet birds fill the air with their melody, little cupid sits aloft in his ethereal throne and hurls his dart with the utmost indifference. The little fiend is no respecter of persons, but sometimes he fails to make a center shot, and then there's a skeleton in the house. We knew a fellow at whom he once aimed, and hit him in the calf of the leg and made him a cripple for life, though it was a skillet that caused the wound. We believe our friends will reap a full measure of happiness, for all's well that ends well. We wish Hank and his charming bride many happy joyous occasions, and a smooth, easy prosperous life.

Swiss Bell Ringers Coming.

Robinson's Swiss Bell Ringers, with Field, the humorist, accompanied by their Silver Cornet Band and Orchestra, will give one grand entertainment at Ensley's Hall next Tuesday evening, the 22nd. inst. This troupe is to well known to need puffing, and we simply say that they have ten first-class artists Mr. James R. Field, the popular and well known comic "humorist," mimic and facial delineator, is with them. Prof. Busley, comic soloist, Mr. O. W. Artz, clarionette soloist, Mr. F. R. Artz flute soloists, Mr. C. W. Artz, violin soloist, Miss How, soprano vocalist and Miss Nessie Field, comic [illegible], are all with them. Admission 25c.; reserved seats 35c Seats may be secured at Houser's book store.

A red ribbon reform revolutionist, recently 'rived, received a reluctant reception, but resolutely remained to revive a reign of resistance to rum-drinking. Dr. Johnson is a young man, and posesses all the elements of a once successful bummer. He is a reformed rum-guzzler, as he says, and we have failed to hear anyone dispute it. His elegant phrases, such as "you bet," "brace up," "on it" &c., are hardly within the vocabulary of a refined lecturer, but then he claims to be no lecturer, and in this manner does away with the objection at one fell swoop. He is strictly an attorney, and a good one, too, because he says that generally the best of all professions, if at all dissipated, are victims to this growing evil. Had he failed at Waterloo success would have been assured here, but our enterprising neighbor must not lay the flattering unction to her soul, that she can put up a job on Auburn. We are mad because Mr. Johnsing did not come here first, and we wont take any red ribbon in ours. We stand with father Griswold, and need no ribbon to let the people know that we are for temperance. We two have stood like the rock of Gibralter for fifty years, while the waves of drunkenness and dissipation have lapped up their victims, and now they ask us to wear a red ribbon! Never, Mr Johnsing, never.

We can safely assert that D. Marshall's lung syrup is the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis all pulmonary complaints. Call and see your druggist and try a bottle. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

Buggies For Sale.

I am offering several new, well made buggies both double and single, at very reasonable rates. They are of my own manufacture, and warranted for two years. I will sell them on one year's time. Please call at my blacksmith shop and examine them. JAMES ANDERSON.

Decoration Day at Auburn.

Agreeable to announcement some of our citizens met at Gorden's Art Gallery on Saturday evening last, to organize for the observance of Decoration Day in Auburn, when G. W. Gorden was made President, and R. H. Weamer, Secretary.

The object of this meeting being stated by the chair, the following committees were chosen and confirmed:

COMMITTEES.

Committee on speaker—Tom. C. Mays E. D. Hartman and R. H. Weamer.

Committee on Finance—Joseph Rainier, M. L. Duck and C. Beugnot.

Committee on Music—Joe. McKay, M. F. Long and T. C. Mays.

Committee on Decoration and Flowers—Mr. T. C. Elson, Delmer Conger, Mrs. T. D. Gross, Mrs. E. D. Hartman, Miss Abbie Potter, Miss Josie Rush, Miss Frankie Ford, Miss Frakie Ryan and Miss Annie Rainier.

Committee of Arrangements—Capt. E. D. Hartman, T. B. Totten, C. M. Brown, Frank Culbertson, G. H. Hoffman, Cyrus Ollinger, H. Palmer and George Steele.

OFFICERS.

President of the Day—Dr. J. H. Ford. Chaplain—Rev. J. E. Ervin. Marshal—T. C. Mays; assistant Marshals—H. E. Altenburg and G. W. Gorden. Reader—W. H. McIntosh.

The first named parties on committees will act as chairman. Committees have authority to add such names as may be deemed necessary.

The citizens of DeKalb and surrounding counties are invited to participate in the exercises.

The Secretary is instructed to furnish the newspapers of the county with the proceedings of this meeting for publication.

The committees will meet at the dental rooms of Dr. Elson on Friday evening to perfect arrangements.

Adjourned.

G. W. GORDEN, Pres.
R. H WEAMER, Sec'y.

Last Friday night when the fire bell began to ring an old man came running up street, and inquired of a boy who he overtook, if that bell was ringing for fire. The boy looked up into the old man's face and said: "Ain't you old enough to know that that bell is ringing for water, there is enough fire down there, you old sap h——" The boy stopped to pick himself out of the ditch and the old man went on to the scene of conflagration.

Dissolution Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the co-partnership heretofore existing between M. F. Long and Enos Casebeer, has been dissolved by mutual consent. Mr. Long will continue the business, and settle the books of the firm.

M. F. LONG,
ENOS CASEBEER.

A TILT.

"It may be so, but I don't believe it."

"It's because you don't use your eyes; you're prejudiced."

"Perhaps I am."

"I know you are. It would be foolish to talk againit custom-made clothing. Those who prefer it and can afford it, have a right to it, but I won't listen to your slurs against 'ready-made;' my experience is all against you. I have bought ready-made of SAM, PETE & MAX, and found it to fit as nicely, last as long and look quite as well as custom work, and for much less money.

"You seem interested in the Star Clothing House."

"I am, but not in the sense you mean. I think that a house that has done so much to raise the tone of ready-made clothing business, and at the same time reduce the prices for the people deserves a good word."

"But you detract from the custom trade."

"Not a bit of it! It is not that I love Cæsar less, but Rome more! The truth is custom work has not become poorer, and gone down, but ready-made has become better and risen up! Now do you see it?,'

"I wouldn't acknowledge it if I did."

"Of course you wouldn't. Those beaten in argument seldom do. Good morning.

Its rules of business dealing with the people:

1.—ONE PRICE.
2.—CASH PAYMENT,
3.—A GUARANTEE.

MAY-DAY.

BY R. H. STODDARD.

If I were asked the season,
I could not tell to-day;
Should say it still was winter—
The calendar says May.

If this, indeed, be May-day,
I must be growing old;
For nothing I was used to Do I to-day behold.

On May-day in New England,
In that old town of ours,
We rose before the daybreak,
And went and gathered flowers.

If there are woods in Hingham
I have forgot; I know
That there were woods in Seekonk,
Some forty years ago.

And thither went the children,
For there the wild flowers grew;
They plucked them up by handfuls,
With fingers wet with dew;

And then in pretty baskets,
With little sprigs of green,
They placed them, and stole homeward,
And hoped they were not seen.

Along the roads and by-ways
The merry creatures crept,
And round their sweethearts' houses,
While still their sweethearts slept.

The baskets on their windows
They hung and stole away;
And no one knew who did it,
Or, knowing, none would say.

It spoiled her simple pleasure
If any maiden knew
Who sent her her May basket—
She had to guess out who.

Ah! those indeed were May-days!
But this—this dreary day—
The calendar's mistaken,
'Tis not the 1st of May!

Why, if it were, my lady,
I would have gone in time
And made you your May basket,
If only one of rhyme!

But I haven't done it, darling;
The words that I have sung
Are faded recollections
Of May when I was young.

THE CASE OF THE DOW TWINS.

"My notions about soul's influence on soul," said Dr. Richards, of Saturday Cove, to me one day last September, "are a little peculiar. I don't make a practice of giving 'em away to the folks around here. The Cove people hold that when a doctor gets beyond jalap and rhubarb, he's trespassing on the parson's property. Now, it's a long road from jalap to soul, but I don't see why one man mightn't travel as well as another. Will you oblige me with a clam?"

I obliged him with a clam. We were sitting together on the rock, fishing for tomcod. Saturday Cove is a small watering place a few miles below Belfast, on the west shore of Penobscot bay. It apparently derives its name from a belief generally entertained by the Covers that this spot was the final and crowning achievement of the Creator before resting on the seventh day. The Cove village consists of a hotel, two churches, several stores, and a graveyard containing former generations of Saturdarians. It is a favorite gibe among outsiders, who envy the placid quiet of the place, that if the population of the graveyard should be dug up and distributed through the village, and the present inhabitants laid away beneath the sod, there would be no perceptible diminution in the liveliness of the settlement. The Cove proper abounds with tomcod, which may be caught with clams.

"Yes," continued Dr. Richards, as he forced the barb of his jig-hook into the tender organism of the clam, "my theory is that a strong soul may crowd a weak soul out of the body which belongs to the weak soul, and operate through that body, even though miles away and involuntarily. I believe, moreover, that a man may have two souls, one of his own by right and the other an intruder. In fact, I know that this is so, and, it being so, what becomes of your moral responsibility? What, I ask, becomes of your moral responsibility?"

I replied that I could not imagine.

"Your doctrine of moral responsibility," said the Doctor sternly, as if it were my doctrine and I were responsible for moral responsibility, "isn't worth this tomcod," and he took a small fish off his hook and contemptuously tossed it back into the cove. "Did you ever hear of the case of the Dow twins?"

I had never heard of the case of the Dow twins.

"Well," resumed the Doctor, "they were born into the family of Hiram Dow, thirty years or more ago, in the red farm-house just over the hill back of us. My predecessor, old Dr. Gookin, superintended their birth, and has often told me the circumstances. The Dow twins came into the world bound back to back by a fleshy ligature which extended half the length of the spinal processes. They would probably have traveled through life in intimate juxtaposition had the matter depended on your great city physicians—your surgeons who were afraid to disconnect Chang and Eng, and who discussed the operation till the poor fellows died without parting company. Old Dr. Gookin, however, who hadn't attempted anything for years in the surgical line, more than to pull a tooth or to cut out an occasional wen, calmly went to work and sharpened up his rusty old operating knife and slashed and gashed the twins apart before they had been three hours breathing. This promptitude of Gookin's saved the Dow twins a good deal of inconvenience."

"I should think so!"

"And yet," added the Doctor, reflectively, "perhaps it might have been better for 'em both if they hadn't been separated. Better for Jehiel, especially, since he wouldn't have been put in a false position. Then, on the other hand, my theory would have lacked the confirmation of an illustrative example. Do you want the story?"

"By all means."

"Well, Jacob and Jehiel grew up healthy, strapping boys, like as two peas physically, but otherwise very unlike. Jehiel was all Dow—slow, slow-witted, melancholy inclined, and disposed to respect the ten commandments. Jake, he had his mother's git-up-and-git—she was a Fox of Fox island—and was into mischief from the time he was tall enough to poke burdock burs down his grandmother's back. Dr. Gookin watched the development of the twins with great interest. He used to say there was an invisible nerve telegraph between Jake and Jehiel. At any rate Jehiel was accustomed to act very quietly whenever Jacob was up to any of his pranks. One night, for instance, when Jake was off robbing a hen-roost, Jehiel sat up in bed in his sleep and crowed like a frightened cock until the whole family was aroused.

"I came here and opened my office about ten years ago. At that time Jehiel had grown into a steady, tolerably industrious young man, prominent in the Congregational Church, and so sober and decorous that the village people had trusted him with the driving of the town hearse. When I first knew him he was courting a young woman by the name of Giles, who lived about seven miles back in the country. Jehiel was a tin knocker by trade, and a more pious, respectable, reliable tin knocker you never saw.

"Jake had turned out very differently. By the time of Sumter he had made Saturday Cove too hot to hold him, and everybody, including his twin Jehiel, was glad when he enlisted in a Maine regiment. I never saw Jake in my life, for I came here after he had departed, but I have a pretty good notion of what a reckless, loud-mouthed, harum-scarum reprobate he must have been. After the war he drifted into the Western country, and we heard of him occasionally, first, as a steamboat gunner at St. Louis, then in jail at Jefferson for swindling a blind Dutchman, then as a gambler and rough in Cheyenne, and finally as a dead beat in 'Frisco. You could tell pretty well when Jake was in deviltry by watching the actions of Jehiel. At such times Jehiel was restless, knocked tin with an uneasy impatience that wasn't habitual with him, was as mum and glum at prayer-meeting as the worst sinner in Saturday Cove, and evidently had to struggle hard to be good. It seemed as if Dr. Gookin's knife, which cut the physical twins apart, had been unable to dissever the physical twins, and that some part of Jake's soul lingered at times in Jehiel. Whether Jehiel's piety ever influenced Jacob, I am unable to say.

"The most singular thing of all was in regard to Jehiel's attentions to the young woman named Giles. She was a sober, demure, church-going person, whom Jacob had never been able to endure, but who, as everybody said, would make an excellent helpmate for Jehiel. He seemed to care a good deal for her in his steady, slow way, and made a point twice a week of driving over to bring her to prayer-meeting at the Cove. But when one of his odd spells was on him he forsook her altogether, and weeks would go by, to her great distress, without his appearing at the Giles gate. As Jake went from bad to worse these periods of indifference became more frequent and prolonged, and occasioned the young woman named Giles much misery and a good many tears.

"One fine afternoon, in the summer of 1871, Jacob Dow, as we afterwards learned, was shot through the heart by a Mexican in a drunken row at San Diego. He sprung high into the air and fell upon his face, and when they laid him away a good Catholic priest said mass for the repose of his soul.

"That same afternoon, as it happened, old Dr. Gookin was to have been buried in the graveyard yonder. He had died a day or two before at an extreme age, but in the full possession of his faculties, but one of the last remarks he made was to express regret that he would be unable to follow the career of the Dow twins any further.

"It became Jehiel's melancholy duty to harness up his hearse on account of old Dr. Gookin's funeral, and, as he dusted the plumes and polished the ebony panels of the vehicle, his thoughts naturally recurred to the great service which that excellent physician had rendered him in early youth. Then he thought of his twin brother Jacob, and wondered where he was and how he prospered. Then his eyes wandered over the hearse, and he felt a dull pride in its creditable appearance. It looked so bright and shiny in the sun that he resolved, as it still wanted a couple of hours of the time appointed for the funeral, to drive it over to the Giles farm and fetch his sweetheart to the village on the box with him. The young woman named Giles had frequently ridden with Jehiel on the hearse, her demure features and sober apparel detracting nothing from the respectable solemnity of the equipage.

"Jehiel drove up in state to the door of his betrothed, and she, not at all reluctant to enjoy the mild excitement of a funeral, mounted to the box and settled herself comfortably beside him. Then they started for Saturday Cove, and jogged along on the hearse, discoursing affectionately as they went.

"Miss Giles affirms that it was at the third apple tree next the stone wall of Hosea Getchell's orchard, just opposite the bars leading to Mr. Lord's private road, that a sudden and most extraordinary change came over Jehiel. He jumped, she says, high into the air and landed sprawling in the sandy road alongside the hearse, yelling so hideously that it was with difficulty that she held the frightened horses. Picking himself up and uttering a round oath (something that had never before passed the virtuous lips of Jehiel) he turned his attention to the horses, kicking and beating them until they stood quiet. He next proceeded to cut and trim a willow switch at the roadside, and, pulling his decent silk hat down over one eye, and darting from the other a surly glance at the astonished Miss Giles, he climbed to his seat on the hearse.

"'Jehiel Dow!' said she, 'what does this mean?'

"'It means!' he replied, giving the off horse a vicious cut with his switch, 'that I have been goin' slow these thirty year, and now I'm goin' to put a little ginger in my gait. Gelang!'

"The hearse horses jumped under the unaccustomed lash and broke into a gallop. Jehiel applied the switch again and again, and the dismal vehicle was soon bumping over the road at a tremendous pace, Jehiel shouting all the time like a circus-rider, and Miss Giles clinging to his side in an agony of terror. The people in the farm-houses along the way rushed to doors and windows and gazed in amazement at the unprecedented spectacle. Jehiel had a word for each—a shout of derision for one, a blast of blasphemy for another, and an invitation to ride for a third—but he reined in for nobody, and in a twinkling the five miles between Hosea Getchell's farm at Duck Trap and the village at Saturday Cove had been accomplished. I think I am safe in saying that never before did hearse rattle over five miles of hard road so rapidly.

"'O, Jehiel, Jehiel!' said Miss Giles, as the hearse entered the village 'are you took crazy of a sudden?'

"'No,' said Jehiel, curtly, 'but my eyes are open now. Gelang you beasts. You get out here. I'm going to Belfast.'

"'But Jehiel, dear,' she protested with many sobs, 'remember Dr. Gookin.'

"'Dang Gookin!' said Jehiel.

"'And for my sake,' she continued. 'Dear Jehiel, for my sake.'

"'Dang you, too,' said Jehiel.

"Drawing up his team in magnificent style before the village hotel, he compelled the weeping Miss Giles to alight, and then, with an admirable imitation of the war-whoop of a Sioux brave, started his melancholy vehicle for Belfast, and was gone in a flash, leaving the entire population of Saturday Cove in a state of bewilderment that approached coma.

"The remains of the worthy Dr. Gookin were borne to the grave-yard that afternoon upon the shoulders of half a dozen of the stoutest farmers in the neighborhood. Jehiel came home long after midnight, uproariously intoxicated. The revolution in his character had been as complete as it was sudden. From the moment of Jacob's death he was a dissipated, dishonest scoundrel, the scandal of Saturday Cove, and the terror of quiet, respectable folks for miles around. After that day he could never be persuaded to speak to or even recognize the young woman named Giles. She, to her credit, I think, still remains in spinsterhood, faithful to the memory of the lost Jehiel. His downward course was rapid. He gambled, drank, quarreled, and stole; and he is now in State prison at Thomaston, serving out a sentence for an attempt to rob the Northport Bank. Miss Giles goes down every year in the hopes that he will see her, but he always refuses. He is in for ten years."

"And he deserves all of it," I ventured to remark.

"See here," said Dr. Richards, turning suddenly and looking me square in the face. "Do you think of what you are saying? Now I hold that he is as innocent as you or I. I believe that the souls of the twins were bound by a bond which Dr. Gookin's knife could not dissect. When Jacob died, his soul, with all its depravity, returned to its twin soul in Jehiel's body. Being stronger than the Jehiel soul, it mastered and overwhelmed it. Poor Jehiel is not responsible; he is suffering the penalty of a crime that was purely Jake's."

My friend spoke with a good deal of earnestness and some heat, and, concluding that Jehiel's innocence was a hobby of his, I did not press the discussion. That evening, in conversation with the village clergyman, I remarked:

"That was a very singular case, that of the Dow twins."

"Ah!" said the parson, "you have heard the story. Which way did the Doctor end it?"

"Why, with Jehiel in jail, of course. What do you mean?"

"Nothing," replied the parson, with a faint smile. "Sometimes, when he feels well disposed toward humanity, he makes Jehiel's soul take possession of Jacob and transform him into a pious, respectable Christian. In his pessimistic moods the story runs as you heard it. So this is one of his Jacob days! He should take a little quinine."—New York Sun.

FASHION'S VAGARIES.

In linen collars the Byron is the most worn.

Satin and brocaded ribbons are the most fashionable.

White gloves of undressed kid are used for evening wear.

Organdy muslins in plain tints, covered with bright flowers, are very pretty.

Dark hair should be worn smoother than fair hair.

Small crinoline will be in favor during the summer.

Ribbons are worn everywhere, even tied on the ears.

Brocades are rather smaller than usual, and are in great demand for polonaises and over-dresses.

A few ladies of fashion, and of sense, are having their walking suits made with a single skirt, short enough to escape the ground, and with the Breton jacket.

Both box and side pleatings still retain favor, but they are now placed upon skirts in such a way that fringes and galloons may be intermixed with excellent effect.

All of the latest imported dresses come with a cravat attached, either of the same material or color as the material or some contrasting color. They are made of double-silk, often having a different colored facing.

Silk bonnets are being sought after as an intermediate between the felt and chip. There are also bonnets of satin, made over ample frames, over which the material is drawn so tightly as to be as smooth as kid.

A novel lace scarf-pin for a lady is of rolled gold. The back-ground is of dead gold, upon which is the first bar of the ballad "Ever of Thee," set to music. The bar and notes are of polished gold, and the effect is very pretty.

Tunic overdresses are said to be going out altogether, the long princesse taking the place of dresses cut in several pieces. The princesse is sometimes trimmed simply around the bottom and arranged to drape a little in the back under bows of ribbon; passementerie trimmings or scarfs are draped over it.

A beautiful shade of "grosseille" is among the fashionable shades; it mixes well with peach blossom. Old gold, a shade of yellow bordering on bronze, is generally mixed with light pink, light blue and shades of yellow. Maroon is a favorite shade, used with light green or soft pink; it is very effective in satin.

White is more used than colors for evening dresses; white satin with white chambery gauze, white silk and white crepe de chine; next to this black has become very fashionable. A recent ball dress of black satin covered with scarfs of lace embroidered in gold-floss flowers, and another in black with the overdress sparkling with fine cut jet, were both finished by the addition of the long undressed kid glove reaching almost to the elbow, and laced inside the arm to give it the close fit requisite.

A SONG OF THE SEASONS.

BY AUSTIN DOBSON.

When Spring comes laughing
By vale and hill,
By wind-flower walking
And daffodil—
Sing stars of morning,
Sing morning skies,
Sing blue of speedwell
And my Love's eyes.

When Summer cometh,
Full-leaved and strong,
And gay birds gossip
The orchard long—
Sing hid sweet honey
That no bee sips,
Sing red, red roses,
And my Love's lips.

When the Autumn scatters
The leaves again,
And piled sheaves bury
The wide-wheeled wain—
Sing flutes of harvest
Where men rejoice,
Sing rounds of reapers
And my Love's voice.

But when comes Winter
With hail and storm,
With red fire roaring
And ingle warm—
Sing first sad going
Of friends that part;
Then sing glad meeting
And my Love's heart.

PITH AND POINT.

The most fashionable spring suits for men are made of two-ply carpets.

Man smokes because a cigar makes him look wise when he hasn't anything to say.

What kin is that child to its own father who is not its father's own son? His daughter.

Which is the middle letter of the alphabet? P—The words "The alphabet" are meant.

What is that which you and every living person has seen, but can never see again? Yesterday.

Why should turtles be more pitied than any other animal? Because theirs is a very hard case.

Why is a congreve-box without the matches superior to any other box? Because it is matchless.

Why are ships frequently uncomfortable? Because they are often put about, and sometimes get into straits.

"Mamma, what are twins made for?" Precocious older brother, quickly, "So that cannibals may eat philopenas."

Turn your ear toward any two women conversing together just now, and you will find the subject to be the spring fashions.

Grapple ever with opportunity; and, as you don't know when opportunity will come along, keep your grappling-irons always ready.

What is the difference between a husbandman and a seamstress? The one gathers what he sows, and the other sews what she gathers.

What is the difference between a butcher and a fashionably attired young lady? The one kills to dress, and the other dresses to kill.

"How many daughters have you?" said one gentleman to another. He replied, "Six; and each daughter has a brother." How many children had he? Seven.

Victor Hugo thinks the balance of the world would return to heathenism if Paris should be destroyed. Yes, what would this world have known about striped stockings but for Paris?

There seems to be a general feeling that when there is no light in the entry a man ought to be excused for kissing his wife when she lets him in, provided he thinks it is the chambermaid.

An Eastern man, in writing to his friends of his marriage in California, thus tenderly describes his bride: "She has a head as red as a woodpecker's, and owns sheep until you can't rest."

Very nice ornaments can be made by cutting apples into quarters, running a string through them, and hanging the string at a front window. They are equal to a photograph hung to the sash.

In a few short weeks the spoony youths and sentimental maidens will be enjoying the ecstatic bliss, known only to youth and innocence, of chewing different ends of the same piece of gum across front-yard gates.

Russia binds herself not to fight for the acquisition of territory, and Turkey binds herself not to interfere with neighboring powers so long as they remain neutral, and we shall soon know whether Turkey or Russia binding is the most reliable.

It never pays to fret and growl
When fortune seems our foe;
The better bred will push ahead
And strike the heavier blow.
For luck is work,
And those who shirk
Should not lament their doom,
But yield the play,
And clear the way,
That better men have room.

Talk about civilization! The Detroit Tribune says: "They have a bank in Deadwood. The paying teller wears a red shirt and sits with his boots upon the counter, and the President, when he isn't cutting coupons with a bowie knife, amuses himself with draw poker with a director or two in the back room, using the bank's funds in the pool."

Lax Discipline.

During the war, a number of old pensioners (as in the present day) were enrolled for home service. One of them was on guard at Chatham, and, forgetting the discipline of his younger days, sat down on a stone when he was tired. A passer-by, scandalised by this breach of duty, accosted the free-and-easy soldier, saying, "Pray, friend, who or what may you be?" "I am a kind of a sort of a sentry," replied the pensioner; "and, since I have answered your question, pray who are you?" "I am a kind of a sort of a General," rejoined the gentleman. "Oh!" cried the veteran, springing to his feet, "then I suppose I must give you a kind of a sort of a salute." And he presented arms accordingly.

Death of an English Giant.

Benjamin Daniels, a farmer, recently died at Scratby, England. Daniels is said to be last of the East Anglia giants. His height was six feet six inches. He weighed twenty-four stone, and measured twenty inches from shoulder to shoulder across the back. He has been known to carry four bushels of wheat under each arm at one time, and, when in great haste to have his farm work done, horses being much engaged, to harness himself to a harrow and perform the work of an animal.

"The Age of Reason."

The boy that went to the mill on horseback, carrying the grist in one end of the bag and a stone in the other, when reproved by the miller and told to divide the grist, replied that his father and grandfather had carried it that way, and he, being no better than they, should continue to do as they did. Similar, or equally as absurd, reasons are accounted as sufficient by [illegible] demning Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines, even though there is overwhelming proof that they possess the merit claimed for them. For many years the Golden Medical Discovery has been recognized as the leading liver and blood medicine in the market. Each year has brought an increase in its sale, and it is now used throughout the civilized world. Thousands of unsolicited testimonials are on file in the Doctor's office, attesting its efficacy in overcoming aggravated coughs, colds, throat and lung affections, also scrofula, tumors, ulcers, and skin diseases. The Best Invigorant.

Of failing energy, that to which the fagged-out man of business, the brain-fatigued author, the tired advocate or the weary artisan can resort with the greatest certainty that it will [illegible] his overwrought powers, is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a most genial tonic cordial, as well as a leading remedy for disorders of the stomach, liver, bowels and urinary organs, and a means of eradicating and preventing intermittent and remittent fevers. It not only enriches the blood and creates a new fund of energy in the system, but it has the effect of expelling impurities from the life-current which beget disease. The injurious influences of abrupt changes of temperature, of an unwholesome climate and injurious diet, are counteracted by it, and it promotes digestion, appetite and sound repose. Give it a trial and be convinced.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT

Constitutional Tendencies.—The way in which different individuals are affected by the same causes of disease depends upon the constitution and temperament. Some persons, for instance, are prone to fevers, some to bilious attacks, and others to nervous affections. In all cases where a peculiar susceptibility to any variety of disease exists, the toning, regulating and purifying operation of Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient will be found the surest safeguard against an attack. Individuals of a bilious and constipated habit, or subject to dyspepsia, or whose nerves are easily excited, should frequently resort to this refreshing saline corrective, especially in warm weather. It is no less potent as a preventive than as a remedy.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

RECOLLECT the mange! Wurtzels for the cows next winter.

ALL colts should be broken to the halter while following their mother.

HOE the cabbage while the dew is on, but never hoe beans while they are wet.

ALL soils, whether wet or dry, are made more productive by under-drains.

MOST seeds will germinate sooner by being stirred in scalding water for a minute or two. The smaller ones the least time.

INSECTS must now be fought. The tent-caterpillar, canker-worms, bark-lice, borers, etc., must be watched and destroyed.

THOSE who have evergreen trees upon their lawns must be careful to rake off the pine leaves from the grass or they will kill out all the grass, as such leaves appear to be poison even to blue grass.

NOW AT the commencement of the campaign recollect it is easier to kill twenty weeds when they first show themselves than one when it is six weeks old. Let the work be for extermination.

A MAN cannot produce milk profitably without feeding his cows liberally with good, sound, highly nutritious food. A cow poorly fed and cared for only gives watery milk, almost worthless for table or butter.

WATER that runs off the surface carries off much of the fertility of the soil. But water filtered through the soil to an under-drain takes none of the fertility, but leaves in the soil the rich gases which are in rain or snow water.

THE cotton crop of Georgia, the heaviest ever raised, was worth only $30,000,000, while the butter of New York (being only one of the many products of that State) is worth $60,000,000 per year. And the product of all the mines in California, gold, silver, lead, quicksilver, etc., etc., is worth only $40,000,000 per year. Can there be a more thorough illustration of the importance of the dairy?

A GOOD HOG.—Prof. Davis, of New York, gives his idea of what a hog should be, as follows: "In my opinion the most essential point in a hog, whatever the breed may be, is great width across the shoulders, back and hips; the next is depth, with legs wide apart, giving ample space for heart, lungs and stomach, thus giving healthy animals with good digestive powers. Add to these the well-developed ham included under the first part; short nose, small ear, fine limbs and a long, slim tail, and, I care not what the breed is, you will have a first-class hog. As to whether a large or small hog is the best, I should be inclined to prefer a medium-sized one. One that will dress from 350 to 450 pounds at 9 months of age, when well fed, I should consider the most profitable."

IN A NUTSHELL.—Some men have neither the time nor inclination to read long articles on husbandry. To accommodate such the Knoxville Journal, in the following short paragraph, embodies a whole volume in a nutshell: "Farmers, would you not do well, at least those of you who have only small farms, to sow less wheat and give more attention to some other things. Raise more grass, save your corn-fodder, keep more cows, more poultry. Plant an acre of onions, an acre of beans, two acres of potatoes. Have none but the best cows, hogs and sheep; and give them better shelter and care. Put your surplus acres in grass, and you will have more time to devote to your small crop and your stock. Thus vary your industries, and a failure of wheat crop, or any other crop, will not be so serious a matter."

HOW TO PLANT A HEDGE.—In planting a hedge plow your hedge site so as to make the dead furrow where your hedge will be; three or four rounds will be sufficient. Run a subsoil or a bull-tongue plow in the furrow, so as to thoroughly loosen the ground to the depth of a foot or more; plow the land again, this time throwing a back furrow where the dead furrow was; then harrow and stretch your line, and plant with a dibble. A pointed stick that will make a hole ten or twelve inches deep, and big enough to take the plant, will do. Put the plants at least three inches deeper than they stood in the seed row; tramp the ground on each side of the hedge, and mulch if possible, or else cultivate sufficient to keep down the weeds. In planting, size the plants and cut off the rootlets—six inches of a root is as good as a greater length, and is much easier to get into the ground to a proper depth.

TRAINING FRUIT TREES.—Nurserymen seldom fail to give instruction as to the setting and transplanting of trees; but few of them, however, give instruction as to the training of them after they are growing. The season is now at hand for training fruit trees, and very many farmers with young orchards—say from three to eight years old—have many trees with all their branches growing together in a mass, yet not too many if they could be separated. It would be a troublesome task to separate them by driving stakes around the tree and tying the branches to them as directed for a leaning tree. Take some sound, unbroken or unmashed corn stocks, cut them to a V shape, of any desirable length, slightly notch the pith of the stalk, and place it between the branches you wish to separate. You may use them from six inches to two feet long, and convert an unsightly mass of a tree into a beautiful open top, admitting light and air. The pith of the corn stalk will prevent chafing. Let them remain, as they will not injure the tree. You may use as many as necessary to finish the job.—Rural World.

About the House.

CUT flowers may be kept for a week or more by placing them in camphor water.

TREATMENT for paint brushes, to keep them from getting hard and matted together: Soak in linseed oil, and wash off in soapy water.

PROCESS for silvering glass: A solution of nitrate of silver and Rochelle salts is applied to the glass, a film of metallic silver being deposited.

KITCHEN PEPPER.—Mix in the finest powder an ounce each of ginger, cinnamon, black pepper; of nutmeg and allspice, a half ounce each; ten cloves and six ounces salt. Keep in a bottle; it is an agreeable addition to brown sauces, soups or stews.

STUFFING FOR POULTRY OR FISH.—One cup of bread crumbs, one egg, one teacupful mashed potatoes, butter size of an egg, savory, sage, pepper and salt. The above, with the addition of a chopped onion, is excellent for goose, duck or wild meat of any kind.

PRESSED OR JELLIED MEAT.—Take the lean bits and a sparerib, cook with a chicken until tender, season and chop fine, pack and put a plate over it with weight to press. Molded in some fancy form, it makes a dish ornamental as well as useful for a grange feast.—Farmer's Friend.

WARTS.—Frequently apply muriatic acid to the wart only, it will soon disappear. In the absence of this, scrape enough soap from a common bar to make a poultice and wear at night, and the wart will eventually dissolve. The same is true of corns.

AMBROSIA is made by placing upon a glass stand, or other deep vessel, alternate layers of grated cocoanut, oranges peeled and sliced round, and a pineapple sliced thin. Begin with the oranges, and use cocoanut last, spreading between each layer sifted loaf sugar. Sweeten the cocoanut milk and pour over it.

CUCUMBERS in the early part of July are a luxury, and eaten in moderation are not unwholesome. They should always be picked early in the morning, when the dew is on them. Gathered later in the day, under a broiling sun, they are wholly unfit to eat. This is no doubt one reason why they are considered unwholesome by many persons.

A GOOD way to start slips of plants is to get an old glass fruit jar, sift nice mellow earth in it till it is two or three inches deep, or till it touches the end of the slip, then pour water over it till it is full. Set the jar where it will not be moved often. After the roots start sift more earth over, fill again with water, if needed, and so on till it is full and filled with roots, then carefully break the glass off and transplant to a pot, and you will have no trouble in starting it.

FLIES (TO DESTROY).—The only thing that keeps down the plague of flies is to shut up the room for an hour or two, when the flies will generally fly to the window; then, with a small bellows full of insect powder, carefully dust every accessible place. In a short time the flies become torpid, and may be swept up in a dust-pan and burnt. They should be killed at once, for they revive very quickly if the fresh air gets at them. If this is done about once a week it certainly reduces, though nothing will entirely get rid of, the nuisance.

LEG ACHE.—A "Relieved Mother" tells another mother how to relieve this really distressing pain: "When one of the small fry makes night hideous with the cries of "leg ache," let her rise, wring a common towel out of cool water, wrap it around the offending member its whole length, and instantly cover it with flannel. A flannel skirt is usually the most convenient article, and it should be thoroughly wrapped around and pinned or tied to its place. The mother can then return to her bed, and the patient—after one gasp—will howl no more."

Probable Effects of the War.

Though our commercial relations with the two belligerents are comparatively insignificant, the clash of arms in the East cannot but have an immediate and considerable bearing upon American commerce. Of late years Russia, and Turkey and her appanages, have furnished England and the Continent—principally England—with an average yearly supply of grain, amounting in the aggregate to about 45,000,000 bushels. This supply will not only be cut off, but the two belligerents, with probably together not less than 1,500,000 men in the field to feed, will be constantly in the market as buyers of grain and provisions.

Any grain deficiency in Europe, arising from war or other causes, must be substantially supplied from the United States. Owing to a perfected system of cheap rail and water transportation from the grain-growing districts of the West to the Atlantic seaboard, American grain has of late years steadily crowded Russian cereals from British markets. In the present instance no other grain-growing country can successfully compete with us in supplying an extraordinary demand for breadstuffs for military consumption. This enlarged export of grain and provisions promises more money to our agricultural classes, increased activity to railroad business, and a probable revival to some other branches of industry.

The sending abroad of dressed meat and live stock, which has grown so rapidly during the last eighteen months, will be increased by the Turkish-Russian war. As yet there is no demand for fresh beef upon the Continent, but it is understood that several speculators are now abroad with the intention of introducing it; and we have heard that the German steamers will soon be fitted up with refrigerators for the export of fresh beef, the same as the English steamers now are. The exportation of fresh meat from this country is likely soon to become a great feature of our international trade. —New York Sun.

Tweed Makes Another Statement.

William M. Tweed has supplemented his confession with additional revelations touching the operations of the ring of which he was the chief. The statement, which is in the hands of the Attorney General of New York, is a very lengthy one. It gives the exact narrative of how the ring was formed. The statements begin with the manner in which Tweed, John T. Hoffman, George W. McLean and Connolly, back in 1865 or 1866, were accustomed to meet daily at lunch in a little room attached to the kitchen of the old Court House to discuss political matters. This coterie finally dissolved, and then the corrupt ring was formed, consisting of Tweed, Connolly, Sweeney, Hall and Woodward, with other minor allies, which also met daily in the same room, and later in Tweed's office in Duane street.

The statement also shows in detail the manner in which bills were doctored by the ring after coming from the Board of Supervisors, and afterward from the Board of Audit, already fraudulent in many of the items. New charges would be interlined between original items, and the totals changed to correspond, so that a bill of $100,000, as certified to by the clerk and the boards named, would be sent to Auditor Watson raised to $400,000 or $500,000, and this duly certified to by him.

Devens Described by Mary Clemmer.

On the whole, the most formidable-looking member of this official company is called the handsomest man in the Cabinet—the new Attorney General, Charles Devens, of Massachusetts. His hair has receded from the top of his head, leaving a superb dome of brow unrelieved. The barber has cut his side-locks in a perfectly straight line down his temples, and he sports a military mustache and beard as pugnacious and demonstrative as Kaiser William's. His nose is well cut, but its bridge is "prodigious"; so are his ears, though neither are too large for the man himself, who looks like an Emperor. His eyes are dark, full and powerful, with an expression in them that is half fastidiousness and half discontent. I fancy that there are very few things in this world that would or could come up to this gentleman's standard of perfection. I contemplate his countenance, and cease to wonder that he never married. He is over six feet high, of splendid proportions, and wears a tall, stiff, aggressive collar, which heightens the grandeur of his appearance. He has the grand manner—is stately, solemn, slow. Has he not been a Judge on the Supreme bench for twelve years? He is reported to have said to a visitor: "You see in me the biggest fool in Massachusetts. I left a place that suited me exactly for one that does not suit me at all." The magnificence of a Massachusetts gentleman's manner I have never seen equaled except by the manner of a Virginia gentleman who was sure he was descended from Pocahontas. The antipodes in everything else, these two States lead the Union in deportment. The Randolph and the Winthrop may hate each other; but they are twins in pride of birth and in a consciousness of their own importance.—The Independent.

Buried Alive.

At Leu Saint Bemy, in Belgium, an appalling sensation has lately occurred. A young man of 18 years, who was believed to be dead, was placed in a coffin and buried. A great number of mourners accompanies the funeral. One of them pronounced a eulogium upon the character of the deceased, the usual prayers were recited and the coffin was lowered into the grave. The grave-diggers had begun to fill it in with clay, when they heard several knocks given from within the coffin. Terrified, they ran to call the curate, and informed the Mayor, in the presence of both of which personages the coffin was opened. The unfortunate youth, who had been buried alive while in a state of lethargy, had made desperate efforts to break open the lid of the coffin, but uselessly, and had died of asphyxia.

An Infant Murderer.

Boston has still another sensation. What does the reader think of a deliberate murder committed by a boy four and a half years old? The story briefly is that a lad named Cox, aged six and a half years, was playing with Kimball, a little over four years, and there were several children about. Kimball, getting angry about something, went into the house, procured his father's revolver, came back, and, cocking the weapon, fired it directly at young Cox's head. The victim of this extraordinary proceeding died in about three hours. Both boys belong to perfectly respectable families. The moral of the matter is that parents should be careful how they leave loaded revolvers where children can convert them into playthings or into instruments for the gratification of childish passion.

Diamond Digging.

The South African diamond fields are seven days hard travel from the coast. Reaching them, you find a city of 40,000 people in a desert. The buildings are all one story in height, some of canvas, others of iron or wood, and a few of brick. Not a tree is to be seen. On the outskirts of the town are the huts of the Hottentots and wagons which serve as houses for the diggers. There are five churches, a Jewish synagogue, two theaters, and a skating rink. Pianos are in many of the houses; dress suits and other requirements of fashionable life are insisted on. Digging for diamonds is very expensive, yet two-thirds of the diggers have realized moderate fortunes.

The Difference.

Can any one tell why it is that the soul of a young and pretty woman is more dear to the average deacon than that of a squint-eyed woman with a wart on her nose? When we have seen a young and pretty woman go up to the altar, we have noticed half a dozen deacons knock their heads together in their eagerness to whisper consolation to her bruised spirit. But when the squint-eyed woman knelt down only one deacon went near her, and he merely touched her on the shoulder and said, "Pray fervently, sister, and all will be well."—Evolution.

Lucus a Non.

Col. Boudinot thinks that the Indian peace policy of the Government may possibly mean, as it has done before, war on the hostile and peace and preying on the friendly Indians. He says: "I was riding with Gov. Garland once, and noticed that he frequently addressed his mule as 'Blaze.' Not perceiving a white spot on the animal's forehead, I asked why he had given so inappropriate a name to his beast. He replied: 'Because he hasn't got any blaze.' Perhaps the peace policy is named such for a like good reason."

The Beauty of a Sister's Love.

A fellow never appreciates the tender beauty of a sister's love half so much as when he makes her get out of the big rocking chair, and let him have the morning paper, while she goes off and leans against the end of the bureau and feeds her starving intellect on the household recipes at the back of Jayne's family almanac. A brother's love is like pure gold. It's dreadfully hard to find, and, when you find it, it's apt to be pyrites.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

THE gourmet talks eloquently about truffled quails, pate de foie gras and other such delicacies. Pin him down though, and you'll find he admits the supreme importance of good bread, biscuit, rolls, etc. Here all agree on the basis of true gastronomy. To be sure of the most delicious things baked from flour use DOOLEY'S YEAST POWDER.

PREMATURE loss of the hair, which is so common nowadays, may be entirely prevented by the use of BURNETT'S COCOAINE.

TERRY'S SALICYLIC SOAP

(PATENT APPLIED FOR)

A Perfect Anti-Septic and Disinfectant Bath and Toilet Soap.

Takes the Place of all other Soaps for Daily use in the Family.

Manufactured from the purest vegetable Oils with the addition of that greatest known Anti-Septic and disinfectant

SALICYLIC ACID,

Making the most healthful, the most perfect, and the most economical Bath and Toilet Soap ever offered to the public.

Indorsed by the fue medical profession and attested by thousands.

AS THE GREAT PREVENTIVE

In all cases of blood poisoning whether arising from malarial or miasmatic exhalations, defective sewerage, or any other causes.

Its constant use prevents the contracting of contageous diseases, typhoid, scarlet and all malarial fevers. It is invaluable, and should be used in all districts where fever and ague prevails as it is the greatest known preventive fo that disease. It is of immense value in the cure of all skin disease; a trial proves it, and its use prevents contracting them. It is a special boon to school children who are constantly exposed. It is the most healthful bath soap for infants, worth its weight in gold in the nursery. It is no more expensive than other toilet soaps of good quality It goes further and its great superiority is bringing it into universal use. It has no disagreeable odor and is absolutely pure.

Extensively used in hospitals and sick rooms by order of physicians.

For sale by all druggists and grocers. Sample box containing three cakes sent post paid on receipt of 75 cents. Liberal terms to the trade.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but natural that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

In the Sweet By-and-By.

Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touaist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine" It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains, Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. With the Tourists, the San Juan Guide keeps fitting company, and the two publications are mailed free to all writing for one or both to T. J. ANDERSON, Topka K.

MR. SMITH'S BOY.

His Startling Statement Concerning His Family.

A family named Smith has recently moved to Germantown, and Mr. Brown's boy, on Saturday, leaned over the fence and gave to our reporter his impressions of Mr. Smith's boy a lad about 14 years old.

"Yes, me and him are right well acquainted now; he knows more'n I do, and he's had more experience. Bill says his father used to be a robber (Smith, by the way, is a deacon in the Presbyterian church, and a very excellent lawyer), and that he has ten million dollars in gold buried in his cellar, along with a whole lot of human bones, people he's killed. And he says his father is a conjurer, and that he makes all the earthquakes that happen anywhere in the world; the old man'll come home at night, after there's been an earthquake, all covered with sweat, and so tired he kin hardly stand. Bill says it's such hard work.

"And Bill told me that once when a man came around there trying to sell lightning rods, his father got mad and et him right up, and he takes bites out of everybody he comes across. That's what Bill tells me; that's all I know about it. And he told me that once he used to have a dog, one of those little kind of dogs, and he was flying his kite, and, just for fun, he tied the kite-string onto his dog's tail And then the wind struck her, and his dog went a boomin' down street, with his hind legs in the air, for about a mile, when the kite of a sudden began to go up, and in about a minuet the dog was fifteen miles high, and commanding a view of California and Egypt, and Oshkosh, I think Bill said. He came down anyhow, I know, in Brazill, and Bill said he swum home all the way in the Atlantic ocean, and when he landed his legs were all nibled off by the sharks.

"I wish father'd buy me a dog, so's I could send him up that way, but I never have any luck. Bill said that where they used to live, he went out on the roof one day to fly his kite, and he got on top of the chimbly [illegible] plenty of room, and, while he was sitting there, thinkin' about 'nothin', the old man put a keg of powder down below of the fire-place, to clean the soot out of the chimbly; and when he touched her off, Bill was blowed over agin the Baptist church steeple, and he landed on the weather-cock, with his pants torn, and they couldn't get him down for three days; so he hung there, going round and round with the wind, and he lived by eating the crows that came and sat on him, because they thought he was sheet iron and put there on purpose.

"He's had more fun than enough. He was telling me the other day about a sausagestuffer his brother invented. It was a kind of a machine that works with a treaddle; and Bill said that the way they did in the fall was to fix it on a hog's back, and connect the treadle with a string, and then the hog'd work the treadle' and keep on running it up and down, until the machine cut the hog all up fine, and shoved the meat into the skins. Bill said his brother called it 'every hog its own stuffer,' and it worked splendid. But I do no; 'pears to me's if there could be no machine like that. But, anyway, Bill said so.

"And he told me about an uncle of his out in Australia, who was et by a big oyster once, and when he got inside he stayed there until he'd et the oyster. Then he split the shell open and took one for a boat and he sailed along 'til he met a sea-surpent, and he killed it, and drawed off its skin and when he got home he sold it to an engine company for hose, for forty thousand dollars, to put out fires with Bill said that it was actually so, because he could show me a man who used to belong to the engine company. I wish father'd let me go out to find a sea-surpent like that, but he don't let my have no chance to distinguish myself.

"Bill was saying only yesterday, that the Indians caught him once and drove eleven railroad spikes through his stomach and cut off his scalp, and never hurt him a bit. He said he got away by the daughter of a chief sneaking him out of the wigwam, and lending him a horse. Bill says she was in love with him, and when I asked him to let me see the holes where they drove in those spikes, he said he dasn't take off his clothes, or he'd bleed to death. He said his own father didn't know it, because Bill was afraid it might worry the old man

"And Bill told me they wasn't going to get him to go to Sunday school. He says his father has a brass idol that he keeps in the garrett, and Bill says he's made up his mind to be a pagan, and begin to go naked and carry a tomahawk, and a bow and arrow, as soon as warm weather comes. And to prove to me, he says his father has the town all underlaid with nitro-glycerine, and, as soon as he gets ready, he's going to blow the old thing out, and burst her up—let her rip, and demolish her. He said so down at the dam, and told me not to tell anybody, but I thought they'd be no harm in mentioning it to you.

"And now I believe I must be going. I hear Bill a whistling. Maybe he's got something else to tell me."

The Board of Education of Clinton, Illinoise, passed the following complimentary resolutions relative to our fellow citizen, Dr. Goodbrake:

WHEREAS, The ill health, and contemplated change of residence of Dr. Goodbrake has rendered the resignation of his membership on our Board of Education necessary, which has been formerly accepted.

RESOLVED, That we sincerely regret the necessity for such resignation, especially in that we are thereby deprived of his valuable services as presiding officer of the Board, in which capasity he has so faithfully and acceptably served us for the last five years.

RESOLVED, That it is but just and courteous that a vote of thanks be and that the same is hereby tendered him as an evidence of our appreciation of his wise counsels, impartial rulings, uniformly kind and courteous bearing toward each and all of the members of the board, as well as toward the theachers, pupils, and patrons of the school.

RESOLVED, That while serving the associations which have been so agreeable, pleasant and instructive to us, we hope he will find in his new home a field of usfulness, both professionally and socially adapted to his tastes and capasities, and which will yield as its reward and abundant harvest of contentment and happiness during the many years which we hope will yet be added to his useful life.

Signed by the Board.

ROCKY RANGE RAMBLES.

Few people there are who do not cherish delightful anticipations of some day gliding across the great plains of the far west to [illegible] upon life in the pure, bracing, exhilirating atmosphere of the majestic mountain ranges of Colorado. To all who have dreamed of days amid the matchless scenes, the towering peaks and deep mouthed gorges of the "Alps of America" the Rocky Mountain Tourist will come as an awakening to realization. It is a superb publication in every particular, the letter press the pefection of typographical excellence, the arrangement a model for book printers, while such distinguished artists as Moran, Bisbing, Laugridge, French and worrall furnished the drawings for the illustrations which so profusely adorn the pager. The views in the Mancos and McElmo Canons are subjects entirely new and of rare fascination,, while the single engraving of the Royal Gorge of the Arkansas, is ten by fifteen inches in dimensions. The Tourist, aside from its rich typography and highly artistic engravings, is a work of rare interest, writen, as it is, in an easy and graphic vein throughout, Mr. J. G. Pangborn, the author, being an old newspaper man, and the treatment of the Tourist more of the journalistic order than of the stereotyped book writer. When it is stated that the publisher, Major T. J. Anderson, Ex-Mayor of Topeka, Kansas sends a specimen copy of the Rocky Mountain Tourist, absolutely free, to all requesting, by letter or postal card, such favor, his exceeding liberality cannot meet with such undisguised appreciation on the part of the public at large as to require the services of quite a circle of equal generous friends to assist him in opening and responding to his mail. That all will receive who but ask there is, however, no question.

DIALOGUE.

BY A. E. VERITY.

Youth:
Old Time, haste thy lagging steps;
Thou creep'st like snail upon the lea;
Bring to an end my youthful days,
And let me manhood's stature see.

Time:
Oh! foolish boy, the day will come
When thou of sin and grief shalt know,
And in repentant bitterness
Shalt wish that time had gone more slow.

Manhood:
Old Time, haste thy lagging steps,
For wealth and fame ahead I see,
And long to grasp them in my hand.
Why do you creep so slow for me?

Time:
Thou foolish man, when that day comes,
Of sin and folly thou shalt know,
And while they rankle in thy heart
Shalt wish that Time had gone more slow.

Old Age:
Oh, Father Time, retard thy steps;
Thou goest, indeed, too fast for me;
Let me prepare to meet my God
Before my soul from earth is free;

Oh, foolish man, thou'st had thy time;
Neglected it has passed thee by;
Thy tears and prayers are no avail,
Thy doom is sealed and thou must die.

ALIVE OR DEAD!

PART I.

It was a very hot day; hot to oppressiveness. The sky was one blaze of yellow sunshine; there was not a breath of air, not a rustle in a leaf, not a sound save the monotonous hum of the bees ransacking the blossoms. A dead stillness reigned without the manor of Brocklehurst, although within there were both noise and excitement, for the morrow was the wedding-day of Hester Kyrle, the sole child of John Kyrle, millionaire, and the heiress of Brocklehurst estates. But there were two rooms within the house that noise and excitement did not reach. They were apparently sacred from intrusion; and even the mother of the bride-elect did not venture to invade their precincts. One of them was the study of John Kyrle, and the other the chamber of his daughter. Mr. Kyrle sat in his study in a deep reverie. He was a tall, lean man, with hawk-like eyes, that rested with a curious intensity on the grate, while a huge pile of letters, pushed carefully into a heap, lay unheeded by his side.

He was exclusively that which is understood by the term a man of the world, thoroughly mundane to the backbone. He slept and he ate and drank under the connubial roof, and with a sterotyped icy smile paid the household bills without a question or a comment ever crossing his thin lips.

But, as far as any of the ordinary feeling or influence that the magical word "home" is supposed to exercise over man, he might have been a celibate. A very long time ago he had discovered that his marriage had been a fatal mistake. Both he and his wife were of the world; but with this one fact the bond of sympathy between them ceased entirely.

John Kyrle was cynical, clever and desperately ambitious. Mrs. Kyrle was foolish, frivolous and dreadfully underbred.

At the present time there was as little union of sentiment as usual between the ill-matched pair, for Mr. Kyrle's sharp-cut physiognomy bore upon it a marked contrast to the complacent round face of his better-half. In lieu of a beatific smile of content, such as she wore on the eve of her daughter's marriage with Mervyn Tyrrell—a man after her own heart—Mr. Kyrle's lips were tightly compressed, while an ominous shadow bestrided his light-gray eyes and his high brow.

There had been an appeal made to him on the preceding night, an appeal most passionate and most eloquent, with that powerful eloquence that truth and feeling can give even to the most trivial words, while the voice that uttered it was the one that was dearest to his ears.

He had faithfully pledged himself to consider the subject, forced on his attention by the plaintive, sobbing tones, and he had passed several hours shut up in his study to carry out the promise he had made. But for once his keen intellect seemed entirely at fault; the difficulty he desired to solve remained still unsolved, and he was sorely perplexed. A timid knock aroused him; he hesitated an instant before bidding the visitor enter, and he felt almost like a culprit and a craven when at last a light footfall crossed the floor and paused close to his side. Then he mustered courage and turned to look up with a sternness that was feigned in his glance, and a resolution that was a mock on his mouth.

The girl who stood beside him was slender, almost fragile, in appearance, wanting slightly in physique, perhaps, but yet willowy and graceful in figure, and with a face fair as the morning. Her clear cheeks reddened and paled alternately, and her soft lips quivered like a child's, while her eyes, meek blue eyes, were fixed eagerly on his own.

Before he could address her, she was down in a white heap on the floor, with her clasped hands resting on his knee.

"You will not make me marry him, father; you will have mercy upon me, and send him away!"

The wailing cry reached even the heart that had grown somewhat hard and insensible by contact with the world.

"Hester, listen to me;" and Mr. Kyrle leaned forward and took her trembling fingers in his own firm grasp.

"You are going to be cruel, father," she gasped, with her color all flown and her face showing up an ashy white.

"Do not excite yourself like this," he said, quietly, still holding her hands; but she dragged them away hastily, and began wringing them in her excessive agitation.

"Tell me, will you or will you not save me from worse than death?" she asked, with passion in her voice.

"I will tell you nothing, Hester, until you choose to be calm."

She drew herself together, as it were, with a visible shiver passing over her whole frame.

"I am calm now," she said, in accents that were comparatively steady.

"If you had told me a month—nay, even a week—ago that in pledging yourself to marry Mervyn Tyrrell you were acting under coercion, I could have and should have stopped the matter at once. To me it seems a most iniquitous marriage when a woman swears to love her husband and deliberately perjures herself. But I understood that you accepted him voluntarily, and that his attentions were agreeable to you."

"I was a miserable coward, father, as I told you last night. He and I were thrown so much together that it seemed impossible for me to refuse when he almost demanded me to marry him. And then my mother said that my refusal would break her heart."

"Her heart!" broke in John Kyrle, with an ill-suppressed cynicism in his voice.

"And I have tried, tried hard, to reconcile myself; but, the more I see of him, the more I dislike, nay, hate him. I shall go mad if I have to marry that man!"

"And what can be done to prevent it at the eleventh hour—on the very eve of the bridal? Hester, I have thought over it, as I promised you, and I find it must be. I can do nothing."

"Nothing!" she almost shrieked, rising from her knees, and her slight figure swaying.

Mr. Kyrle caught her in his arms and with one hand turned up her face toward him so that he might scrutinize it.

"Child, do you love some other man?" he questioned gravely, with a keen glance. But her eyes looked back at him with frankness in their limpid depths.

"I wish I did!" she replied earnestly; "for I would appeal to him to save me from this fate, since you refuse to do so. No; it is only that I hate—loathe—this Mervyn Tyrrell!"

"But why? He is not one I should have picked out for your husband; but he is well-looking, and I suppose true and honest in the love he professes for you."

"What matters if he be true and honest, or if he loves me or not, since I abhor him with my whole heart and soul? Father"—and she clasped his arm with both her hands, and gazed piteously at him—"do you really mean that there is no escape for me—that I must become his wife?"

"Hester, a child of mine must not be called a jilt and dishonorable by the world, and it would be dishonor on your part to draw back now." Mr. Kyrle answered pompously, in a hard voice.

"Then, God help me, since you won't! Oh, that I might die before to-morrow!" she murmured, with a heartfelt pathos.

"Hester!"

For once the "father" shone out of the steely gray eyes, and a misty look came over them. The sight touched her at once.

"Forgive me for worrying you," she pleaded. "I suppose you are right, and that everything should be sacrificed to honor. I will try and resign myself;" and she turned quietly to go away.

Mr. Kyrle stooped and pressed a kiss on her forehead. He was not a demonstrative man, and the caress was so rare that the girl looked up at him wistfully and in astonishment.

"My poor child!" he faltered.

"Are you sorry for me, father? It is at any rate a comfort to know that you pity me, if you cannot help me," she said, with a faint effort at a smile that ended in a sob.

When she was gone John Kyrle went back to his chair, and bent over an open book; but the muscles round his mouth twitched nervously, and he brushed away with a shaky hand a drop that glittered on the page before him.

PART II.

"Hester, you are late," Mrs. Kyrle remarked, in a petulant voice, as she swept into her daughter's room on the morning of the wedding.

"Hester" did not seem to be conscious if she was late. She leant listlessly against the casement in a loose wrapper; her long golden hair was unbound, and her face was very pale and wan. But it was her eyes that were strange; they wore a scared look, and deep luster shades underlined them.

"Am I?" was all she answered, without moving from her position; and the tone of her voice struck painfully on her mother's ear.

Mrs. Kyrle—foolish, frivolous and underbred Mrs. Kyrle—had plumed herself on having achieved a stroke of diplomacy; and the serious tone of her daughter's voice depressed her exultation to an unpleasant degree. She had maneuvered and managed with that wonderful skill that especially belongs to cunning and unscrupulous feminine nature to force Hester into a marriage to which her inclinations were violently opposed. And she had felicitated herself immensely on the success of her scheme. Yet there were sparks of maternal feeling lying at the bottom of her heart, although they were incrusted in a mass of worldliness and selfishness. The suffering that had been legibly written on Hester's face during the latter days had brought a few qualms to her conscience now and then, and not all the specious arguments that egotism finds to justify itself to its worshipers could quite smother the reproach of the still, small voice that would assert itself.

"I am acting for her good, and she will thank me for it hereafter," was the stereotyped phrase by which she sought to salve the whispers of conscience.

"Turn, Hester, and let me see if you are looking your best, as you are in duty bound to do to-day."

There was no answer. The girl did not heed or even appear to hear the words, but stood gazing vacantly up into the blue sky, where some feathery clouds were floating slowly by.

"It is time that you were dressing," Mrs. Kyrle went on, in accents that had grown sharper through Hester's silence.

"Yes," answered the voice; but the figure never stirred.

"Leave her to me, Mrs. Kyrle;" and a girl in bridesmaid's gear came forward from the other end of the room. "Trust to me that Hester shall be ready by the time the clock strikes eleven."

"Thank you, Maude. I will leave you to your task; and it seems to me that you will find it a difficult one;" and Mrs. Kyrle rustled angrily out of the room.

"Hester, you must dress!" and Maude Wymer threw her arm round the girl and tried to draw her round.

"Very well;" and this time the figure did move. Hester walked firmly across the room, and delivered herself into the maid's and Maude's hands; and in a little while she stood arrayed in her satin dress, with a coronet of orange flowers crowning her brow.

"You look lovely, Hester; just a shade too white, perhaps, beautiful as a dream. Does she not, Anne?" cried Maude, enthusiastically.

"Miss Kyrle looks lovely, but she is a great deal too white; she looks like a bride of death."

"Oh, hush, Anne! Hester, you had better sit here until it is time to go down."

"I should like to go to the window," was the quiet answer. "Please raise it, Maude; I feel stifled."

"It is a delicious day; the air is so full of fragrance, and the sun shines so bright. It is a happy bride that the sun shines on, you know," Maude said, pushing the sash up; then she drew forward an armchair, into which Hester sank.

"You are crushing your dress! And if you lean back like that you will spoil your flowers and veil!"

The bride-elect looked up at the remonstrance, and gave a little wistful smile.

"You can put me to rights to-morrow, Maude; I am so tired to-day!" and she wearily closed her eyes.

Maude Wymer gazed at her in dismay and surprise. Then she went and sat down a little way off. A thousand trifles, light as air at the time, seemed to her now as confirmation strong of doubts regarding this marriage that had occasionally arisen in her mind. She was an intelligent girl, and in a few minutes she had realized Hester's pitiable position. Hester was going mad at her fate, was the thought that flashed through her mind as she watched her sitting or sleeping so strangely then. Suddenly a throng of girls appeared at the door. They were Maude's sister-bridesmaids; and, after exchanging a word with her, they walked toward the window.

"Hester is asleep," whispered one of them in astonishment, and the others moved softly and spoke in hushed tones as they gathered round the chair.

"How dreadfully white she looks!"

"She will have more color when she wakes, perhaps."

Then a sort of curious awe, almost a dread, crept over them, and they were silent. Hester was so still. There was not the slightest flicker of a golden lash; white and rigid as a marble image, with her pale hands folded loosely and meekly together, Hester Kyrle sat before them.

At this moment the maid approached the panic-struck group. Surprised at the startled expression of the different faces, she pressed hurriedly forward; and, as if with an instinct of what was to come, she seized one hand; the touch of it was sufficient. The woman fell on her knees before the motionless figure that was clad in all the mockery of bridal array, and she gave a piercing shriek that resounded through the house, and fell on the ears of the marriage guests—a shriek which in the contagious panic of horror was taken up by each of the assembled bridesmaids.

The clock chimed eleven loud strokes, but Mervyn Tyrrell waited in vain for his bride to come to him. Then John Kyrle stood and gazed at his daughter, and he knew that the Heaven she had invoked to save her from Mervyn Tyrrell's arms had listened to her prayers, for Hester Kyrle was dead.

PART III.

All the sunshine had gone from the earth, and the sky was of somber gray, with gathering clouds, on the day that Hester Kyrle was to be carried to her last resting-place. Mrs. Kyrle's grief was so violent that her reason seemed likely to give way; remorse, added to sorrow, was making her burden too heavy to bear, and the cold, worldly woman gave way to bursts of passionate despair that evoked surprise in its hearers.

"But it is no wonder that Mrs. Kyrle suffers remorse," Maude Wymer said to her brother, as he took her to the house for a last look at the friend of her childhood, before the sweet face should be shut away from mortal eyes. "Mrs. Kyrle is as much a murderess as though she had cut Hester's throat with a knife."

Then she recounted to him all her ideas on the subject of the marriage, the prospect of which had killed Hester.

"O, Mark, if you had seen the angel's smile, so sad, so wistful, and so meek that she gave a few minutes before she died." She paused, her voice choked by tears.

"And she died of aneurism of the heart?" questioned Mark Wymer. He was a medical student, and so a sudden death excited his interest.

"Of course it was; the doctor said so. At first they tried restoratives, fancying it was a fit of some sort; but I knew better. I knew the instant I looked at her that Hester was dead; I knew that she had reached peace. She was just as cold and as rigid a few moments before she died as she is now. I should like you to see her, Mark; she was so beautiful in life."

"And she is beautiful in death," was Mark's first thought, as his eyes rested on the dead girl, who, to gratify the half-crazy mother's wish had habited herself in wedding-garb. Mark had been studying medicine in the London hospitals, and, like too many in his profession, he had come to regard the human body, practically and simply, as a curious piece of mechanism animated by a vital principle. But he could not somehow look at the form before him in the same cold, abstract manner. He could only gaze on it as a vision of beauty such as he had never looked on before. There was not the faintest shade of death's livid hue on the pure white face; there was neither sharpening or sinking of the classical features; there was none of that peculiar expression round the pretty lips, and in the fall of the eyelids upon the cheek, which is the signet that the conqueror Death sets upon his victims; and yet it did not look life-like either. In the face and hands there was a marble rigidness, and the tints were transparent like parian.

Hester Kyrle was borne to her grave, and Mark Wymar returned home; but, when the day had gone by and dusk was gathering in, he wended his way to a friend's house, and that friend was a surgeon of high standing in his profession.

"Barker, do you know a sane man when you see him?" he asked.

The surgeon opened his eyes in surprise.

"Just put your finger on my pulse, and look at me. Am I all right?"

"I should think you are gone mad."

"I have come on an errand which I fear you will think insane; and I want you to assure yourself that I am compos mentis before I speak it."

"Well, say that I am convinced of your sanity."

"There was a young girl buried to-day, and I believe she has been buried alive. I have come to beg of you to help me to discover the true case."

"What!"

Mark reiterated his words. Enough that persuasions prevailed.

The sexton was heavily bribed, and they then descended into the vault. When the coffin was unclosed, Hester lay in it with no change in her appearance. The surgeon touched the brow and the hands, then he held a small pocket-mirror before her mouth.

The glass was undimmed.

He shook his head; the case was hopeless.

"One moment," cried Mark. "Put your hand under the arm and see if there is the same chill there as on the brow."

With difficulty the direction was carried out. The same chilliness was not there; to decide the point the silken bodice was cut away in order to feel the heart.

There was no pulsation. "Try under the arm again," pleaded Mark earnestly.

The surgeon pushed his hand slowly along; then he paused, and visibly startled, exclaiming eagerly:

"There is warmth here! By Heavens, she is not dead!"

"Now, see here," said Mark. He lifted her right hand, straightening the elbow, and pointing the fingers in the opposite direction. After which he withdrew his hold of the arm, and it remained precisely in the same position.

"Hurrah, Mark! It's nothing, after all, but a cataleptic fit. Let us take her home at once."

Hester Kyrle recovered consciousness after a deal of suffering; but the utmost skill and devotion were requisite to cure her. When at last her cheek bloomed again with the roses of health, and strength came to her frame, she gave her life right willingly into the keeping of its preserver, and Mark Wymer won his bride from the very jaws of death.

The Mexican Banditti.

The administration has done well in giving the depredations along the Texas border the consideration that their extent demands, and the whole country will learn with gratification that it has been practically decided to adopt a more vigorous policy in the treatment of the banditti who have been invading the United States territory from the Mexican side of the Rio Grande river. These depredations have been going on for years; the inhabitants of Texas, New Mexico, and Lower California have been plundered incessantly, and the United States Government has expended millions of dollars in supporting troops along the border, who have ineffectually endeavored to check the invasions and punish the brigands. It has long been evident that double the number of troops employed will be of no avail in protecting the property of the Americans so long as they refrain from following the marauders across the river into Mexican territory. The Mexican bandits are experienced scoundrels, and know the country and the river so well that they are always able to escape to Mexican territory, where, under the policy that has prevailed heretofore, they are safe from pursuit. They thus escape with their stolen property and their lives, only to renew their raids as they can dispose of their spoils and exhaust the money in debauch.

The Rio Grande border extends nearly 1,000 miles, so that it is out of all question to suppose it can be effectively policed on the American side while the Mexican Government is either favorable to the bandits or too weak to lend any assistance to punish them. This is, has been, and will probable continue to be, the case. There is the strongest presumption that the Mexicans encourage this outlawry.

The policy which it is proposed to adopt is to notify the Mexican Government that these raids must be stopped, and, if they are not immediately suspended, to authorize the United States troops to follow the bandits across the river wherever they are encountered, attack them on Mexican territory, recover the property, and bring back such prisoners as they can take for military trial on the American side.

Singular Death.

A death by spontaneous combustion occurred in a San Francisco liquor saloon the other day. A man named Harley, who had been in the city for about a month, and frequently arrested for drunkenness, had just recovered from a second attack of delirium tremens, but started that morning on another drunken spree. He staggered into a saloon nearly insensible, and feebly asked for a drink. This was refused him, and he staggered toward the gas-jet to light the stump of a cigar he carried, while the barkeeper turned away to attend to his duties. A moment afterward he heard a low moan and noticed a flash of fire, and turning around he saw Harley falling to the floor, his head enveloped in black, thick smoke, while flames issued from his mouth and ears. A horrible smell of burned flesh filled the air. Not a moment was lost in attending to the sufferer, but he was beyond relief. His face was perfectly black, partly charred and partly covered with a moist soot. His eyes were open. His mouth was completely roasted on the inside, but, with the exception of his head and hands, no part of his body bore marks of his horrible death.

Emigration of Germans from Russia.

Two hundred thousand German colonists in Southern Russia have determined to emigrate to Brazil and other parts of America, to avoid being placed under Russian courts of law and drafted into the Russian army. Though they and their ancestors have been in Russia over 100 years, and will be impoverished by emigration, the abolition of their privileges, in consequence of the incessant demands of the National party, has sufficed to drive them away. The emigration has already begun.—London Times.

Superstition.

A panacea, or "cure-all," is one of the myths of the age of superstition. Dr. R. V. Pierce does not recommend any one or even his whole list of standard remedies as adequate to cure every disease. For severe lingering coughs, bronchial, throat and chronic lung diseases, he believes his Golden Medical Discovery is unsurpassed, but it will not cure you if your lungs are half wasted by consumption. The Discovery not only exercises a potent influence over pulmonary affections, by reason of its pectoral properties, but possesses also the most valuable alterative, or blood-cleansing properties, and is therefore a sovereign remedy in blood and skin affections. But, while it will cure scrofulous and other ulcers or sores, blotches, pimples and eruptions, it will not cure cancer, nor does its manufacturer claim any such merit for it as is done by proprietors of other blood-cleansing medicines, who dishonestly try to deceive the afflicted into the belief that their preparations will accomplish impossibilities. By reason of its real intrinsic merit it has a sale surpassing that of any other blood and cough medicine.

The Debris of the System

Must either pass through its natural channels of exit, the bowels, the kidneys and the pores, or, in default thereof, poison and disorder the fluids of the system. In order to effect the complete expulsion of this dangerous refuse, the organs through which it passes off must be active and unobstructed. Fortunately there is a certain means of rendering them so when they are not. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters stimulate the action of the excretory organs, and, by diffusing a genial warmth through the circulation, encourage moderate perspiration. By this triple effect the exodus of the fecal and other waste matters are encouraged, and the system freed from peril it would otherwise incur. The action of the bowels which follows the use of this beneficent alterative is easy and unaccompanied by griping, and its stimulative effect upon the urinary organs very conducive to their local health.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

THE spring pigs should be weaned as soon as possible, and this can be done when there is plenty of milk. Get them out of the way so the sows will have another litter before it is too late in the fall. Late fall pigs are the next thing to perfectly worthless.

PARCHED CORN FOR POULTRY.—An experienced farmer burns corn for his poultry. Says he learned that when carloads of burnt corn was sold here after the burning of an immense warehouse. His hens never laid so well before that winter of 1873.—Country Gentleman.

THE comb is the hen's pulse. If that be strong and bright, and of a good color and full of blood, shaking with every quick movement of the bird in the crested varieties, the bird is in normal health, and in a laying condition. When the rim of the comb and wattles have a purplish tinge, the bird is not well.

A KICKING HEIFER.—A year ago last January, we had a heifer drop her first calf. I used to let her into the pen and milk one side, while the calf sucked the other. When we weaned the calf, she kicked. I took a strap and buckled it round her belly just front of the udder. Buckle it tight, then, if she kicks, buckle it tighter. I did not have to do it but a few days. Cows that are gentle will sometimes kick if one commences milking a full stream, but would not if we began slow.—Cor. N. E. Farmer.

ARTICHOKES FOR FOOD.—The value of artichokes as food for stock compares very favorably with other roots, according to tests made in both this country and in Europe. In the report of the Department of Agriculture for 1865 the relative value of the roots named is as follows:

	Flesh Formers.	Fat Formers.
Potatoes	14	189
Carrots	8	68
Parsnips	12	70
Marigolds	4	102
Sugar beets	2	130
White turnips	1	40
Artichokes	10	188

It appears from the above table that the carbonaceous or heat-producing principle in the artichoke is surpassed only by the potato, and that by only a single point, while the potato and the parsnip, only, among the roots mentioned, exceed it as a flesh former.

A GOOD COW.—I have a cow now that gave in one week, commencing March 15, 239 pounds of milk, which made fourteen pounds and three ounces of good butter. This cow was fed six quarts daily of grain. Two quarts each of corn meal and oat meal, and two quarts of unground oats, were mixed well, and three quarts given in the morning and three quarts in the evening. She was fed all the clover hay she would eat up clean. The hay was very coarse, but had been cut and cured early. I bought this cow one year ago for $60. She is apparently a grade short-horn. She only went dry two or three weeks. I have thirteen cows, and this one gives the richest milk by far of any.—H. F. H., in Country Gentleman.

CORN FODDER.—A writer on growing corn to be fed green says: "One dairy farmer who has 100 dairy cows said that he wanted his corn grown so as to produce the greatest quantity of ears possible for the purpose of feeding his cows, and to increase their daily flow of milk; and, from numerous letters received from farmers in different sections of the country the past fall, there is no doubt that very many farmers will make the experiment the coming season with sweet corn, growing it in such manner as to produce ears as well as fodder, all to be used in the feeding of farm stock the coming summer and fall, and from such experiments much knowledge may be gained." The large free-growing varieties of sweet corn are best for this purpose.—Exchange.

About the House.

A TACK IN SEASON.—If the corner of a carpet gets loose, prevents the door opening, or trips every one that enters the room, nail it down at once. A dog's-eared carpet marks the sloven as well as the dog's-eared book.

HOW TO CLEAN OIL CLOTHS.—If you wish to have them look new and nice, wash them with soft flannel and lukewarm water, and wipe perfectly dry. If you want them to look extra nice, after they are wiped drop a few spoonfuls of milk over them, and rub them dry with a cloth.

MUFFINS.—Beat two eggs with one-half cup of sugar, one generous tablespoonful of butter, and a little salt; add one and a half cups of sweet milk, and three cups of flour in which is sifted three teaspoonfuls of good baking powder. Beat well and bake in buttered muffin-tins.

CORN BREAD.—Mix two cups of sifted corn-meal with two cups of sour milk; add one table-spoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one table-spoonful of melted butter or shortening, and one egg. Beat well, and lastly add one-half teaspoon of soda dissolved in one tablespoonful of boiling water. Bake in a quick oven.

A LADY who is very successful in raising poultry says when the wings of her little turkeys begin to lop down, and they look sick and weak, she pulls out the longest feathers on each wing, and they are all right in a few hours. She very seldom loses any, and she has tried it for years. If it is so, it is worth knowing and practicing.

GERMAN "'WIND-BAGS."—To five ounces of butter add one-quarter pint of water, and boil; add gradually, while on the fire, six ounces of flour, three eggs, and one spoonful of sugar; stir very briskly for ten minutes, then take the paste and put by spoonfuls in buttered tins, sprinkle with powdered sugar, bake fifteen minutes and serve.

SOFT GINGERBREAD—Put one cup of dark molasses, one-half cup of brown sugar, and one-half cup of butter (or part butter and part lard) into a pan and set it where it will just come to a boil. Cool, and add one teaspoonful of ginger, one-half of salt, and one egg. Stir in one-half cup of sour milk and two and a half cups of flour; beat well, and last of all add two even teaspoonfuls of soda dissolved in one-third cupful of hot water. Bake in moderate oven until well done.

Suicide with a Cannon.

Alfred Rand, of Boston, a promising young man of 26 years, and a recent graduate of Harvard College, committed suicide in a singular manner the other day. He purchased a small cannon, took it to his room, loaded it, and, having applied a slow match to it, laid down upon the floor, placing his head at the mouth of the cannon. The result was that a portion of his head was blown off.

TRADE IN CEREALS.

The Total Production of Europe—The Crops and Imports of 1876—The Probable Demand for American Products.

[From the Boston Herald.]

According to very careful statistical exhibit recently made by the French Government, the total cereal production of Europe amounts at present to an average of 4,994,000,000 bushels per annum. Of this Russia alone furnishes 1,606,000,000 bushels, or nearly one-third of the whole; Germany, 742,500,000 bushels; France, 627,500,000 bushels; and Austria, 550,000,000 bushels. The production of this country is set down at 1,537,250,000 bushels, or 39¼ bushels to each inhabitant, while Europe, with a population of 297,000,000, produces only about 16¾ bushels per head. The following table gives the amount of cereals per inhabitant produced by the various States of Europe:

	Bushels.		Bushels.
Roumania	30.60	Ireland	12.65
Denmark	32.45	Turkey	12.65
Russia	22.27	Finland	12.10
Prussia	22.00	Great Britain	11.65
France	18.06	Saxony	10.40

According to the most moderate estimate, the average quantity of cereal necessary for the consumption of each inhabitant is 14 9-10 bushels per annum, and, therefore, all the states that come after Sweden upon the list have to obtain grain supplies from other countries. In this country three-fifths of the cereal production consists of corn. In Europe oats predominate, and next in quantity come wheat, rye, barley, and corn. Russia, Prussia, and France produce large wheat crops, and the two first are our largest competitors in the English market. In Roumania and Servia corn takes the first rank. Prior to 1860 Russia and Prussia led the United States in the supply of wheat. From 1859 to 1861 the exports of wheat from this country to England sprung suddenly up from 340,504 cwt to 15,610,472 cwt, while in the same period Russia advanced only from 3,837,454 cwt to 4,567,483 cwt, and Prussia from 3,345,301 cwt to 4,462,573 cwt. The lead taken so suddenly by this country has ever since been maintained. Tables covering the years from 1860 to 1872 show that the United States supplied England during that period with 28.5 per cent. of her total imports of wheat, including flour, against 24.7 per cent. from Russia and 17.2 per cent. from Germany. In the same period England imported 43 per cent. of her total importations of corn from this country. In 1852 the exports of corn of this country to Great Britain only amounted to 1,341,304 bushels, against 1,795,632 bushels from Turkey and Roumania, and 1,870,528 bushels from Russia. At present Roumania and Southern Russia, to a lesser degree, are our principal competitors in the supply of corn. The year 1876 was a good harvest year in England; prices were low, and the total imports of wheat were only 44,394,152 cwt, against 51,886,393 cwt in 1875. The following table gives the source of supply:

	Cwt.	Per cent. of all.
United States and Canada	21,716,936	48.9
Russia	8,769,260	19.7
British India	3,279,887	7.4
Germany	2,324,148	5.2
Egypt	2,218,297	4.9
Turkey and Roumania	1,238,651	2.9
Chili	982,619	2.3
France	293,360	0.7
Denmark	262,580	0.6
Other countries	3,308,356	7.4
Total	44,374,152	100

The importations of corn were 3,958,226 cwt, of which upward of 50 per cent. came from this country. Canadian exports of grain are included in those of this country. It will be seen that Russia and Turkey have furnished 22.6 per cent. of the supplies to England. In India a dearth prevails this year. Egypt being subject to the suzerainty of the Porte, will be affected by the war, and whether the war is localized or whether it draws into it the other European powers it is evident that the demand for American breadstuffs will be increased in the neighborhood of 25 per cent. in case of the cutting off of the Russian and Turkish supplies from market by a prolonged war. Italy imports very largely from Odessa, on the Black sea, and war will also create an active demand for our breadstuffs in Mediterranean ports. In this country the visible supply of wheat is only about one-half what it was this time last year, and if the Russian supply is cut off from the English market the supply of wheat until the next harvest will be very scant, and prices necessarily high. This will tend to make a good market for corn, of which there is in this country more than twice the quantity in store than there was this time last year, although the exports to England have been larger than last year. While much depends upon the area of hostilities and the length of the war, it is the opinion of statisticians that the Eastern war cannot fail to create an extraordinary demand for our breadstuffs.

How to Win a Divorce Suit.

The following skeleton of an argument was found on a table in the Circuit Court room, supposed to have been left by a distinguished legal luminary engaged in a recent divorce case:

1. Importance of the case.
2. The parties; their great dignity.
3. The great questions of our modern civilization; the rights of husband and wife, their duties to each other.
4. The marriage vow; its sacredness.
5. Touch up the court on the solemn duty imposed upon it in tearing from the husband the property which God gave him title to, viz., the body, soul, and affections of his wife.
6. Excoriate the wife, picture the wrongs of the husband; move the court to tears (if possible); quote from Milton: "Till Hymen brought in love-delighted hour, there dwelt no joy in Eden's rosy bower," etc. (not sure about that being from Milton, may be from Pope or Walt Whitman; but no matter); cite authorities—Greenleaf, Bishop, and 21 Mo.

Peroration; overcome with emotion; glass of water to be handed; handkerchief to be perfumed; to have a swallow-tail coat; apostrophe to Justice.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

CHEAPER SEWING MACHINES.

Expiration of the Batchelder Needle Patent—End of the Sewing-Machine Monopoly and a Tumble in the Price of Machines.

The last of a series of patents on the construction of sewing machines has just expired, by which a powerful combination was enabled to control the manufacture as a monopoly, and extort from the public prices which have been two or three times as much as would have yielded a fair profit on the cost of making the machines. There are still other patents, of course, applying to certain improvements, but it is believed that, with the expiration of the Batchelder needle patent, there are none left which cover the essentials of the sewing machine and enable the combination to levy exorbitant tribute upon the manufacture thereof. This combination consisted of the Wheeler & Wilson, Singer, and Grover & Baker companies, which had possessed themselves of all the essential patents, and have been exacting royalties on the various parts of every machine made. These royalties amounted to so much in the bulk that machines which did not cost more than $10 (we give an outside figure) have been sold for $60, and so on in proportion. The price charged for machines has ranged three times as high as they have been sold for in England, where no royalties could be exacted, after being manufactured in this country and sustaining all the expense of transportation, handling, insurance, and the profits of middle-men. A large part of this excessive profit went to the owners of the patents, but the existence of the patents and combination to keep up the prices also enabled the outside manufacturers and agents to charge up profits for themselves which were proportionately exorbitant. The hopefulness of the future is that, when the general principles of the sewing machines are free to all, competition will set in which will prevent the exaction of more than a reasonable profit. It will not be surprising, therefore, if within a few weeks machines can be bought for $20 which have heretofore sold for $60; indeed, it is announced that one of the leading companies has declared its intention of selling the $60 machines at once for $30 cash, and the rate will henceforth be downward.

This is good news for the thousands of seamstresses through the country, and good news for the thousands of poor families that never could hope to have a sewing machine in the house at the old rate. It will make bread and meat come easier, and there will be more of it for the same amount of labor. The sewing-woman can buy a machine on time for $20 with reasonable hope of paying for it, while heretofore women who have paid out that amount of money to start with have toiled day and night to make headway on the $40 or $50 unpaid, only to lose their machine and the money already paid in the end. Thus far the sewing machine has been mainly beneficial to those who were not especially in need of its beneficence. It has put money by the millions into the pockets of the men who manufactured it; it has enriched many of the agents and middle-men who have handled it; it has enlarged the business and profits of the clothing, boot and shoe, and other manufacturers using it. But it will first become a real blessing to the poor when it shall be relieved of its exclusive royalties and extortions, and can be obtained by women and families at a price yielding only a fair profit on the cost of manufacture. Thenceforward the poor woman or family that can obtain a sewing machine will be able to save its cost every year in time, labor, and money, and the cost will come within the possible means of almost every prudent and industrious person who can use such a machine to advantage.

Important Supreme Court Decisions.

Railroad Taxation.—Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Company vs. Commonwealth of Virginia, and four other cases. Error to the Court of Appeals of Virginia. In these cases the court affirms the judgment of the Court of Appeals of the State, holding that a true construction of the laws in relation to the road does not warrant the conclusion that the property of the company is exempt from taxation, as claimed by it.

As to Express Companies.—Southern Express Company vs. Dickson. Error to the Circuit Court for Alabama. In this case the court holds that where goods are shipped by an express company for a destination they cannot be delivered at any other place without the consent of the consignor or owner, and it makes no difference that they are claimed by one of the consignees at the place of consignment.

What Constitutes Insurance.—Eames et al. vs. Home Insurance Company. Appeal from the Circuit Court for the Southern District of Illinois. It is here held that where an application for insurance had been made in due form, the property to be insured being fully described, the amount of insurance named, and the rate of premium agreed upon, and there being no question about any other point in the contract, nothing remaining to be done but to issue the policy, the contract of insurance was perfected, the risk taken, and in case of loss by fire the company is liable.

A Town's Responsibility.—Town of East Lincoln vs. Chas. Davenport. Appeal from Southern District of Illinois. The question in this case was as to the legality of certain bonds issued by the town of East Lincoln. It was shown that the plaintiff, who was the bona fide owner of coupons, sued upon the question of the former's irregularity. Misconduct upon the part of agents cannot be considered. The Supervisor who signed the bonds at midnight and absconded to avoid an injunction, was agent of the town, and it must bear his misconduct. He is the one in authority. The town levies a subscription to these bonds. The bonds recite that they were issued in accordance with a town election. A majority of the whole attended and voted in favor of the subscription of $60,000. The statute is construed as making this act a subscription.

VEGETINE.

HER OWN WORDS.

BALTIMORE, Md., Feb. 13, 1877.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—Since several years I have got a sore and very painful foot. I had some physicians, but they couldn't cure me. Now, I have heard of your VEGETINE from a lady who was sick for a long time, and became all well from your VEGETINE; and I went and bought me one bottle of VEGETINE, and, after I had used one bottle, the pains left me, and it began to heal, and then I bought one other bottle, and so I take it yet. I thank God for this remedy and yourself, and wishing every sufferer may pay attention to it. It is a blessing for health.

MRS. C. KRABE, 638 West Baltimore Street.

VEGETINE.

SAFE AND SURE.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

In 1872 your VEGETINE was recommended to me, and, yielding to the persuasions of a friend, I consented to try it. At the time, I was suffering from general debility and nervous prostration, superinduced by overwork and irregular habits. Its wonderful strengthening and curative properties seemed to affect my debilitated system from the first dose; and, under its persistent use, I rapidly recovered, gaining more than usual health and good feeling. Since then I have not hesitated to give VEGETINE my most unqualified indorsement, as being a safe, sure and powerful agent in promoting health and restoring the wasted system to new life and energy. VEGETINE is the only medicine I use; and, as long as I live, I never expect to find a better.

Yours truly, W. H. CLARK,

120 Monterey Street, Allegheny, Pa.

VEGETINE.

THE BEST SPRING MEDICINE.

CHARLESTOWN.

H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—This is to certify that I have used your "Blood Preparation" in my family for several years, and think that, for Scrofula, or Cankerous Humors, or Rheumatic affections, it cannot be excelled; and as a blood purifier and spring medicine it is the best thing I have ever used, and I have used almost everything. I can cheerfully recommend it to any one in need of such a medicine.

Yours respectfully,

MRS. A. A. DINSMORE, 19 Russell Street.

VEGETINE.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

BOSTON, Feb. 13, 1871.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

Dear Sir—About one year since I found myself in a feeble condition from general debility. VEGETINE was strongly recommended to me by a friend who had been much benefited by its use. I procured the article, and, after using several bottles, was restored to health, and discontinued its use. I feel quite confident that there is no medicine superior to it for those complaints for which it is especially prepared, and would cheerfully recommend it to those who feel that they need something to restore them to perfect health. Respectfully yours,

U. L. PETTENGILL,

Firm of S. M. Pettengill & Co.,

No. 10 State Street, Boston.

VEGETINE.

ALL HAVE OBTAINED RELIEF.

SOUTH BERWICK, Me., Jan. 17, 1872.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

Dear Sir—I have had dyspepsia in its worst form for the last ten years, and have taken hundreds of dollars' worth of medicines without obtaining any relief. In September last I commenced taking VEGETINE, since which time my health has steadily improved. My food digests well, and I have gained fifteen pounds of flesh. There are several others in this place taking VEGETINE, and all have obtained relief. Yours truly,

THOMAS E. MOORE,

Overseer of Card Room, Portsmouth Co.'s Mills.

The Indianian says: Because, in a recent lecture in Baltimore, Fred Douglas told some very unpalatable truths about the disloyalty and treason of the old citizens of Washington, that element among the people at the capital of the nation have become very indignant, and have started a petition numerously signed by the old slaveholders, slave-hunters, and the representatives of the class that incited Wilkes Booth to assassinate Lincoln, demandind his removal from the office of United States Marshal of the District of Columbia. We have read the speech of Fred Douglas, and every word in it is a forked tongue, red-eyed truth. That's what hurts, too. But will he be removed? That's the question.

The Washington Republican, the great radical organ of the co ntry, says: In the name of justice and decency we demand the removal of this slanderer from the position he holds' It is a position too intimately connected with the business people of this community to be held by such a one. The most abject apology could not condone the offense, and all men of respectability here, white and black, should brand him, as he deserves, as an infamous slanderer, by treating him with contempt. A man who would thus deliberately villify a whole people should be forced without the pale of respectable society. Certainly no gentleman here can recognize him in the future, for his shameless assault was leveled at the aggredated community, white, and colored and not at individuals.

The editor of the "Republican" has lived there for years, and the editor of the "Indianian" was there one season. Which are we to believe.

The following has just been received:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, D. C. May 18, 1878

"DEAR SIR: This Department is favored regularly with copies of many of the most influential newspapers of the country, and if you should desire to add yours to the number, we shall take great pleasure in placing it upon the files of the Executive Office.

Very truly yours,
W. K. ROGERS, Private Sec'y.
"To Proprietor of COURIER, Ind."

Grant, in going to the White House to see Hayes, a few weeks ago, passed by the post office and got his mail, among which was the COURIER. Seeing our description of the interviews we had with the President, he handed the paper to Hayes, who read it, and pronounced it the most truthful report he had seen of his views. The President then directed his Secretary to write as above. But we will have to adhere to our rule, not to send a paper out of the county, unless paid in advance or guaranteed by some responsible party. If we would take the word of Tom, Dick and Harry, we would have an immense circulation in America and possibly Europe. But we are trying a few in this county on that principle, and when that proves a success we may extend the limits.

WARSAW, IND., May, 1877.

EDITOR COURIER:—Dear Sir: Yourself and all comrades whom you see fit to invite, are requested to meet with us in a Grand Soldiers' Re-Union of the "Old Tenth Indiana District," on Wednesday and Thursday, June 6th and 7th, 1877. It is intended that this gathering shall eclipse anything of the kind held in the west since the close of the late civil war. At this early day it is impossible to do more than merely outline the programme, but we can say now that the first day will be consumed in the reception of visitors, assignment to quarters, and a general good time in "shouldering the crutch and fighting our battles o'er," free from any restraints save good conduct. The second day will open with a national salute of thirty-eight guns, with reveille at sunrise, followed by a competitive drill between visiting military organizations for a prize of $100 in gold for first, and a beautiful banner worth $75 for second dremium. An oration from some distinguished soldier-orator, a grand review of visiting military companies, Knights Templar, Knights of Pythias, and Fire Department of the city, and in the evening a banquet at the Opera House, with appropriate toasts and responses, closing with a military and civic ball. A large number of distinguished men, who won imperishable renown during the late war, will be with us, and it is intended this shall be what its name implies, A RE-UNION indeed, and in truth, of those who periled all in defense of their country.

GEN. REUB. WILLIAMS,
MAJ. N. N. BOYDSTON,
CAPT. C. W. BUCKET,
Committee of Invitation.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

The price of wheat is steadily falling, though for the past week the receipts have been larger than the week previous. Yesterday the market closed as follows: Amber, No. one, $1.80c., No. two do. $1.65c. We quote oats at 48c., corn, 55c., butter, 12½c., eggs, 8c., potatoes, $1.00, hogs, live weight, 4½c@4¾c., dressed, 5½c@6c., hides, green, 6c.

We learn of a domestic tragedy at our neighboring town of Kendallville on last Friday morning that may eventually terminate in homicide. The following is a brief and perhaps somewhat imperfect account of the affair, as up to the present writing we are unable to get full particulars. Mr. J. Wesley Bixler, Prosecuting Attorney elect for this Judicial Circuit, and for the past five years a government clerk in one of the departments at Washington, returned home from that city early in the morning of that day, and upon his arrival proceeded at once to the office of the U. S. Express Co., and borrowed a revolver of the agent, for the purpose, as he claimed of shooting a cat. Thus armed he passed up town, and calling at the residence of Mr. Pike, a well known tradesman, invited that gentleman to accompany him home alledging as an excuse that his wife was sick and wished to see him. Arriving at his residence and entering the private apartment he locked the door and proceeded to business. Having charged the man Pike with illicit intercourse with his wife, which was indignantly denied by the accused, Bixler at once commenced to blaze at Mr. Pike, discharging the contents of his revolver into the most vulnerable parts of that gentleman's person. One shot took effect in the hand, a second in the back of the neck and a third entered the brain just above the left temple. Pike is in a critical condition and his recovery is considered extremely doubtful. Bixler had a preliminary examination on Saturday, but we did not learn the facts that were brought out at the trial, although we learn that he was held in bonds of $3,000 to await the issue of his victim's wounds. Should Pike go over the dam, and the chances are certainly against him, Bixler will probably find it necessary to abandon the gay and festive scenes at Washington, resign his position as Prosecutor, and enter upon a different occupation during the remainder of his life. Both parties to this unfortunate occurrence have heretofore stood high in the community. The woman involved in the case is the daughter of a former prominent citizen of Auburn, and for many years a leading merchant of the town.

The irrepressible Dan, whilom schoolmaster, correspondent and radical spy, has turned amateur detective. Not long ago a Garrett barber of African pursuasion was burglarized of a lot of tonsorial tools, and Daniel, while mooning around the Corunna barber-shops concluded that he had a clue to the missing articles. He forthwith posted the African, and thereupon that individual, in company with a Garrett constable, a Garrett lawyer and a bran new Garrett warrant, came over and bounced Jim Crummy, the village barber. An investigation of the premises at once proved that the articles were not in the possession of the aforesaid James or any other man in town. As the result of this maiden attempt of the s. d., the poor African is financially "short" $7.00 for livery hire and incidentals. And Daniel—well, that concentrated specimen brick of pure cussedness has quietly subsided into his native element of dazzling nothingness, and perhaps he will not be visible again until something new shall suggest itself to arouse that slumbering volcano of genius.

A sad-eyed man hailing from Kendallville got on a mild jamboree. He came down for a little fun, you know, and he did'nt care a continental for expenses, and in the course of events the boys joined in the dance, when suddenly he conceived the idea that somebody was poking fun at him. He did'nt propose to be "made fun of in a one-horse town"—not he: and squaring himself on a dead level, with the balmy breezes of heaven fanning his massive brow he cordially invited the "whole d—d town to climb him." The last seen of the tuneful chap he was "climbing" fast toward K., with a full cargo of Corunna rat soup aboard.

The past ten days has been favorable for corn planting, and in this section the work is about over. As a general rule farmers have put out more than an average crop of both corn and potatoes.

The dry goods firm of the Messrs. Helmer & Knaur are paying out between $600 and $800 per day for wheat. They report trade good, all things considered.

And now comes that wandering bohemian, the organ and monkey. And what "grown up" chap of the present day hath not retained some pleasant youthful memory of the organ grinder.

The fishing in our neighboring lakes is panning out well, and sportsmen are having "lots of fun."

The peach and cherry crops promise an abundant yield.

The Wild Dutchman is on the rampage again.

The Red Ribbon Reformer will soon make a raid upon Corunna. 'Tis well.

LOVELAND.

GARRETT.

The following occurred in the last issue of the News:

"If the gentleman who writes to the Auburn COURIER from this place wants a tilt with the editor of this place he can have it. But we would advise him to pay closer attention to his employer's business and let the affairs of Garrett be settled by its bona-fide citizens."

Now, if we wish to have a tilt with anybody, we want our choice, and don't wish to have an old ignoramus like Parker force himself upon us. I wish to inform him that the gentleman who wrote the article for the COURIER (which was a correct report of the election) owns perhaps five dollars worth of real estate to Parker's one, and furthermore, he has no employers business to attend to (as he is not employed by any one,) his own interests is all that is at stake here, and what he has is paid for. Now I don't wish to insinuate from this, that all Parker represents is not paid for, oh, no, but just wish to show the financial standing of the correspondent. Parker also thinks we are not a bona-fide citizen. Well we may not be in Parker's estimation, for we think he is not capable of understanding what constitutes a bona-fide citizen. However, we have been a resident of Garrett about as long as Parker has, and are a free-borne American citizen. So now, Parker, don't go to kicking out of the harness.

Parker says he don't see how the county Auditor and Clerk can get along without the News. Well, if they are troubled with vermin, we don't see how they can either, for the Garrett News is an excellent rat exterminator.

When Parker gets that five thousand dollars he sued Weamer for, he will emigratq to a more congenial climate.

CEDAR CREEK.

Wheat looks splendid.

Corn coming up nicely.

A fine rain last Sabbath evening.

Oats are starting forward after a long stand still.

There was a large attendance at the Hopewell Chapel last Sabbath. Nine persons were baptised in Cedar Creek after services.

We listened with great interest to the first sermon preached by our merchant, J. B. Ross, last Sabbath evening, one mile north of Garrett. Owing to the rain the attendance was not large, but all were pleased. In three weeks he preaches at the same place again. Let the good work go on.

Obituary.

Weltha B. Lawhead, wife of James Lawhead and daughter of William and Margaret Nelson, was born in Ashland county Ohio, February 28th, 1849, died at her residence in Jackson township, DeKalb county Ind., April 27th 1877. Aged 28 years, 1 month and 29 days.

Our sister, ah where is she now,
But with the pious dead,
No more on earth with us to live,
Nor in our courts to tread.

She oftimes said to those around,
Who twined about her heart,
Weep not for me, my dearest friends,
I've chose the better part.

I think I see her pleasant face
With its deathly smile so sweet,
Clasped hand in hand with sisters dear,
Whom she has gone to meet.

We'll try to meet her in that clime,
And of God's goodness tell,
In endless age of space and time,
So, sister fare you well.

The best burlesque ever witnessed in Auburn was given at Ensley's Opera House last Monday night. The principal play on the programme was Dick Turpin and Tom King. The magnificence with which it was presented, the the applause with which it was received was so great that the manager was compelled, in the midd'e of an act, to ring down the curtain and tell the audience he could not give any more of it that night, as his players were about exhausted. Lawrence as Turpin brought down the house several times. In Pocahontas, Kline played "Ingun," and towards the end supposed that he was through and dressed in his native garb. In a few moments he was called to go on again and he was not fixed up. This misunderstanding did not stop the play by any means. Miss Gertie Worden sung several songs. She has a good voice, but lacks cultivation. With more expression she will make a good vocalist. The ladies as usual, in strange contrast to the boys, played well.

At a special election held in Fairfield county, South Carolina, on Mondy last the democrats carried the county and elected two members of the Legislature by over 1,200 majority, the colored voters not going to the polls at all. Last fall the county elected two Republicans. No signs of a break up in the democratic party there.

Sheriff's Sale.

BY virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a cause wherein F. N. Wright et. al is plaintiffs, and Joseph Ober et. al is defendants, requiring me to make the sum of one thousand four hundred and twenty-nine dollars and seventy six cents, with interest on said decree and costs. I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on Saturday, the 16th day Of June 1877

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o clock p. m. of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb County, Indiana, the rents and profits, for a term not exceeding seven years of the following real estate, to wit:

A part of lot number ninty-eight (98) in the original plat in the town of Auburn DeKalb county Indiana bounded by line commencing at the north west corner of said lot and running thence east eighty (80) feet thence south forty-four (44) feet, thence west eighty (80) feet, thence north forty-four (44) feet to the place of beginning.

If such rents and profits will not sel for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree interest and costs, I will, at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgment interests and costs.

Said sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation or appraisement laws.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES
No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers. Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

Board of Equalization.

AUBURN, DEKALB Co., IND. May 17, '77

The Board of Equalization for the county of DeKalb, will meet on the first Monday of June 1877, in the Auditor's office, in the town of Auburn, in said county, for the purpose of hearing and determining grievances and to equalize assessments.

ISAAC HAGUE, Auditor.

INSTITUTE.—The Richland township S. S. Teachers' Institute will meet at Richland Center, on Saturday, June 2nd 1877, (extra session). All are respectfully invited to attend. A good time looked for. J. W. TREBBY, Pres.

Some one has sent us a communication from Garrett. We thought it was a map of the seat of war in Europe at first, until we came to the following at the close: "Plcese chorect the speIren." Write again old sweetness, and send photo.

The Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Co., reduced their rates some time ago, and now the Western Union Co., not to be behind have done the same and Miss S. A. Weir, at the Eel River depot, can give you a message to Halifax at less rates than any other company.

It is hinted around that Reub. Williams is seeking another Federal appointment—that of Governor of Idaho Territory.—[Warsaw Republican.

We can't see how that can be. Reub. was bitterly opposed to a Governor Williams last fall, and how he can turn round now and endorse such a thing, passeth our understanding.

The old superstition that thirteen at dinner is an unlucky number may have been founded on the fact that only one man in fifty can scrape enough provisions together at once to feed even twelve hungry men. It would be very unlucky for us if that number of our poor relations should drop in on us now,

We regret that the Martin Bros. have not adopted our suggestion, and construct a uniform sidewalk in front of their handsome store. The present walk is not in keeping with their usual enterprise. We trust it will not be necessary to call the attention of the Marshal to this matter.

We learn that there is some hopes of the recovery of Pike, the man shot by Bixler. He steadily denies any criminal intimacy with Mrs. Bixler, and there is a good deal of feeling against Mr. B. When he drew his revolver, Pike threw the bed clothes over his head, and perhaps saved his life in that way.

J. M. Ray, our excellent boot maker, and Fred. Boeringer, merchant tailor, have joined together in their respective trades, and opened shop in back room up stairs, over Houser's book store, where they will be pleased to see all those wanting a good article of manufacture in their line. They promise good work and fair prices

So far we have failed to hear of any May parties this year. It is sad to note this decline in rural sports. The May Queen was always a worshipful being, and you could always designate her by her woolen shawls and rubber over shoes. By the way it is now proposed to hold these May parties in June hereafter.

Our jovial old friend Capt. Jenkins, of Concord, has of late became quite a real estate broker. Besides large landed interests in his township, and investments at Waterloo and Mooresville, he has recently purchased an hundred acres of land in Iowa and the residence of William Gibson in Newville, consisting of four beautiful lots. Long may he live and prosper.

At the meeting Sunday night some one said that we were throwing cold water on the temperance movement. It's false, it's a libel. We don't throw cold water. It's not near as effective as hot water. Besides we are consistently temperate—we don't drink tea or coffee nor eat great mouthsful of tobacco. Temperance in all things, rich with nothing.

Tuesday morning early an alarm of fire was given and the fire department hauled up in front of Jas. Griswold's residence, and speedily extinguished a fire that was making considerable progress on the roof. Jim is an insurance man and of course everybody thought he had a heavy insurance. But come to find out he only had a policy for $000.00. It hardly covered the damages sustained.

Will the Fort Wayne "News" give us a breathing spell. We have been reading some of its witticisms on the war in Europe, until our sides are sore. Here is the last one: "Erzeroum here for more kars," said the yardmaster at the P. F. W. & C. R. R., yesterday. That fellow ought to Bucharest with a brick." That convulsed us for four days, and we ask, in the name of humanity, that Conover give us a short rest.

The Robinson Bell Ringers did not put in an appearance last Tuesday as advertised. The reason, we learn, was that Jimmy Field and Prof. Barsby "jumped" the troupe at Angola, after getting ahead of the manager by borrowing money, and lit out for Chicago. There are a few professional men who have about as much honor as a dog, and it seems these fellows belong to that class. Mr. Robinson is a square man, always pays his debts, and there was no reason for these men treating him in this dirty manner.

Take Notice.

F. N. Wright & Co. will for the next 30 days sell building material for cash at lower figures than has ever been offered before in Auburn. Eighteen inch Star Shingles warranted at $3.00 per thousand, and every grade of lumber in proportion. Genoa White Lime $1.00 per bbl. This company has upwards of two millions of dry lumber in stock, and are bound to sell. Hard times have brought them to it.

Auburn, May 24th, 1877.

The following is from the Pierceton "Free Press," a spicy paper, just started, which indicates that Bro. Welch is not in immediate danger of starving to death:

On Thursday afternoon the members of the M. E. society gave a reception at the M. E. parsonage, for the late appointed pastor and lady who were taking charge of their new home. The affair was one of interest, the members all seemed to have one aim in view, to receive the pastor and lady into their society with a full and bountiful board spread.

Memorial day is to be observed in Auburn this year, and of course our citizens have been called upon to contribute their mite to the necessary expenses We regret to learn that Mr. Martin, the boss of the "Farmers" store, refused to give thereto. Farmers who trade with him will regret it, and at last he will regret it himself. It is a libel on our liberal-hearted farmers to call his establishment after them. It may have been all right in Ohio, where he came from, and where Hayes used to live, but our farmers are not of that penurious, stingy sort.

If it was possible for a man to be a little smaller and meaner than any who have been known to exist, it is he who will take a newspaper for a year or more, calmly and serenely peruse its pages week after week, then when his conscience (if he ever had one) dictates that it is time to pay for it, walks in the post-office and with complaisancy of a saint informs the postmaster that he need not put that paper in his box for he didn't propose to take it any longer. Not having the manhood of a midge, he adapts this method, instead of calling at the office (that he has passed fifty times during the year) and directing his subscription discontinued. —[Lagrange Register.

The latest dodge to swindle the farmers is as follows: A peddler with a pack on his back calls at a farm house and offers his goods so cheap that in spite of themselves the farmer and his family make purchases. The next day two men come along in a buggy in search of "stolen goods." They show a hand bill offering a large reward for the thief, and describe as a portion of the stolen property the very articles the farmer bought the day before. Honest like the farmer surrenders the goods and the men drive off in apparent hot pursuit of the thief. Of course the whole thing is a swindle, the peddler's part being to sell the goods and "get up the job." Look out for them.

Instrumental Music.

Prof. Morse, of the Conservatory of Music, of Fort Wayne, will visit Auburn, each Monday, commencing next week, for the purpose of giving lessons on the piano to those who desire instructions of that character. He would prefer scholars advanced in music, and will make very reasonable terms. Mr. M. has met with very good success in his management of the Conservatory and is regarded as a superior teacher in instrumental music. It will be a great advantage to have a teacher come here instead of going to Fort Wayne, at a great expense, not considering the time. Now is the time to take lessons.

There is a great need of an up town telegraph office here. As it is, you have to walk half a mile or more before you can send a telegram, and the business in this line would be more than doubled if there was any convenience. It would require but little expense to have a connecting line between the Saginaw and Eel River depots, via Court House, and our enterprising Recorder, an old operator, could attend to the business for the accommodation of the public. We hope our telegraph authorities will give this matter some attention. An attorney tells us he has had occasion to use this means of communication several times a day during court, but the facilities were such that he was forced to use the mail. Let us have an up town office.

Miss Adele Lenard, of Boston, long connected with the Kellogg Opera Troupe, was a guest of the Swineford House this week. A few of our friends gathered at our house Tuesday evening, and by request she appeared and sang to the delight of all present. What glorious music she can produce. It came rippling forth in great floods, and then died away in a soft bird-like tone that always captivates. She sang "The Last Rose of Summer," equal to Parepa and her "Comin' Tho' the Rye" was splendid. "The Butterfly," a most difficult piece, she executed with wonderful accuracy, and her trilling was simply perfect. "Under the Snow," a new piece was sang with a pathos and effect, that went right to the heart. It is seldom one hears such a voice, and such fine execution, and we regret there was not more present.

Memorial Day.

Every arrangement is being mode for the decoration ceremonies on Memorial Day. Col. R. S. Robertson, of Fort Wayne, will deliver the address, and no doubt several bands will be present from different parts of the country. The following is the Grand Summer Opening.

Remember that to-morrow, Friday, the opening of the pleasure resort at Pleasant Lake takes place, and extensive arrangements have been made for a good time. There is to be great blasts of music from silver bands, while magnificent gondoliers will dart across the beautifully blue sheet of water freighted with the fair and the lovely. Amid the deep green foilage of the park, the gay troubador will send forth his wild rich notes from his silver tongued instrument, and the click of the croquet-mallet will be drowned by merry peals of laughter. The heavy man of the Steuben Republican will make the earth tremble, while the handsome gentleman from Auburn (Weamer) will bow his acknowledgments like a Chinese Mandarin. It is to be a concentration of happy events, a conglomerate mass of joyful humanity. If you don't know what that is, go and be happy.

The railroad authorities inform us that a special train will leave Pleasant Lake at eleven o'clock at night, running south, stopping at all points, so that all going from this place can have a full enjoyment of the occasion. These arrangements have been made for the gratification of our people, and we hope they will show their appreciation by generally accepting them. Half fare rates on railroad.

The R. R. Movement.

There has been some interest awakened here in the red ribbon movement, yet but few of the old soaks have as yet been captured. This is Mr. Johnson's specialty—he wants the boys as he calls them, meaning the best element of society—those who get drunk, according to his logic. Several of these have capitulated. Father Griswold has surrendered. After fifty years of most terrible dissipation, rolling in gutters, abusing his family, and making the night hideous with his brawls, he has stepped forth and intends that the people hereafter shall know him as a temperance man by his red ribbon. For fifty years we have labored with that man to reclaim him, and now he surrenders to a stranger. Often have we taken him by the hand and led him home, through dark alleys, to shun the sight of men, while he joyfully sang, "we won't go home till morning," without even a note book. This result alone should compensate Mr. Johnson for his existence up to this date. It is an achievement greater than ever crowned the victorious warrior, a victory of mild faced peace. Then there is Bro. Johnson and Ervin, long have we prayed that they might not be lost to this black demon of intemperance. They have been gathered in, and now the cry from Macedonia comes for "Buffalo Bill." The military have been brought in to sustain the movement. Captain Morrow lectured Monday night and had a good attendance, but he thinks we are a little stiff-necked down here. Well we are neither very bad nor very good. We might be worse and we might be better. There are a few here who would be benefited if they would stop their dissipation, and if a red ribbon is basis enough for a cessation of the practice, adjure them to wear it. But we believe, that a pledge faithfully lived up to, demanding that no one so pledging, should treat or be treated by another, would eradicate the cause of intemperance more permanently, and more rapidly than any other. It is the social feature that cause young men to drink, and learns them to be drunkards, and not the love of liquor. But if the red ribbon will be [illegible] let it be general.

The Auburn COURIER and Waterloo Press were bulldozed last week in regard to our election. It would be safer, gentlemen, to get your information from the News, and then you will not be imposed upon. The bummer and bulldozer ticket of this place received 36 votes, and your correspondent is one of them.—[Garrett News.

We hope our correspondents will not take advantage of us because we are innocent and child-like. We want facts.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE ROCKFORD CALAMITY.

The city of Rockford, Ill., has been the scene of a heartrending calamity, resulting in the killing of a dozen people, and the maiming of as many more. The dome of the Winnebago county Court House, which had for some months been in course of erection and was nearing completion, fell with a terrific crash, burying a large number of workmen beneath the ruins. A correspondent gives the following account of the terrible affair: Just as the key stone was being placed in the dome of the main pavilion, the brick-work between the iron and the stone gave way, and the entire dome and the interior walls of the structure came crumbling down with a terrible crash that was heard by persons living nearly a mile distant from the scene of the accident. At the time of the accident there were from twenty to twenty-five men at work. The whole massive stone top of the dome fell with a terrific crash. A man named Timothy Flanagan, who was just putting in the keystone of the final cornice, jumped for the guy-rope of the big derrick in front, but, missing his aim, fell the distance of 120 feet to the earth, and was dashed to pieces. The mass of human beings, with the exception of four or five who jumped from the windows, fell inside the tottering walls, and were buried in the debris. At this time the whole structure looked as though it would fall, and those assembled were appalled, and knew not what to do. To go near enough the structure to rescue those mangled and bleeding in the ruins was hazardous in the extreme, but brave men, regardless of danger, went fearlessly to work before the dust cleared away, and commenced to assist to extricate the dead and dying. Men lay terribly mutilated beneath these rocks, shrieking for assistance that was only rendered at the risk of the rescuers' lives. One unfortunate man named Wm. Gloss was extricated, but one of his legs was left beneath a ponderous stone. He was lifted out upon the green sward, in front of the old Court House, and expired in great agony. A negro jumped from a window sixty feet from the ground, and, though seriously injured, will probably recover. The sights in and about the ruins were terrible. The anguish of the living was also heartrending. It was near the noon hour, and the workmen's wives and mothers were soon upon the spot. Eleven of the unfortunate workmen are known to have been killed, and ten or a dozen more mangled in varying shades of ghastliness. The damage to the building is estimated at $60,000 to $65,000.

THE EAST.

THE great Pennsylvania coal monopolies are at war, and the consumers are or should be happy. An important reduction in prices has been announced by some of the belligerents.

A FIRE in Brooklyn, last Sunday, destroyed $400,000 worth of property, principally oil.

THE President and Mrs. Hayes, Secretaries Evarts, Schurz and Devens, Gen. Sherman, and several other distinguished officials, visited New York last week, at the invitation of the Chamber of Commerce, for the purpose of attending the 109th annual banquet of that institution.

ALBERT STEINWAY, of the firm of Steinway & Sons, piano manufacturers, died the other day in New York city.....The Laurel Manufacturing Company, with offices located in Baltimore, has collapsed. Liabilities $300,000....The coal companies of Pennsylvania have determined to suspend mining operations for two months....The Clinton steam lumber mills and village on the Ogdensburgh and Lake Champlain railroad, in Clinton county, N. Y., were burned on Monday afternoon. Over fifty good dwelling-houses were burned, comprising the whole village, except two frame and three poor log structures. Barns, stables, stores, telegraph and railroad offices, schoolhouse and mills were all burned, with considerable live stock. Thirty thousand logs and a large stock of manufactured lumber were burned. Over thirty inhabited dwellings and five mills, eight miles below, were burned about the same time. Six hundred poor people are rendered homeless by these two fires. Loss $500,000.

A STATUE of Fitz-Greene Halleck, the poet, has been unveiled in Central Park, New York. ....Five children of Frank Dunnegal, a railroad employe at Little Hook, Cortland county, N. Y., were burned to death last week. The eldest was 9 years old. Dunnegal and his wife were a short distance from the house when they discovered the fire, and made every effort to rescue the children, but the flames had gained too much headway. The cries of the little ones calling for help could be distinctly heard by the parents....A new white whale has just arrived at New York, and taken up his quarters in the aquarium....The recent terrible forest fires in New York, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Vermont have destroyed millions of dollars' worth of property, and rendered hundreds of people homeless. An immense area of woodland was burned over, and the loss of timber alone is very great. It is believed that many persons have lost their lives while trying to save their homes.

THE SOUTH.

MISS CHISOLM, who was recently shot while defending her father, Judge Chisolm, against the attack of a mob in Kemper county, Miss., has since died of her wounds....The South Carolina Legislature has elected Associate Justice A. J. Willard Chief Justice of the State Supreme Court.

J. H. REVES, a Collector of Internal Revenue in the Fifth District of Virginia, telegraphs to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that Collector Joslyn and Deputy Marshal Austin and three others have been shot in Lee county, Va., while in the discharge of their duty. One was mortally wounded....W. C. D. Whips, the proprietor of the Willard Hotel, Louisville, Ky., who some time ago shot and killed his chief clerk, has been tried and acquitted.

THE WEST.

PROF. RILEY, Chief of the National Entomological Commission, has just closed a three weeks' examination in Texas and Kansas of the grasshoppers, and says he finds the favorable reports as to there being no danger from the ravages this year in the main warranted.

THIRTY-ONE counties in Kansas report encouraging crop prospects. More land is under cultivation than last year, and cereals promise a heavy yield....New military posts are to be established at the mouths of the Big Horn and Tongue rivers, in the far West. The buildings will be constructed of hewn logs, matched and lined with paper-board.

THE Government has seized the premises of one of the largest distilleries in Chicago, that of the Illinois Distilling Company, for an alleged violation of the revenue law in the surreptitious filling of barrels which had been previously gauged when a little less than full....The Illinois Legislature has appropriated $50,000 to complete the monument to Stephen A. Douglas, the foundation of which was laid in Chicago some fifteen years ago.... Chicago elevators, as per official figures, contain 1,796,400 bushels of wheat; 3,869,444 bushels of corn; 158,658 bushels of oats; 166,831 bushels of rye; and 372,474 bushels of barley—making a total of 6,363,807 bushels, against 2,787,305 bushels at this period last year.

ADVICES from the Spotted Tail agency state that Lieut. Clark, one of Crook's staff, enlisted Crazy Horse and fifteen head men of his band. The enlistment was made for the better control of the Indians at the agencies. They swore with uplifted hands to be true and faithful to the Government and obey all orders. Three prominent chiefs have been enlisted as sergeants to Spotted Tail, Red Cloud and Crazy Horse....M. C. Page, United States District Attorney for Montana, was recently drowned while attempting to ford a swollen stream in that Territory....Ohio and Illinois, by legislative enactment, have made silver coin a legal tender for the payment of all debts....The Indiana Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows has just held its semi-annual session at Indianapolis. Reports show 563 effective lodges in the State, with a membership of over 26,000. The amount paid for relief and charity for six months is $40,000. The resources of the lodges are over $1,500,000.

THE freight-house and elevator of the Green Bay and Minnesota railroad, at Winona, Minn., have been destroyed by fire. Loss, $100,000. ....Doe's saw-mill, warehouse and lumber-yard, at Oshkosh, Wis., have been burned. The loss is estimated at $60,000.

WASHINGTON.

ROBERT R. CRITTENDEN has been appointed United States Marshal for Kentucky....The President says it will be the policy of the administration to thoroughly revise the Consular system, and, whenever vacancies occur, to choose for the new appointees persons especially qualified to represent commercial interests.

THE national capital has been convulsed with indignation against United States Marshal Fred Douglass, on account of a lecture delivered by him in Baltimore on the social peculiarities of the people of Washington. The press and many of the citizens clamor for the removal of Douglass....In conversation with a Washington correspondent, the other day, Secretary Sherman expressed a confident expectation that the Government will be able to resume specie payment, according to law, on the 1st of January, 1879, if no unfavorable legislation on the part of Congress intervenes. The business of the country, in the Secretary's opinion, is already down to a specie basis, and it would certainly be, as he says, criminal to postpone the day of resumption and thus again unsettle values and disturb the current of trade. The Secretary intends to sell bonds for coin from time to time, as occasion offers, and thus strengthen the gold reserve of the treasury, or employ it in the purchasing of greenbacks.

THE indications are, so far, that the estimates of the Internal Revenue Bureau of $120,000,000 receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30 will be fully realized....It is reported that Secretary Evarts has sent a peremptory note to the Mexicans that they must put a stop to the raids of their brigands upon the property of people in Texas. If this is not done, orders will be given to the commander of the forces on the Rio Grande to pursue and capture the thieves and their plunder wherever they may be found.

IT is stated that the reorganization of the Consular service will immediately begin. Efficient officers will not be removed. Three important principles have been agreed upon as the basis of this reformation: 1. Secretary Evarts will endeavor to fill all the important commercial Consulates with men of commercial experience. 2. In selecting Consuls for Oriental points, where judicial duties are to be performed, only educated lawyers will be appointed. 3. It will be considered an essential qualification that Consuls shall speak the language of the country in which they are stationed.

THE Pension Bureau has now on its files nearly 90,000 unadjudicated pension cases, besides some 60,000 so-called rejected cases, about 2,000 of which annually require to be reopened on the presentation of additional evidence. Congress will, at its next session, be asked for a sufficient clerical force to bring up the present applications and secure prompt attention to claims presented in future.

GENERAL.

GEN. PORFIRIO DIAZ has been inaugurated President of Mexico. He declares he will occupy the office but one term....The story is revived of an organization of filibusters for the capture of Sonora, and that the capital necessary to fit out three expeditions is secured. The expeditions, so goes the story, start from Yuma, San Francisco and El Paso—the first by land, the second by water, to Guaymas; these to reinforce the third in Sonora.... The British Columbians are greatly disturbed by the prospect of war with Russia, knowing that a powerful Russian fleet is within four days' sail of their harbors....The reply of the State Department to the formal notification by Turkey of the existence of a state of war between that power and Russia is to the effect that the United States will occupy a strictly neutral position toward the belligerents. A similar reply will be furnished Russia.

A TRAIN of nineteen freight cars, loaded with tea and silks valued at $500,000, recently made the run from San Francisco to New York, via Chicago, in less than ten days, beating by several hours the quick trip of ten days and nine hours made some time ago over the southern route....Silver coin may be obtained without the expense of transportation upon deposit of notes or fractional currency with any United States Assistant Treasurer or national bank depository, or national-bank notes may be sent to the United States Treasurer free of expense and silver will be returned from the mint therefor. Silver, however, can be sent only in multiples of $1,000, and remittances and deposits should be made in like sums.... The New York Canal Board have decided upon a material reduction of the tolls on the canals of that State. This is good news for the West.

THE American Tract Society has just held its fifty-second anniversary exercises in the city of New York. From the annual report we get the following summary of its labors during the past year: Receipts, $441,198; expenditures, $441,119; aggregate circulation of papers published by the society during the year, 6,003,000 copies. Two hundred and nine colporteurs were employed, who addressed 6,337 religious meetings, made 152,883 family visits, and prayed with 98,370 families. The work in foreign lands is represented as satisfactory.... Fires: At Stevens Point, Wis., loss $100,000; East Saginaw, Mich., $30,000; Rochester, N. Y., $100,000; in Gold street, New York city, $50,000....Disastrous forest fires have been raging in Northern New York and Southern Canada. Large areas of valuable timber and several villages have been burned.

THE town of St. Stephens, New Brunswick, has been visited by a disastrous conflagration. One-half the business portion of the town was swept away. The loss is estimated at half a million dollars....At Port Stanley, Ontario, a few days ago, a tidal wave five feet high came rushing ashore on Lake Erie, accompanied by a loud, hissing noise. The wave lasted but a few minutes, and as quickly receded, followed at intervals for an hour by smaller waves a foot or more in height. There was very little wind at the time. The lake was almost perfectly calm.

THE town of Woodstock, N. B., has been visited by a disastrous conflagration. Over sixty buildings in the best part of the town were burned. The loss is estimated at $300,000. .. Mr. P. T. Barnum, the showman, proposes to undertake the recovery of little Charlie Ross, and with this object in view will offer a reward of $10,000. He has made arrangements also, it is understood, to exhibit the adventurous young fellow in case he is recovered, Mr. Christian Ross, the father, having consented to the scheme.... The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States is in session in Chicago. Rev. James Eells, of San Francisco, acts as Moderator. The attendance is quite large....Gen. Grant and family sailed from Philadelphia for Liverpool, on the 17th of May, the departure of the ex-President being attended with elaborate demonstrations of respect on the part of the people of Philadelphia.

THE TURCO-RUSSIAN WAR.

THERE is a lull in the Asiatic campaign, although it is a quiet which precedes the storm. The Russians are awaiting the arrival of reinforcements, having been unsuccessful in attempting to force the Soganlu pass....The Russians attempted to force a passage of the Danube at Reni, and threw a bridge across that stream. They were repulsed, according to Turkish advices, with the loss of a large number in killed, wounded and captured. The bridge was also destroyed....Formidable works for the defense of Constantinople are to be constructed by the inhabitants....In an engagement between a large Turkish iron-clad and a Russian battery at Ibrail, on the Danube, the iron-clad was struck with a shell, and immediately blew up and sunk, together with her commander, Hassan Bey, and crew of 300 men....A force resembling the German landwehr is to be called out in Russia for the defense of the shores of the Baltic and Black sea....The Russian Minister of Marine has declared the Turkish blockade of the Black sea insufficient, Russian vessels having been able to leave Nicolaieff.

ONE man only of the 300 on board escaped from the Turkish monitor sunk at Ibrail, on the Danube....It is reported that a very feverish and uneasy feeling pervades all classes at Constantinople. The Porte is said to be anxious about the safety of the large consignments of arms and ammunition still to be shipped from New York, or already on the way, and angry with the United States Government for permitting the Russian squadron to remain so long in American waters.... An official Constantinople dispatch says the Russians having attacked in great force the position occupied by the vanguard of the Turkish auxiliary troops in the vicinity of Batoum, an engagement ensued, lasting eight and one-half hours, resulting in the complete rout of the Russians, who lost 4,000 men. The Turkish loss is represented as inconsiderable....The Bey of Tunis, summoned by the Sultan to send a contingent, excused himself on the plea of financial inability, but his subjects may join the Turks as volunteers.

THE cable reports a heavy engagement at Batoum, on the southeastern shore of the Black sea, of which the following brief particulars are furnished: The Russians made a furious attack upon the heights defending Batoum on the land side, occupied by Bashi-Bazouks. The Ottoman troops were intrenched and opened a terrible and well-sustained fire of cannon and musketry, which literally mowed the Russians down in swaths. They fell by scores and hundreds on the plain below the Turkish positions. During their attempts to make way against this fire, a body of Turkish horse and foot, taking advantage of a thick forest, broke forth upon the flank of the Russian column, and effected great slaughter. The battle lasted eight hours. The Russians lost 4,000 in killed and wounded, and several pieces of artillery....Advices from the seat of war in Roumania to the 15th state that the Russians were moving down the Danube in three columns, with the intention of effecting a crossing at points west of Rustchuk, the evident intention being to isolate the large Turkish force about Widin, and to secure the roads leading through the western passes of the Balkans.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch says the Turkish squadron bombarded the fortified port of Sukum Kaleh, on the Black sea, in Asia. A body of troops landed who set the Russians at defiance, and remained masters of the position, the population of the neighborhood joining.

IN Asia Minor the snow is still deep on the ground, retarding military operations....The insurrection in the Caucasus is rapidly gaining ground....It is again reported that Austria will certainly occupy Servia....A dispatch from Bucharest, in Roumania, after recording the visit of Grand Duke Nicholas to that city, says: "The campaign will now proceed according to the original programme, the Roumanian army remaining on the defensive within its own territory; the Russians crossing the Danube at eight points simultaneously, and pressing forward toward the Balkans with all possible rapidity, leaving behind in Bulgaria the civil officials charged with the reorganization of the institutions."

A COLUMN of Turkish troops will be sent against the Herzegovinian insurgents....Persia has declared her intention not to join Russia. ....The Russian army corps at Odessa has been ordered to the Crimea to prevent the spread of the Tartar insurrection....The Roumanian Government has published a note stating it can no longer doubt it is at war with Turkey by the fault of Turkey, and it must take measures accordingly....Reports from Turkish sources represent that the Circassians have captured one or two unimportant Russian towns in their country on the Black sea, and driven out the garrisons. Arms have been supplied to the insurgents by the Turkish commander. Insurrectionary bands are also threatening the rear of the Russians operating against Batoum....The renewal of the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina has induced great numbers of the Christian people in those provinces to take refuge in the Austrian dominions, and thousands of them are reported to be in a starving condition in Dalmatia.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

THE Sultan has tendered his grateful thanks to the English Government for the stand taken by Lord Derby in his reply to the Russian circular....For his share in the destruction of the Vendome column, Courbet, the painter and Communist, agrees to pay the $60,000 fine imposed upon him in annual installments of $2,000, and the Paris court has agreed to accept the payment in that way.

M. PICARD, the well-known French statesman, is dead....Count Andrassy has addressed a circular to Austria's representatives abroad announcing that any declaration of independence by Roumania will be treated by Austria as null and void....The new French Minister has been received by the Emperor of Germany at Berlin with the usual formalities, and charged to convey to the Paris Government assurance of the Emperor's good will toward France.

MR. GLADSTONE'S resolutions have been defeated in the British House of Commons by a vote of 354 to 223. It was not expected that the resolutions would pass, but the Liberals have accomplished their purpose and secured a Parliamentary victory in changing the evidently settled policy of the Cabinet to precipitate a collision with Russia, and in bringing about a thorough discussion of England's interests and England's duties.

THE Greeks of Thessaly are in revolt, and an engagement has taken place at Armyros, on the Gulf of Volo....An insurrection against the Diaz Government has broken out in the state of Coahuila, Mexico.

A CABLE dispatch says the American officers in the service of the Khedive have refused to bear arms against Russia. They will remain in Egypt....A Ministerial crisis is reported in France. In consequence of a difference with President MacMahon, Jules Simon, Minister of the Interior, tendered his resignation, which was accepted. A majority of the Cabinet took sides with M. Simon and followed him into retirement. There was considerable excitement at the French capital in consequence of the rupture....The Pope is again reported to be failing, and his early death is anticipated.

THE immediate cause of the Cabinet rupture in France was the non-participation by M. Simon in a debate in the Chamber of Deputies on the repeal of the Press law. President MacMahon had expected that M. Simon would present the reasons which, in the opinion of the Government, would have prevented the repeal of the law, and, having failed to do so, MacMahon sent him a sharp letter, intimating, among other things, that he did not have sufficient influence to assert his views successfully. Thereupon M. Simon and all the other members of the Cabinet, with the exception of the Minister of War tendered their resignations. A new Cabinet was immediately appointed, as follows: Duc de Broglie, President of the Council and Minister of Justice; De Fourton, Minister of the Interior; Eugene Caillaux, Minister of Finance; Auguste Paris, Minister of Public Works; Vicomte De Meux, Minister of Agriculture; Brunet, Minister of Public Instruction. This ministerial crisis has been productive of a good deal of excitement in Paris and throughout France, and by some the situation is regarded as extremely grave. The Chamber of Deputies has adopted a resolution, by a large majority, declaring that "the Chamber will only place confidence in a Cabinet free to be resolved to govern in accordance with Republican principles, which alone can secure order and prosperity." It is feared, unless the President backs down and responds to the policy of the House, France will drift into revolution and civil war. MacMahon expresses a determination to maintain a pacific policy with all the powers, and to firmly repress any Ultramontane demonstrations.

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

THE United States has been a heavy buyer of silver in Europe this spring. The large sales of the metal by Germany lowered the price so that it could be bought cheaper in Europe than in Nevada.

THE annual report by the Austrian Board of Trade of the commerce of that country for 1876 shows a decrease in imports amounting to about 6 per cent., and an increase in exports of a little more than 2 per cent.

THE overland movement of coffee from California ports has fallen off wonderfully within three years. In 1874, [illegible] pounds were sent East from San Francisco; in 1875, 1,281,000 pounds, and in 1876 only 106,000.

THE Bureau of Statistics has published a statement showing that the exports of oleomargarine or butterine from New York during the seven months ending March 31 amounted to 3,549,829 pounds, with a value of $481,747, of which 2,352,250 pounds was shipped to France and 991,329 to Great Britain.

THE Angora goats from Asia have been introduced into Texas very largely within the last few years. One man now has about 1,000 crossed with the Mexican goat. The hair, or wool, is long, and will sell for from 75 cents to $1 a pound; the skin or hide makes the morocco leather and the kid glove; the suet is the best in the world, and the meat of the young goat is tender and toothsome. On the whole the goat business in Texas and Mexico promises to be a great feature of their future.

FRANCE, during the last four years, has been accumulating a large stock of gold and silver preparatory to a resumption of specie payments by the Bank of France. The average gain in specie of that institution has been about $55,000,000 a year, one-third of which has been silver. The declared imports and exports of gold and silver of the republic for the first two months of the present fiscal year show a gain of $19,777,400 in gold and $3,594,570 in silver, about one-half of which went into the bank.

THE annual meeting of the Silk Association of America was held in New York, a few days ago. The annual report shows the total products last year were 1,284,860 pounds, valued at $26,563,103. Notwithstanding all the embarrassments under which the manufacturer has labored, the total consumption of raw silk in the United States for the calendar year 1876 was within 150,000 pounds—about 10 per cent.—of that of 1875, which was the year of the largest consumption of raw silk on record. In the city of Paterson alone the sum paid to operatives in silk factories was $2,000,000.

The Revival in Business.

The month of April was one of marked revival in business. The transactions reported were not only larger than those of April, 1876, by nearly 19 per cent., a very handsome gain, but even exceeded those of January, usually the month of larger transactions than any other in the year. Our returns are from sixteen clearing-houses, embracing 355 banks, and from Cincinnati, Kansas City, Columbus, and Worcester are for the exact months, and from the other cities are for the four weeks ending April 28 in each year. The returns, compared with those for the corresponding time in 1876, are as follows:

	1877.	1876.
New York	$1,771,792,990	$1,476,996,074
Boston	182,723,249	170,436,828
Philadelphia	154,345,716	181,873,431
Chicago	84,970,831	74,512,578
Cincinnati	50,369,712	51,102,139
Baltimore	43,150,082	40,925,879
St. Louis	41,996,810	41,601,932
New Orleans	33,684,561	31,314,162
San Francisco	29,620,000	50,437,270
Pittsburgh	19,347,427	19,121,760
Louisville	19,150,871	17,893,282
Milwaukee	18,891,681	16,493,568
Cleveland	5,519,311	....
Kansas City	5,276,327	4,605,802
Columbus	2,600,149	2,305,244
Worcester	1,869,227	2,047,154
Total	$2,465,246,931
Thirteen cities	$2,459,727,620	$2,181,735,902

The aggregate average daily was about $102,000,000 in January, $101,000,000 in February, $93,000,000 in March, and $103,000,000 in April. Last year the average rapidly declined both in March and April. But for the remarkable decline at San Francisco, which reflects the great prostration of business and decline in values on the Pacific coast this season, and at Philadelphia, which is mainly due to the unusual activity connected with the Centennial last year, the record would be one of almost universal improvement. Eleven cities out of fifteen share in the gains; Cleveland kept no record last year, and the losses at Cincinnati and Worcester are small.—The Public (New York).

Decrease of the Public Debt Since 1869.

A statement of the reduction of the national debt, issued by the Treasury Department, shows that the debt of the United States, including accrued interest thereon, less cash in the treasury on the 1st of March, 1869, was $2,525,463,260.01. From March 1 to the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1869, the decrease was $36,460,779.43, and for each successive year the decrease was as follows:

June 30, 1870	$ 102,043,880.84
June 30, 1871	94,327,784.84
June 30, 1872	100,544,491.28
June 30, 1873	43,657,639.05
June 30, 1874	4,730,472.41
June 30, 1875	14,399,514.84
June 30, 1876	29,249,381.33
April 30, 1877	29,060,727.79
Total reduction from March 1, 1869, to April 30, 1877	$ 455,104,642.81
Total debt on May 1, 1877	2,191,566,087.29

During the ninety-eight months from March 1, 1869, to May 1, 1877, the debt has increased ten times, as follows:

December, 1872	$1,694,907.80
January, 1873	406,243.18
October, 1873	3,089,578.49
November, 1873	9,026,576.94
December, 1873	8,453,272.71
December, 1874	3,659,967.98
January, 1875	1,397,870.27
December, 1875	1,915,062.70
November, 1876	457,662.64
December, 1876	3,866,142.89

The largest decrease during any one month was in June, 1870, the decrease then being $20,203,772.04.—New York Tribune.

The English Drift Towards War.

The tenor of the dispatches clearly indicates the steady drift of England into war with Russia, notwithstanding the very cautious and conservative declaration of the Home Secretary in the Gladstone debate, to the effect that the Government will maintain the strictest neutrality between the contending powers, while it maintains its own interests, and is conscious of its own earnest desire for peace. Assuming that England goes into this war, she will not care to go into it alone. It is not her custom. She fights with money, and subsidies, and alliances. She has never carried on war alone in modern times. She has never made a square stand-up fight like that between France and Germany. She will at once seek an ally, and that ally will be Austria, whom she will attempt to drag into the conflict.

The Home of Jefferson.

As the traveler approaches the home of Thomas Jefferson, at Monticello, he passes through a wooded country, near the summit of one of the Blue Ridge peaks, and within easy view is seen the old graveyard with its dilapidated brick wall. Nearly all the Jeffersons are buried there. A common stone, about five feet high, marks the grave of the author of the Declaration. "Born April 2, 1743, O. S.; died July 4, 1826," is all that can be seen. Time has worn away the inscription, "Author of the Declaration of Independence, of the Statute of Virginia, and founder of the University of Virginia." A short distance away stands the old home, surrounded by a grove of ancient trees. The aristocratic coach that he rode in from New York to Philadelphia stands in the back porch, with its tires fallen off and a general appearance of long decay. The view from the doorway of the house is grand. At the foot of the peak flows the Rivanna river; Charlotteville and the university lie beyond; to the north stretches away the Blue Ridge, and cultivated fields and country homes are seen everywhere. Here Mr. Jefferson lived in retirement from 1809 until his death in 1826. The house is much decayed and sadly in need of repairs; nothing has been done to it since the war began. It was once owned and cared for by Capt. Levy, of the United States navy, and by his will left to the Government, with an endowment fund for an agricultural school. It was claimed, for some reason, that the will was void. The case got into the courts, and a writ of partition was granted to the heirs. The estate passed into the hands of commissioners, and is still undivided. Meanwhile the home of Jefferson is rotting away for want of care; in a few years more it will be unfit for man to dwell in, and snakes and birds, which live in the mountains, will find their way into its rooms.

Lively Scene in a Printing-Office.

At the Governor's Guards hop, Brice B. Smith, a printer in the News job office, made objections to the floor managers against a couple of ladies, Mrs. Thompson and Miss Morris, being allowed to dance, and Lieut. S. A. Shepperd, the Chairman of the floor managers, told the ladies they could not dance. After some parleying, the women left. Mrs. Thompson (who is separated from her husband) was told by some one that Smith had asserted positive personal knowledge of her character, and she determined to chastise him. She nursed her wrath to keep it warm till Saturday afternoon, when she gave it vent by purchasing two rawhides, and, accompanied by Miss Morris and a waiter named Henry Powers, they sought the job room of the News, and commenced to vindicate her character by laying on Smith vigorously with the rawhide. The assailed printer fired off a galley of leaded matter into her face, when Powers attempted to interfere, and got a head put on him with the galley. Mrs. Thompson renewed the assault, and Smith took her a chug under the chin and sent her to grass. About this time Mr. Byers, accompanied by the city editor and business manager, appeared on the scene, and the amazed printers rallied and separated the contestants. The only damage sustained by Smith, except what was done to his reputation, was a small welt or two across his face.—Atchison (Kan.) Champion.

A Veteran Official.

The "old reliable" of the Department of State is Assistant Secretary William Hunter. He entered the Department of State as translator in 1829, was promoted to be chief clerk in 1852, and was promoted to be Assistant Secretary in 1866. In less than two years he will have performed fifty years of continuous service, under such statesmen as Webster, Clay, Livingston, McLane, Everett, Cass, Seward and Fish, and many of the state papers for which they have received praise were drafted by him. He is in fact a walking encyclopedia of our diplomatic and consular relations, and his personal recollections, if he would but publish them, would perfect that chapter of our national history. That he is able, useful, industrious, honest, and, above all, discreet, is proven by his having been retained in place through so many political "rotations."—Washington Letter.

Curious Clock.

A curious clock has recently been invented by M. Cabot, of Paris. It has two apparently free hands, placed in the center of a double pane, the two sheets of glass composing which are held in an ornamental frame. The clock is operated by concealed mechanism in the frame, which once a minute causes a slight and nearly invisible motion of one of the glasses. This causes the movement of the minute hand, and a minute gearing concealed in the pivot of the latter actuates the hour hand.

Swallowed Up by a River of Fire.

A man named Wm. Blackburn met with a terrible death on the works of the Airside Hematite Iron Company, Leeds. He had gone to sleep on some slag at the foot of a tip, and before he was noticed a mass of red-hot slag was shot down. He was observed to look up at the moment of tipping, but before he could effect his escape he was overwhelmed by an avalanche of incandescent metal, and burned to death. His skeleton, with a few fragments of roasted flesh still adhering to the bones, was dug out soon afterward.

Cut off With a Thousand a Year.

The late Rowland H. Macy, of New York, left property estimated to be worth $500,000. His only son is cut off with an allowance of $1,000 per annum, owing to bad habits and a passion for strong drink. The young man is 29 years of age, and has never contributed anything to his own support. The father directs that, if he contests the will, even the $1,000 per annum be withheld from him.

A SEA-SERPENT CAPTURED.

A Mighty Monster of the Deep Appears at a Town in Scotland—He is Attacked and Driven Ashore by a Party of Volunteers.

Late foreign papers publish a circumstantial narrative by a resident at Oban, Scotland, from which it appears the sea-serpent has been actually captured at that place. The correspondent writes: "A most extraordinary event has occurred here—the stranding and capture of the veritable sea-serpent in front of the Caledonian Hotel, Oban. About 4 o'clock yesterday, an animal or fish of gigantic size was seen sporting in the bay near Heather island. It was of the serpent species, carrying its head fully twenty-five feet above the water. A number of boats were soon launched and proceeded to the bay, the crews armed with such weapons as could be got handy. They headed the monster, and some of the boats were within thirty yards of it, when it suddenly sprang half a length out of water and made for the open sea. A random fire from several volunteers with rifles seemed to have no effect on it. The boats ranged across the entrance of the bay, and, by screams and shouts turned the monster's course, and it headed directly for the breast-wall of the Great Western Hotel. One boat had a most narrow escape, the animal actually rubbing against it.

A little past 6 the monster took the ground on the beach in front of the Caledonian Hotel in George street, and his proportions were now fully visible. In his frantic exertions with his tail sweeping the beach no one dared approach. The stones were flying in all directions, one seriously injuring a man called Baldy Barrow, and another breaking the window of the Commercial Bank. A party of volunteers under Lieut. David Menzies now assembled and fired volley after volley into the neck, according to the directions of Dr. Campbell, who did not wish, for scientific reasons that the configuration of the head should be damaged. As there was a bright moon this continued till nearly 10 o'clock, when Mr. Stevens, of the Commercial Bank, waded in and fixed a strong rope to the animal's head, and by the exertions of some seventy folk it was dragged above high-water mark. Its exact appearance is as follows: Extreme length 101 feet; the thickest part about twenty-five feet from the head, which is eleven feet in circumference. At this part is fixed a pair of fins four feet long by nearly seven feet across. At the sides further back is a long dorsal fin extending for at least twelve or thirteen feet and five feet high in front, tapering to one foot. The tail is more of a flattened termination to the body proper than anything else. The eyes are very small in proportion and elongated, and gills of the length of two and a half feet behind. There are no external ears. Great excitement is created, and the country people are flocking in to view it.

National Bank Circulation.

From a statement by the Comptroller of the Currency it appears that the whole amount of additional circulation issued to national banks from June 20, 1874, to May 1, 1877, was $30,366,495. The amount of legal tenders deposited in the treasury during the same time to retire bank circulation was $69,993,547. This shows a net decrease of $39,627,052 in the bank circulation, accomplished, or in process of accomplishment. Of the additional issues Massachusetts banks received the largest amount, $7,371,915; New York banks next, $4,931,970, and Pennsylvania next, $4,063,480. These three States received more than one-half of the whole. Only six States received more than one million each, the three not already mentioned being Kentucky, Ohio, and Indiana. The banks of New York deposited $15,309,166 to retire circulation, being nearly three times as much as either Massachusetts or Pennsylvania, deposited. Illinois banks deposited $6,586,560, or more than either Massachusetts or Pensylvania, while they called for only $870,975 of additional circulation. The Western States generally surrendered more and took out less than the Eastern States in proportion to the amount previously held by them respectively.

ON the 7th of April a man was put up and sold at public auction to the highest bidder in St. Francois county, Mo. He was convicted of vagrancy, and the term for which he was sold was six months.

THE WAR.

Religious Character of the Russo-Turkish Struggle.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

The London Times, commenting upon the opening of hostilities, says: "Once more we behold the strange phenomenon of a religious war, which is likely to be as fanatical and relentless as any recorded in history. It will also have the characteristic that the Mohammedan stands more on a level with his adversary than has ever been known in later ages." The statement of the Times is worthy of some consideration, the more especially as nearly every one has come to look at this war as a political one. It is, on the other hand, the only war that may be called religious since the last Russian war in Turkey. The war commenced as a religious one, but its character was changed when Turkey's allies entered upon the scene. Russia commenced the war for religious reasons; England and France fought Russia for political reasons. In all the controversies that have characterized the Russo-Turkish complication since the outbreak of the Herzegovina revolt a year ago, the religious question has been uppermost. Of course there has been mixed with it a motive of ambition, but the declaration of war disavows it. Nowhere in the manifesto does it appear; on the other hand, Russia clearly and succinctly declares the object of the war to be the amelioration of the condition of the Sclavic Christians. The conference of the powers at Constantinople hinged upon it. It characterized the protocol. The ultimatum of the powers to the Porte made no demand of the Turks that they should cede territory or give up political control. They only asked that the Christian subjects of the Porte should be protected in their religious rights and moral privileges; that they should not be robbed, plundered, overtaxed, tortured, murdered and treated with that infamy and cruelty that characterized the dark ages. It is to all intents and purposes a struggle of the fanaticism of the Greek Church with the fanaticism of the Mussulman.

A war of this kind must of necessity be a cruel and relentless one, characterized by extremes on each side. The religious motive is the most powerful of human emotions that can actuate a nation, and it is especially powerful in such a nation as Russia, where education is not general, and where there is no division of religious thought. In this country, for instance, there could not be such a war, owing to the spread of general intelligence and the multitude of other subjects to occupy attention. In Russia, however, the absorbing idea is not democracy, republicanism, speculative philosophy, or education, but religious dogmas. The priest furnishes the knowledge. The people, the press, and the Government are swayed by this powerful force. The Russian Emperor did not want to go into the war. He was willing to accept the smallest terms of religious guarantees; but when the Porte refused to allow of any outside interference in its internal affairs, then the religious sympathies of the Russian people with their oppressed brethren impelled the Government to declare war. The Turks themselves, also, are actuated by the religious idea, as they have been in every war they have waged since they entered and established their Asiatic camp in Europe. Every motive and action centers in the fanaticism of the Mohammedan theocracy. They brought with them into Europe a religious fanaticism characterized by savagery, brutal tyranny, and the lowest and most disgusting vices of life, and they have preserved these qualities in their horrible monstrosity to this day. When we speak, therefore, of a war between the cross and the crescent, it means a religious crusade, a collision of religious ideas; in which even political results will be fought for in the name of religion.

The Black Sea.

The Black sea, which is becoming the scene of stirring events in the Russo-Turkish war, is a remarkable body of water. It is about seven hundred miles long in its longest direction, and has an extreme width of about three hundred and eighty miles, being three-fourths longer than Lake Superior and more than twice as wide. Its depth is from four to forty-eight fathoms near shore, but in the middle no soundings have been found at one hundred and sixty fathoms. The greatest depth of Lake Superior is two hundred fathoms. The Black sea is not, like our lakes, a fresh-water sea, but on the other hand it contains one-seventh less salt than ocean water, and is held to receive one-third the running water of Europe. The puzzle is, what becomes of all this fresh water, and how the Black sea retains its saltness. The sea is tideless. There is no perceptible current toward the Mediterranean. It has the same level as the Sea of Marmora. The outlet by the Bosphorus, even were there a strong current, would be insufficient to discharge the immense volumes of water constantly pouring into the inland sea, and it scarcely seems credible that the evaporation is sufficient to carry off the surplus water. Like our own lakes, it is subject to frequent storms, but navigation is not perilous, and an extensive steam navigation is carried on. There are several islands near the mouth of the Danube, but the sea is singularly free from rocks and shoals. The Sea of Azov, which is connected with the Black sea by the narrow strait of Yenikale, is much smaller, being only about one hundred and sixty-eight miles long and eighty broad. Its waters are fresh and abound with fish, but are very shallow, and fall off toward the west into huge marshes, which have been aptly named the Putrid sea. It is of comparatively little importance for purposes of navigation, though it has several ports and roadsteads.

Youthful Criminals.

Boy criminals are just now bringing themselves into public notice. In Fredericksburg, Va., James Flinch, aged 11, deliberately shot and killed a playfellow who reproved him for swearing. In New Orleans, Nathan Boyd, aged 8, purposely set fire to a house out of revenge for being whipped. In San Francisco, Arthur Bennett, aged 14, nearly killed his sister by stabbing her. In Buffalo, Robert Aikens, aged 10, mortally wounded another boy with an ax.

The Flag of the Prophet.

What is this flag of the Prophet, around which the turbaned, "the faithful," are called upon to rally? The best authorities state that it was the turban of the Koreish, captured by Mohammed. A black flag was, however, soon substituted in its place, consisting of the curtain that had hung before the door of Ayeshah, the favorite wife of the Prophet, whose affection for her was so strong that he was wont to say that she would be the first of his wives to whom the gates of Paradise would be open. The Sanjak-Sherif is regarded by the Mohammedans as their most sacred relic. It first came into the possession of the followers of Omar, the second Caliph of the Moslems, and generally regarded as founder of the Mohammedan power, as from a mere sect he raised it to the rank of a conquering nation, and left to his successor an empire greater than that which Alexander of Macedon had made and ruled in the olden time. It was this Omar who assumed the title of "Commander of the Faithful" (Emir-al-mumenin), by which, as the readers of the "Arabian Nights' Entertainments" will remember, the Caliph Haroun-al-Raschid, who was contemporary with Charlemagne, was always addressed. The flag of the Prophet passed from the followers of Omar at Damascus into the hands of the conquering Abbasides, in the middle of the eighth century; next into those of the Caliphs of Bagdad and Kahira. It was brought into Europe toward the close of the sixteenth century by Sultan Amurath III., with whom Queen Elizabeth made a treaty of commerce in 1579. It was deposited in Constantinople, where, covered with forty-two wrappings of silk, it was deposited in a chapel in the interior of the seraglio, where it is perpetually guarded by several emirs with constant prayers. It is known, however, that the banner unfolded by the Moslems at the beginning of a war, and likewise carefully preserved, is not the same as the identical flag which Mohammed had made out of the white turban of the Koreish. The Moslems believe that it is, and will fight bravely under it, thus verifying Mokanna's famous declaration, that

> Faith, fanatic Faith, once wedded fast
> To one dear falsehood, hugs it to the last.

Save the Old Paper.

Never throw away old paper. If you have no wish to sell it, use it in the house. Some housekeepers prefer it to cloth for cleaning many articles of furniture. For instance, a volume written by a lady, who prided herself on her experience and tact, says: "After a stove has been blackened, it can be kept looking very well for a long time by rubbing it with paper every morning. Rubbing with paper is a much nicer way of keeping the outside of a tea-kettle, coffee-pot and tea-pot bright and clean than the old way of washing them in suds. Rubbing with paper is also the best way of polishing knives, tinware and spoons; they shine like new silver. For polishing mirrors, windows, lamp chimneys, etc., paper is better than dry cloth. Preserves and pickles keep much better if brown paper instead of cloth is tied over the jar. Canned fruit is not so apt to mold if a piece of writing paper, cut to fit the can, is laid directly on the fruit. Paper is much better to put under a carpet than straw. It is warmer, thinner and makes less noise when one walks over it."

The Turkish Navy.

The Turks never excelled in naval warfare. Their forte is on the land. But the late Sultan had a passion for ironclads. All the money he could spare from the seraglio was devoted to naval construction. The consequence is that he has a good navy, one of the most formidable in Europe. The Porte has thirty ironclad men-of-war, of which twenty-one are of the broadside type, two are turret vessels and seven are gunboats. There are four first-class broadside ships, with an aggregate nominal power of 2,500 horses and 2,784 men. The total effective strength of the steam fleet is 106 vessels, of 28,195 horse power, 641 guns, and 26,108 men. In addition, there are some twenty-four sailing vessels of various kinds, manned by 2,354 sailors. If obliged to contend with England's navy, these vessels would be driven from the water as far as steam could carry them. But Russia is not England.

Knew She Must Die.

Comfort Gibbs, of this town (Westfield, Mass.), had a cat which, from the fact we are about to state, must have foreknown that she had but a short time to live. The cat was feeble and sickly. She was the mother of two kittens, about half-grown. The cat was seldom, if ever, in the house, and the kittens had never been there. Mr. Gibbs' attention was called to the cat by her mewing. When he first saw her she was calling one of the kittens to her, and having called it as far as the steps of the L of the house she lifted and coaxed it up the steps, and then took it into the kitchen and laid it by the stove. She then called the other in the same manner and placed it by the side of the first, left them and went out. Two hours afterward she was found dead at the rear of the house.—Our Dumb Animals.

American Tract Society.

The fifty-second annual meeting of the American Tract Society has just been held in New York city. The annual report states that the society issued during the year 132 new publications, including books or tracts in German, Spanish, Portuguese, French, and Danish. The receipts, including $109,726.41 in gifts and legacies, were $441,198.26, which, with the balance in the treasury on April 1, 1876, makes $449,269.69. The total expenditures were $441,119.74; balance, $8,148.95. During the year 209 colporteurs have labored in 32 States and in Canada. The Committee on Foreign and Pagan Lands have appropriated $3,780 in cash, $5,880.99 in electrotypes and $1,827.27 in home publications for distribution in foreign lands.

Six women of San Jose, Cal., having been refused the privilege of voting, have published a protest commencing with "How long, O Lord, how long?"

BLACK FRIDAY.

The Most Eventful Day in the History of Wall Street.

[From the New York Express.]

In all the history of Wall street, no day stands out more prominently, or recalls itself more vividly to memory than "Black Friday"—the 24th of September, 1869.

Sept. 23 was an exciting and eventful day, witnessing as it did a fierce struggle between the bulls and bears. Gold sold at 141⅜ at 9:30 (in those days it was lawful to sell before the board or after it), touched 142 at 11, 143¼ at 11:15, fell to 143 at 12, jumped to 144½ at 2:15, and finally at 5 p. m. closed at 143½. This contest demonstrated fully the power of the bulls, who had the market practically cornered, and the bears retired with dismal forebodings of the morrow. There were two remarkable things noticed on this day. One was the immense clearings at the Gold Exchange Bank, and the other the refusal of the bears at certain times to sell to the bulls, although among themselves they made sales ¼ to ½ per cent. below the current quotations.

Early on Friday morning, the 24th, Wall street, Broad street, and New street were crowded by excited brokers, and the expectation that the bulls would push their advantage and force the premium up to 175, or to 160 at least, created intense excitement. Buying and selling began in the street at 9 o'clock, but it was 9:30 before the hot work commenced. An offer of $10,000 at 145 was snapped up in a minute; then there was a decline to 144⅛, then a jump, quick as thought, to 146, and then all was confusion. Men howled like demons, pushing and crowding each other in the narrow street as though they were demented; but, despite the desperate rallies of the bears, which now and then caused a break of 1 per cent. or so, in one short half-hour the premium was run up to 150, an advance of nearly 7 per cent. over the closing prices of the night before. Men looked at each other in amazement, dazzled at such rapid fluctuations.

The rush to the gold room at the opening hour was indescribable. In two seconds after the opening of the doors the room was crowded, and in the galleries, and on the stairs leading to them, were crowds of gazers, come to witness the stirring events that the day was expected to bring forth.

On the floor, gathered around the fountain in which played one sportive gold-fish, who had lost his life through the excitement of this tempestuous day, were the brokers, huddled together like sheep in a pen, or calves in a butcher's wagon, but still finding room enough to brandish their arms and gesticulate wildly, while their lungs were exercised with such recklessness that it was a wonder there was no blood-vessel burst. This is no overdrawn picture.

Nobody spoke or talked. Everything was at high pressure, and every bid or offer that was made came forth in a demoniac yell. Transactions of millions were recorded in a second with trembling hands, and then the half-crazed buyer and seller pushed back into the front of the circle again, and recommenced their yelling. The scene was at its wildest from 11 to 11:30 a. m., the fluctuations from 10 to 11 having been slight. But when the bulls made a burst they came on in overwhelming strength, and in less than twenty minutes the premium was run up to 162½. This was the bid of Albert Speyers, a florid-faced broker, whose voice could be heard all over the room and far out into Broadway. His eyes protruded from their sockets, his limbs trembled like leaves, and in his intense excitement the perspiration poured down his face like water. Others were there whose excitement was tremendous, but with this man it appeared to be a matter of life and death. He dealt with countless millions as though gold were the dross which the high-minded claim it to be, and still as he booked his purchases clamored for more. But it was noticeable that, even while Speyers was bidding 160 and 160½, the bears and others were trading among themselves at 135.

Then came Boutwell's order to Butterfield:

"Sell $4,000,000 gold, to-morrow, and buy $4,000,000 bonds."

This was a crusher. With a rush the brokers poured out into Broad street, or sent their messengers, and in a minute—yes, in a flash, one might say—it was known that the dispatch was true. Down went the premium to 140, the resistless bears carrying all before them. Again and again the bulls rallied, once sending the price up from 140 to 150 at one jump, but, fight as they would, the day went against them, and by nightfall one could buy all the gold he needed for 132 to 132½.

The rush to the sub-treasury, the crowds in Broad and Wall streets, and in New street, where betting on the old-fashioned indicator, which looks like the time record on the race track, was a favorite amusement, and the practical suspension of nearly all business outside of the gold room, were features of the day, but to treat of these as they deserve would require too great space.

It tooks weeks to recover from the confusion of Black Friday. The Gold Exchange Bank failed to make its clearances in time, some of the heavy firms of the streets failed, and for a time everything was unsettled.

Terrible Disaster at Sea.

The Anchor Line steamship Sidonia, bound from Queenstown to New York, recently exploded her boilers, when 800 miles out of the latter port. The Captain of the vessel, three engineers, and three of the crew were killed by the accident. A survivor gives the following particulars of the disaster: There was a dull explosion heard in the waist of the ship, followed by a rush of escaping steam, which shook the vessel from stem to stern, and shattered the skylight above the engine into a thousand fragments.

As soon as the startled observers of this occurrence could collect their senses they made a rush for the engine room, the doors of which were found blown open, and, groping their way as well as they could because of the rushing, burning steam, they soon found that the only injury the vessel had sustained was to the iron bulkheads of the coal bunkers, which were forced out of place. The broken skylight and the open doors soon carried off the bulk of the steam, and then it was that the groans of the seven victims of the disaster could be answered by assistance.

All unite in saying that a more pitiful sight than the poor sufferers presented could not be imagined. They were all alive, but so badly scalded that they were speechless. Their agony was so intense, however, that groans of the most heart-rending description were wrung from the strongest, and, when kindly hands sought to lift them, the skin, and portions of the flesh pealed off at the touch of the rescuers. It was horrible to witness, and the hardy sailors who saw their mates thus tortured could not restrain their tears as they spoke. But death soon put the sufferers out of their misery, although one of them lingered until the following morning. From no one of them was any sign or indication received as to how the accident occurred, and the watery grave to which they were all consigned has locked in its bosom another mystery.

The Turkish Generals.

The Commander-in-Chief of the European Turkish army is Abdul Kerim Nadir Pasha, born at Tchirpan, in Bulgaria, near the scene of the recent massacres. He entered the service in 1828, and, after receiving his commission, studied in a military school at Vienna. After an absence of several years he returned to Turkey, and gradually rose to the highest rank in the service. He served in 1854 with great distinction under Omar Pasha, first upon the Danube and then in the Caucasus. His principal battle was at Djunis, a few months ago, when he routed the Servians and dislodged Tchernayeff from his fortifications. He is considered an honest, good-natured man, and, like Moltke, is habitually taciturn, though master of many languages. He is past 70. His Chief of Staff is Nedjib Pasha, who received his military education at Brussels, and is considered the most able General in the service. He rescued the Turkish troops in Herzegovina, and, after his march from Gatchko to Bileka, was made commander of the provincial forces. He was in the conspiracy against Abdul Aziz, and, after Murad's accession, was made Chief of Staff to Abdul Kerim. He is only 46, and is married to a Christian from Bosnia. Abdul Kerim's executive officer is Achmed Eyub Pasha, who was brought up at the Constantinople Military School, and made his first important success at the battle of Djunis, which was fought under Abdul Kerim's instructions. He is 48, and owes his position to the success with which he suppressed some of the Arabian rebels. Dervish Pasha is a Bulgarian, and celebrated in politics, butcheries, and war, and has been principally engaged in putting down rebellion, as it is called in Turkey, which means murder and massacre. One of the finest Turkish officers is Yaver Pasha, a Circassian by birth and a great infantry leader, who distinguished himself in Silistria in 1854, and was Minister of War in 1871. The three remaining officers of prominence are Hussein Pasha, commanding the Turkish forces in Asia; Mukhtar Pasha, who served in Herzegovina last summer and is now in Kars besieged by the Russians; Safvet Pasha, the butcher of the women and children of Bulgaria, who was promoted for his hideous cruelties, and whom the Russians will hang, if he falls into their hands.

A Madman in a Railway Car.

Among the passengers who left St. Louis for the East, one night recently, was a large, well-built gentleman, whose restlessness was annoying everybody in the sleeping-coach. He retired to his berth without taking off coat, collar, or boot, and fell into a doze. While the train was speeding toward Mount Vernon, Ill., at the rate of thirty miles an hour, the porter heard a loud noise in the car and discovered that the queer passenger was walking up and down between the berths and making a great racket. The porter went up to him and asked him to go back to his berth. The passenger was a raving maniac. He glared at the porter with bloodshot eyes, and, in a frenzy of rage, felled him to the floor, and, leaping upon him, attempted to stab him with a bowie-knife. A desperate encounter followed, during which the porter was terribly wounded. The conductor sprung to the rescue, but the lunatic struck him in the face with a heavy goblet and snapped a derringer at his head, the pistol missing fire. With a terrible curse, he struck the conductor with the butt of a pistol and then fled into the drawing-room car, locking the door behind him, smashing the mirrors on the walls, and leaping headlong from the platform.

The Late Gov. Brownlow.

The most unique political character of his generation has recently passed away in the death of Parson Brownlow, of Knoxville, Tenn. A native of Virginia, Wm. G. Brownlow was early left an orphan, learned the trade of a carpenter, and at the age of 21 turned Methodist minister, laboring as an itinerant preacher for the next ten years. But a natural bent for politics was too strong to be long repressed, and, even while he was traveling a circuit in South Carolina, he took the stump as an opponent of Calhoun and nullification. Finally in 1837, when he was 32 years old, he began a connection with the Knoxville Whig, which has lasted ever since, and made that paper a power in its section. Though he had publicly advocated in 1858 the perpetuation of slavery, he fought secession bitterly, and toward the close of 1861 was arrested on the charge of treason by the Confederates, and held prisoner for four months. With the success of the Union cause he came to the front in Tennessee politics, and was elected Governor in 1865, and Senator in 1869. He was stricken with paralysis years ago, and, during the latter part of his term in the Senate, took little share in business.

A Mother's Fight with an Eagle.

About four days ago a child was attacked on Grosse Tete by a large eagle. Upon hearing the screams of the child its mother ran into the yard, and when she discovered the eagle endeavoring to carry off her child she made a desperate attack upon the intruder. During the fight between the eagle and the mother the child crawled under the house, and finally the mother was forced to retire, as the eagle fought with unusual desperation. Several persons were attracted to the spot by the screams of both mother and child, and, after firing several shots at the eagle, he was finally killed. The eagle was very large.—*Baton Rouge (La.) AMERICAN BIOGRAPHY.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT.

This celebrated journalist was born at New Mill Keith, in Scotland, about 1800. He was educated for the priesthood at a Roman Catholic seminary at Aberdeen, but did not follow out the intention of his parents. In April, 1819, during a period of great commercial depression, he left his native land for America, where he attempted to earn his living as a teacher, but with very indifferent success. In 1822 he obtained a situation on a Charleston newspaper, which he did not hold long, and repaired to New York, where he became an active member of the fourth estate. The first number of the New York Herald, of which he was the founder, appeared May 5, 1835. This speculation proved most successful, and Mr. Bennett amassed a large fortune. He conducted the Herald until his death, which occurred June 1, 1872, and at his decease confided the editorial supervision of the Herald to his son, James G. Bennett, Jr., who has shown himself worthy of the trust.

THOMAS HART BENTON.

Thomas H. Benton, an American author and statesman, was born in Orange county, North Carolina, in 1783. He first engaged in the study of law, and in 1811 commenced practice in Nashville, Tenn. He afterward removed to Missouri, where, in 1820, he was elected one of her first United States Senators. For a period of thirty years he took a leading part in the discussion of the great questions which came before the Senate, and was especially prominent in the debates on the United States Bank and the sub-treasury, which latter cause he warmly supported. His timorous opinions on the slavery question, and his general political independence of thinking, lost him his election in 1851. In 1854 he was again defeated. In 1853 Mr. Benton published the first volume of his autobiographical work, "Thirty Years' View; or, a History of the American Government for Thirty Years." While the second volume was in progress Benton's house at Washington was destroyed by fire, by which calamity his library and manuscripts perished. In 1850 Mr. Benton was returned by Missouri to the House of Representatives. He there distinguished himself by his speeches in opposition to the Kansas-Nebraska bill, as a violation of the Missouri compromise, and he was again thrown out in the next election of members for Congress. His vigorous canvass of the State as candidate for the Governorship, in 1856, will be long remembered. He was defeated, and in the same year supported Mr. Buchanan for President in opposition to Col. Fremont, his own son-in-law. His advocacy of the Pacific railroad and other undertakings connects his name with scientific progress. He died at Washington, April 10, 1858.

England and Turkey.

The British have more reasons for wishing to preserve the Turkish empire than the fear that its destruction may enable Russia to drive them out of India. The Turkish Government owes English capitalists more than $1,000,000,000. The first loan was made in 1854 to meet the expenses of the war with Russia, and was for $15,000,000. It was then the Turks got their first taste of British gold. The next year they borrowed $25,000,000 more, and almost every year since they have added to their debt, as the following table shows:

Year of Issue.	Amount borrowed.	Interest, per cent.
1854	$ 15,000,000	6
1855	25,000,000	4½
1858	25,000,000	6
1860	10,350,000	6
1862	40,000,000	6
1863	40,000,000	6
1865	161,816,813	6
1866	30,000,000	6
1867	12,500,000	6
1869	111,111,100	6
1871	28,500,000	6
1872	58,631,000	9
1873	140,000,000	6
1874	200,000,000	5
Total	$924,908,915

When this enormous sum was received and squandered, the Turks failed to pay the interest on the bonds, and by a decree of the Porte, dated Oct. 6, 1875, the interest on the debt was reduced one-half the stipulated amount. The breaking out of the insurrection of Bosnia last year, and the war with Servia, afforded the Turkish Government an excuse for declining to pay any interest to the bondholders. In addition to the bonded debt, the Turks had managed to run up a floating debt of $150,000,000 a year ago, a considerable portion of which is due English bankers, ship-builders and manufacturers. Since then the Turkish Government has issued about $100,000,000 of legal-tender notes, which are now greatly depreciated, and coin has wholly disappeared from circulation. It is clear from this exhibit that, if the Russians are allowed to overthrow the Turkish Government, the vast sum borrowed from the English will be lost, principal and interest, to the last shilling. The Porte has nothing left to show for the money except a fleet of ironclads.

A Granger's Hard Luck.

An old farmer, down near Milwaukee, made up his mind that he'd have to dabble a little in wheat with the rest of the boys. So he sailed in, operating through a commission house. His judgment led him to "go long," and he bought for June. A few days afterward came the war news, and the market began to bulge. It jumped up so fast that it made the old man's head swim. He couldn't figure fast enough to keep up with the profits; but he trusted to his commission-house, and went in the other day to settle up. His astonishment was uncontrollable, and he could hardly believe his senses when he found that his profits amounted to $33,000. Of course he felt good. Said the commission-man, "It's the worst money you ever made." "What do you say that for?" asked the farmer, with some surprise. "Because it will end in your losing the $6,000 you started it with," was the significant reply. The old gentleman looked sad; but he put the $33,000 in his pocket just the same.—*Winona (Minn.) Buttons.

George Washington set the fashion of coat buttons in a curious way. He never bought anything he had no use for, and, when a needy sailor wanted to sell him some conch shells one day, he wanted to know what he could do with them. The sailor, having an eye for the picturesque, suggested buttons. The General accepted the suggestion, bought the shells, had the buttons made, a little larger than a quarter of a dollar, with a silver drop in the center hiding the spot where the eye is fastened beneath. The President then astonished the republican court by appearing in a coat with pink conch-shell buttons sparkling on its dark velvet surface. And immediately they became the rage.

Gundogai, New South Wales, boasts of a cat which is said to have attained the extraordinary age of 100 years. It was brought from England in the ship Golden Grove, which cast anchor in Botany bay on Jan. 20, 1788. The cat is supposed to be the sole survivor of the quadrupeds taken to Australia by this vessel.

Few of the many well accidents are more interesting than the one that befell Henry Ahneman, in Rochester. He was at work at the bottom of a well, eighty-five feet under ground, when the curbing fell in, and earth followed, burying him underneath. The belief was that he had been instantly killed, yet it was decided to dig down to him without delay. He was reached after four hours of fast work, and was found alive, although unconscious. Several timbers had protected him from being crushed, besides leaving space for sufficient air to keep him from smothering to death.

STRIVE AND DARE.

Strive, brother, strive,
When kind hearts are cold,
And cold the reply of the once-loving eye,
Strive to be bold.
Dare, brother, dare,
When shame's on thy cheek,
And anger's red glow on the face of thy foe,
Dare to be meek.
Strive, brother, strive,
'Mid the glare of the new,
To the faith of the past, that has weathered the blast,
Strive to be true.
Dare, brother, dare,
When compromise only
Can win back the train of the false ones again,
Dare to be lonely.

USED IN HEALTH PREVENTS DISEASE.

TERRY'S SALICYLIC SOAP

(PATENT APPLIED FOR)

A Perfect Anti-Septic and Disinfectant Bath and Toilet Soap.

Takes the Place of all other Soaps for Daily use in the Family.

Manufactured from the purest vegetable Oils with the addition of that greatest Known Anti-Septic and disinfectant

SALICYLIC ACID,

Making the most healthful, the most perfect, and the most economical Bath and Toilet Soap ever offered to the public.

Indorsed by the the medical profession and attested by thousands.

AS THE GREAT PREVENTIVE

In all cases of blood poisoning whether arising from malarial or miasmatic exhalations, defective sewerage, or any other causes.

Its constant use prevents the contracting of contageous diseases, typhoid, scarlet and all malarial fevers. It is invaluable, and should be used in all districts where fever and ague prevails as it is the greatest known preventive to that disease. It is of immense value in the cure of all skin disease; a trial proves it, and its use prevents contracting them. It is a special boon to school children who are constantly exposed. It is the most healthful bath soap for infants, worth its weight in gold in the nursery. It is no more expensive than other toilet soaps of good quality It goes further and its great superiority is bringing it into universal use. It has no disagreeable odor and is absolutely pure.

Extensively used in hospitals and sick rooms by order of physicians.

For sale by all druggists and grocers. Sample box containing three cakes sent post paid on receipt of 75 cents. Liberal terms to the trade.

Ice For Sale.

Messrs. Houston & Co., having put up several hundred tons of most splendid ice, are now ready to supply our citizens for the summer at reasonable rates.—With their delivery wagon they will put it down at your door in any quantity you may desire. tf

A young lady recently received the following note, and is heart-broken: "Yew needn't spect me up ter yewr house no more sunda nites a gurl wat leaves gum a stickin on the parlor chairs for a feller to set on aint the gurl for me. Jim."

No Smoking at the White House

Mrs. Hayes is a very particular lady about the house. Mr. Hayes has to go out on the well curb when he wants to smoke, as the flavor is disagreeable to her, besides making the lace curtains unpleasant. The secretary of the navy, Mr. Thompson, when he calls of an evening, leaves his cigar on the stoop, and when the wind is high it is quite frequently carried off the stoop into the grass, and the secretary is sometimes occupied ten or fifteen minutes in hunting it up. One very dark night last week he devoted a half hour to a fruitless search, and went away muttering. "Curse this style!"

The Last Ohioan.

In the dim, uncertain twilight of the soft May evening, a distracted figure was seen hastily flitting down the streets of an Ohio town in the direction of a railway station. It slapped a lank and hungry gripsack on the bracket of the window and demanded in husky tones: "Ticket!" Where too?" calmly asked the unruffled monopolist behind the window. "Any-where! Any-where!" was the frenzied response "Any-where! Clean through! Clean acrost! To Bulgary, Proosy, or the Danube' or Diffendorfer, or any place. Any-where out of an ungrateful country that coldly turns its back upon its deserving children. Any-where out of Amerika." And he bowed his head and wept. He was the only man in Ohio that didn't get an office.

Mrs. Belknap.

Washington Capital 22d.

Upon last Friday this beautiful woman left Washington—where, at the Arlington, she has resided since last summer—for her home in the West. Of all who once followed, flattered, sought and sued this graceful and winning woman of fashion, not one was near to say in leading tone, farewell. We were not among those who sought to bask in the sunshine of her smiles in her hour of prosperity, or partook of her graceful hospitality; and yet we never met her driving out with her baby in her arms, or saw her gliding quietly along the halls of the Arlington, that we did not have the heart-ache.

When the exposure came the manner in which she came to the front and attempted to shield her husband and dead sister by criminating herself was brave. She failed, but the effort was heroic, and made a noble woman of one who, but a little before, seemed only of many lovely woman dispensing graceful hospitality to a heartless world.

Newspaper-Making

It isn't boy's play, reader, to make a newspaper. Everybody can't do it, although most people think they can. More excellent qualities of head and heart are required in an editor than in any other calling or profession in the world. He talks to more people than the pulpit does, and talks to people of all grades of life and of all shades of belief. If conscientious, and no man who is not has any business in the editorial chair, he feels the responsibility of his position as if it were a mountain on his soul. He knows that the welfare, moral growth and peace of the community depend largely upon his daily or weekly utterances. Many times does he draw his pen through lines which express his sentiments, but which he fears may be misunderstood, and do harm to some of those whom he desires to make better, and not worse. It is not an easy position—it is scarcely a desirable one; and yet, if he happens to express a sentiment which does not suit the reader, the latter is uncharitable enough to lose no time in censuring him. The editor does not always think as the reader does; he can't. If he did he never expressed a sentiment except such as the reader cherished, what would be the object of taking a paper? It is certainly foolish to pay for a journal which simply contains a rehash of what we have long before thought of ourselves. But reader, when you are induced to find fault with the editor because he says something that dosen't suit you, remember that you can't get a paper, under the sun, if it amounts to anything, that will not sometimes say things that you can't agree with.—Western Rural.

A Natural Mistake.

A citizen of San Antonio was fond of praising his dog. He said he was a splendid watch dog; that he would never even growl at a child, but at night he would tear anybody to pieces whom he found about the premises.

"Ain't you afraid,' he was asked, "that he will bite you some night when you come home late?'

"Not a bit of it; he is too intelligent. He knows my step as soon as I put my foot on the walk. Why, I wouldn't take $500 for that dog; he is the most reliable dog in San Antonio.'

About three days after the foregoing conversation took place, one morning early, a policeman was leading the identical dog out into the suburbs.

"What are you doing with Major Jones' dog? a passer inquired.

"He told me to takd him out and shoot him'

"What for,' was asked in amazement.

"Because he tackeled the Major last night, on his coming home, and bit him in thirteen places; he won't be down town for a week.'

"But I heard the dog was intelligent; that he knew his step, and wouldn't bite him no way he could fix it; that he would not take $500 for that dog.'

"The dog ain't to blame for it,' said the policeman, gazing sadly at poor Nero, "it was the Majors own fault.'

"How so,' inquired the man.

"Well,' responded the policeman slowly, "the dog did know his step and never even growled at him before; but last night for the first time since he has had the dog, the Mojor came home three hours earlier and perfectly sober, and somehow his step was very different from what the dog was used to; he didn't tangle his legs much as common and the dog was fooled by it, took him for a perfect stranger, and bounced him. The dog ain't to blame; he missed the smell of whisky; he didn't hear the Major whoop and cuss and fall into the cellar, as he always does when he comes home, so Nero kept on bitin' the Major in fresh places until the family interfered. Come on, Nero!" and the sad funeral cortege resumed the line of march for the bush.

A Raffle for Freedom.

We translate from a German sketch of American travel the subjoined account of an incident alleged to have occurred on a Mississippi steamboat a short time before the war.

"I ascended the Mississippi," says the writer, "on a steamer on board of which were Judge J—— and Gen. K——, of Pennsylvania, with both of whom I was slightly acquainted.

"A hard set, these Natchez men,' said the Captain, who met us on the cabin-stairs. There's some of them down in the saloon playing a high game. How men can be such fools I could never see!"

"Let's go down and look on a while,' suggested the Judge.

"In the saloon we found four men seated at a table, around which a crowd of spectators was gathered. The four were the 'heavy players.'

"The game was 'poker,' and the money changed hands rapidly. We had not been looking on long, when one of the players, a middle-aged man, who I learned was a cotton-planter, bet his last dollar against the hand of one of his antagonists. The latter showed four kings, while he had only four queens. He was 'cleaned out,' and rose as though he was going to leave the table.

"Are you broke, Colonel?' ask one of the men.

"Dead!" was the laconic reply.

"Never mind; I'll lend you.'

"No; I can make a raise, I reckon. Here, Pomp!"

"Here, massa!" responded an old negro, as he emerged from one corner of the saloon.

"Bring that girl and her youngster here, that I bought in Natchez. Wait a few minutes, gentlemen. I'll raise some money.'

The old negro went on his errand and soon returned with the girl and her youngster. The 'girl' proved to be a stately mulatto woman about thirty-five years old. The 'youngster' was a fine, intelligent-looking boy, eleven or twelve years old, whose complexion showed him to be much more nearly allied to the white race than to the black.

'Here, gentlemen' said the planter, as they entered, 'you see this girl and her boy [illegible] yesterday in Natchez. Who will give me six hundred for them?'

'Will you sell them seperate,' asked some one.

'No, can't do it; I promised not to. The girl swears she'll take her life if she's separated from her boy, and her old master said that he was sure she'd keep her word. But don't you all see that the girl is worth more money than I ask for both of them? Come, who'll give me six hundred for both?"

The planter waited a moment for a reply, and then said:

"Well, I must have some money. Come, what say you to a raffle—thirty chances at twenty dollars a chance? Out with your cash, gentlemen. The first on the list has the first throw!"

This proposition created a decided stir among all present. The three players at the table led off by taking three chances each. Their example was followed by the spectators, and twenty chances were taken as rapidly as the planter could write down the names and take in the money. Then there was a slight pause. The planter himself now took two chances, and he was followed by his three fellow-players, who each took one chance more. Finally three more chances were taken by the spectators, when the planter cried out:

"Two chances still, gentlemen! Who will have them?'

'Gen. K—— whispered something in Judge J——'s ear, and then went to the table and laid two ten dollar gold pieces on it.

'Name sir, please.'

'Never mind the name. Put it down to the woman—'

'Eh—what, for the girl herself?'

'Yes, certainly; let's give a chance.'

'All right. One for Ninette. And now—'

'That's for the boy, said Judge J—— quietly, as he laid twenty dollars on the table.

'Good! bravo! bravo! cried the planter and several of the bystanders. One for Tommy, which makes the thirty. Now, gentleman, lets see whom luck favors.'

The dice were brought and the throwing began. Each chance entitled the holder to three throws.

Thirty-six was the highest thrown until the holder of the eleventh chance threw. He scored fourty-two. Then a new number was thrown, number twenty, he scored forty-nine.

The excitement now became intense forty-nine was hard to beat; the highest throw possible being nine sixes—fifty-four.

Again and again the dice rattled in the box, until it came to number twenty-nine.

"Come, Ninette—it's your turn now!"

As the poor woman came forward, her hands crossed and pressed convulsively against her breast. It was truly painful to witness her agitation.

"Won't the gentleman who took the chance for me please throw?' she asked, in a low, tremulous tone.

"No; let your boy throw,' replied the General; 'perhaps he would have more luck than I.'

"Come, Tom,' said the planter.

Tom came forward and picked up the box. The woman pressed her lips firmly together and clasp her hands as if in prayer. The boy trembled like an aspen leaf, but shook the dice and threw—three!

For a moment he stared at the dice as though he could not believe his eyes; then put down the box and stepped back, pale and dejected

"Come, Tommy, throw again,' urged the planter.

"It's no use, master; I couldn't throw forty-nine now.

"True, true. But you have your own chance; throw that.'

"Certainly,' said Judge J——; 'that one was your mother's. Now throw for yourself, on the chance I gave you. Have a brave heart, my boy, and may Heaven smile on you!'

Again the boy returned to the table and took up the box. He pressed his lips together and did his best to controle his trembling limbs. Not a sound was to be heard in the saloon but the rattling of the dice. For a moment every man seemed to hold his breath.

He threw.

"Two fives and a six—sixteen!" said the planter, putting down the number, while a murmur of satisfaction ran through the crowd.

One of the bystanders gathered up the dice and put them in the box, and the boy threw again.

"Two sixes and a five—seventeen!"

The excitement knew no bounds, and the 'bravos' resounded on every hand. The boy, as he took up the box now for the third and last time, was nearly colorless as was possible for him to be with his yellow skin.

[illegible] rolled the dice and up came [illegible] [illegible] planter. 'You are your own and your mother's master! Fill up the necessary papers, Captain, and I will sign them. These gentlemen will be the witnesses!"

I will not attemt to describe the scene that followed. In the general satisfaction, one of the roughest-looking man in the crowd proposed a subscription for the freed negroes. The proposition was received with such favor that in less than five minutes fifty dollars were collected.

A Man With the War Fever.

Mr. White, a Detroiter of middle age, visited this office yesterday to find a war map and to have a chat about the European situation, and it wasn't ten minutes before his enthusiasm was up to a boiling point.

"It will be worth thousands and millions and billlions of dollars to this country!" he shouted, as he broke through one of the office chairs.

"Yes it will,' somebody remarked.

"It will stiffen wages, bring out capital, make money plenty and just set us all to whooping!" he whooped as he scratched the leg wounded at Bull Run.

Somebody remarked that it probably would.

Taking five newspaper war-maps under one arm and a copy of the London Times under the other, Mr. White left the office and proceeded directly homeward, feeling more patriotic every moment.

"Oh! we're going to lay them right out, Nancy!' he said as he dropped his hat in the hall.

"Did you order that flour?' she asked in a careless tone.

"Flour! What do I care about flour! The Russians have got Kars and half the Turkish army!"

"Have, eh! Well, I hope that paper hanger will be here in the morning. You didn't think to see about—'

"Right here is Kars and right here is where the Turks got mauled!" he exclaimed, as he knelt on the floor and traced one of the maps.

"Did, eh? Say, John, can't you rake off the lawn this morning, and did you see about the whitewashing?"

"Will you talk about whitewashing when all Europe is convulsed with war?" he fiercely demanded as he shook the other four maps at her.

"I—I'd like those onion beds marked out some time to-day,' she replied, as she hunted through the work basket for a button with an eye in it.

"Onion beds marked out, when this very copy of the London Times editorially predicts that over one million armed men will be rushing at each others' throats in less than sixty days!"

She found the button and he unrolled the balance of his maps. There was a dead silence until his finger rested on the city of Erzeroum, when he shouted:

"Here she is! Right around here is where they are making the Turks howl for sugar!"

"By the way, John,' she softly remarked, as she looked up from her work, "don't you think that summer kitchen will have to be reshingled this spring?'

The girl who does general house-work says he tore the five war maps into five hundred piecies, and banged the London Times against the wall with an awful thump as he jumped out doors; but girls are sometime prejudiced. Mr. White was in the corner grocery at half-past eleven saying to the proprietor:

"Don't it make the blood in your veins jump as you read of the European situation?'

And the proprietor raked the cheese knife on the edge of the counter to clean it, and replied:

"Seems like I shall haf to kill doze poys who cut soap mit dis knife.'

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but naturla that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

A young lady recently received the following note, and is heart-broken: "Yew needn't spect me up ter yewr house no more sunda nites a gurl wat leaves gum a stickin on the parlor chairs for a feller to set on aint the gurl for me. Jim."

No Smoking at the White House

Mrs. Hayes is a very particular lady about the house. Mr. Hayes has to go out on the well curb when he wants to smoke, as the flavor is disagreeable to her, besides making the lace curtains unpleasant. The secretary of the navy, Mr. Thompson, when he calls of an evening, leaves his cigar on the stoop, and when the wind is high it is quite frequently carried off the stoop into the grass, and the secretary is sometimes occupied ten or fifteen minutes in hunting it up. One very dark night last week he devoted a half hour to a fruitless search, and went away muttering. "Curse this style!"

The Last Ohioan.

In the dim, uncertain twilight of the soft May evening, a distracted figure was seen hastily flitting down the streets of an Ohio town in the direction of a railway station. It slapped a lank and hungry gripsack on the bracket of the window and demanded in husky tones: "Ticket!" Where too?" calmly asked the unruffled monopolist behind the window. "Any-where! Any-where!" was the frenzied response "Any-where! Clean through! Clean acrost! To Bulgary, Proosy, or the Danube' or Diffendorter, or any place. Any-where out of an ungrateful country that coldly turns its back upon its deserving children. Any-where out of Amerika." And he bowed his head and wept. He was the only man in Ohio that didn't get an office.

Mrs. Belknap.

Washington Capital Ed.

Upon last Friday this beautiful woman left Washington—where, at the Arlington, she has resided since last summer—for her home in the West. Of all who once followed, flattered, sought and sued this graceful and winning woman of fashion, not one was near to say in leading tone, farewell. We were not among those who sought to bask in the sunshine of her smiles in her hour of prosperity, or partook of her graceful hospitality; and yet we never met her driving out with her baby in her arms, or saw her gliding quietly along the halls of the Arlington, that we did not have the heart-ache.

When the exposure came the manner in which she came to the front and attempted to shield her husband and dead sistet by criminating herself was brave. She failed, but the effort was heroic, and made a noble woman of one who, but a little before, seemed only of many lovely woman dispensing graceful hospitality to a heartless world.

Newspaper-Making

It isn't boy's play, reader, to make a newspaper! Everybody can't do it, although most people think they can. More excellent qualities of head and heart are required in an editor than in any other calling or profession in the world. He talks to more people than the pulpit does, and talks to people of all grades of life and of all shades of belief. If conscientious, and no man who is not has any business in the editorial chair, he feels the responsibility of his position as if it were a mountain on his soul. He knows that the welfare, moral growth and peace of the community depend largely upon his daily or weekly utterances. Many times does he draw his pen through lines which express his sentiments, but which he fears may be misunderstood, and do harm to some of those whom he desires to make better, and not worse. It is not an easy position—it is scarcely a desirable one; and yet, if he happens to express a sentiment which does not suit the reader, the latter is uncharitable enough to lose no time in censuring him. The editor does not always think as the reader does; he can't. If he did he never expressed a sentiment except such as the reader cherished, what would be the object of taking a paper? It is certainly foolish to pay for a journal which simply contains a rehash of what we have long before thought of ourselves. But reader, when you are induced to find fault with the editor because he says something that doesn't suit you, remember that you can't get a paper, under the sun, if it amounts to anything, that will not sometimes say things that you can't agree with.—Western Rural.

A Natural Mistake.

A citizen of San Antonio was fond of praising his dog. He said he was a splendid watch dog; that he would never even growl at a child, but at night he would tear anybody to pieces whom he found about the premises.

"Ain't you afraid,' he was asked, "that he will bite you some night when you come home late?'

"Not a bit of it; he is too intelligent. He knows my step as soon as I put my foot on the walk. Why, I wouldn't take $500 for that dog; he is the most reliable dog in San Antonio.'

About three days after the foregoing conversation took place, one morning early, a policeman was leading the identical dog out into the suburbs.

"What are you doing with Major Jones' dog?' a passer inquired.

"He told me to takd him out and shoot him'

"What for,' was asked in amazement.

"Because he tackeled the Major last night, on his coming home, and bit him in thirteen places; he won't be down town for a week.'

"But I heard the dog was intelligent; that he knew his step, and wouldn't bite him no way he could fix it; that he would not take $500 for that dog.'

"The dog ain't to blame for it,' said the policeman, gazing sadly at poor Nero, "it was the Majors own fault.'

"How so,' inquired the man.

"Well,' responded the policeman slowly, "the dog did know his step and never even growled at him before; but last night for the first time since he has had the dog, the Mojor came home three hours earlier and perfectly sober, and somehow his step was very different from what the dog was used to; he didn't tangle his legs much as common and the dog was fooled by it, took him for a perfect stranger, and bounced him. The dog ain't to blame; he missed the smell of whisky; he didn't hear the Major whoop and cuss and fall into the cellar, as he always does when he comes home, so Nero kept on bitin' the Major, in fresh places until the family interfered. Come on, Nero!' and the sad funeral cortege resumed the line of march for the bush.

A Raffle for Freedom.

We translate from a German sketch of American travel the subjoined account of an incident alleged to have occurred on a Mississippi steamboat a short time before the war.

"I ascended the Mississippi," says the writer, "on a steamer on board of which were Judge J—— and Gen. K——, of Pennsylvania, with both of whom I was slightly acquainted.

"A hard set, these Natches men,' said the Captain, who met us on the cabin-stairs. There's some of them down in the saloon playing a high game. How men can be such fools I could never see!"

"Let's go down and look on a while,' suggested the Judge.

"In the saloon we found four men seated at a table, around which a crowd of spectators was gathered. The four were the 'heavy players.'

"The game was 'poker,' and the money changed hands rapidly. We had not been looking on long, when one of the players, a middle-aged man, who I learned was a cotton-planter, bet his last dollar against the hand of one of his antagonists. The latter showed four kings, while he had only four queens. He was 'cleaned out,' and rose as though he was going to leave the table.

"Are you broke, Colonel?' ask one of the men.

"Dead!' was the laconic reply.

"Never mind; I'll lend you.'

"No; I can make a raise, I reckon. Here, Pomp!'

"Here, massa!' responded an old negro, as he emerged from one corner of the saloon.

"Bring that girl and her youngster here, that I bought in Natchez. Wait a few minutes, gentlemen. I'll raise some money.'

The old negro went on his errand and soon returned with the girl and her youngster. The 'girl' proved to be a stately mulatto woman about thirty-five years old. The 'youngster' was a fine, intelligent-looking boy, eleven or twelve years old, whose complexion showed him to be much more nearly allied to the white race than to the black.

'Here, gentlemen' said the planter, as they entered, "you see this girl and her boy—two [illegible] as you can find anywhere. I paid eight hundred dollars for them yesterday in Natchez. Who will give me six hundred for them?'

"Will you sell them seperate,' asked some one.

"No, can't do it; I promised not to. The girl swears she'll take her life if she's separated from her boy, and her old master said that he was sure she'd keep her word. But don't you all see that the girl is worth more money than I ask for both of them? Come, who'll give me six hundred for both?'

The planter waited a moment for a reply, and then said:

"Well, I must have some money. Come, what say you to a raffle—thirty chances at twenty dollars a chance? Out with your cash, gentlemen. The first on the list has the first throw!'

This proposition created a decided stir among all present. The three players at the table led off by taking three chances each. Their example was followed by the spectators, and twenty chances were taken as rapidly as the planter could write down the names and take in the money. Then there was a slight pause. The planter himself now took two chances, and he was followed by his three fellow-players, who each took one chance more. Finally three more chances were taken by the spectators, when the planter cried out:

"Two chances still, gentlemen! Who will have them?'

"Gen. K—— whispered something in Judge J——'s ear, and then went to the table and laid two ten dollar gold pieces on it.

"Name sir, please.'

"Never mind the name. Put it down for the woman—'

"Eh—what, for the girl herself?'

"Yes, certainly; let's give a chance.'

"All right. One for Ninette. And now—'

"That's for the boy, said Judge J—— quietly, as he laid twenty dollars on the table.

"Good! bravo! bravo! cried the planter and several of the bystanders, 'One for Tommy, which makes the thirty. Now, gentleman, lets see whom luck favors.'

The dice were brought and the throwing began. Each chance entitled the holder to three throws.

Thirty-six was the highest thrown until the holder of the eleventh chance threw. He scored fourty-two. Then a less number was thrown, number twenty-one scored forty-nine.

The excitement now became intense Forty-nine was hard to beat; the highest throw possible being nine sixes—fifty-four.

Again and again the dice rattled in the box, until it came to number twenty-nine.

"Come, Ninette—it's your turn now!'

As the poor woman came forward, her hands crossed and pressed convulsively against her breast, it was truly painful to witness her agitation.

"Won't the gentleman who took the chance for me please throw?' she asked, in a low, tremulous tone.

"No, let your boy throw,' replied the General; 'perhaps he would have more luck than I.'

"Come, Tom,' said the planter.

Tom came forward and picked up the box. The woman pressed her lips firmly together and clasp her hands as if in prayer. The boy trembled like an aspen leaf, but shook the dice and threw—three!

For a moment he stared at the dice as though he could not believe his eyes; then put down the box and stepped back, pale and dejected

"Come, Tommy, throw again,' urged the planter.

"It's no use, master, I couldn't throw forty-nine now.

"True, true. But you have your own chance; throw that.'

"Certainly,' said Judge J——; 'that one was your mother's. Now throw for yourself, on the chance I gave you. Have a brave heart, my boy, and may Heaven smile on you!'

Again the boy returned to the table and took up the box. He pressed his lips together and did his best to controle his trembling limbs. Not a sound was to be heard in the saloon but the rattling of the dice. For a moment every man seemed to hold his breath.

He threw.

"Two fives and a six—sixteen!' said the planter. putting down the number, while a murmur of satisfaction ran through the crowd.

One of the bystanders gathered up the dice and put them in the box, and the boy threw again.

"Two sixes and a five—seventeen!'

The excitement knew no bounds, and the 'bravos' resounded on every hand. The boy, as he took up the box to throw for the third and last time, was nearly as colorless as was possible for him to be with his yellow skin.

[illegible] the dice, [illegible] same [illegible], which made [illegible] [illegible] the planter. 'You are your own and your mother's master! Fill up the necessary papers, Captain, and I will sign them. These gentlemen will be the witnesses!'

I will not attemt to describe the scene that followed. In the general satisfaction, one of the roughest-looking man in the crowd proposed a subscription for the freed negroes. The proposition was received with such favor that in less than five minutes fifty dollars were collected.

A Man With the War Fever.

Mr. White, a Detroiter of middle age, visited this office yesterday to find a war map and to have a chat about the European situation, and it wasn't ten minutes before his enthusiasm was up to a boiling point.

"It will be worth thousands and millions and billions of dollars to this country!" he shouted, as he broke through one of the office chairs.

"Yes it will,' somebody remarked.

"It will stiffen wages, bring out capital, make money plenty and just set us all to whooping!' he whooped as he scratched the leg wounded at Bull Run.

Somebody remarked that it probably would.

Taking five newspaper war-maps under one arm and a copy of the London Times under the other, Mr. White left the office and proceeded directly homeward, feeling more patriotic every moment.

"Oh! we're going to lay them right out, Nancy!' he said as he dropped his hat in the hall.

"Did you order that flour?' she asked in a careless tone.

"Flour! What do I care about flour! The Russians have got Kars and half the Turkish army!'

"Have, eh! Well, I hope that paper hanger will be here in the morning. You didn't think to see about——'

"Right here is Kars and right here is where the Turks got mauled!' he exclaimed, as he knelt on the floor and traced one of the maps.

"Did, eh? Say, John, can't you rake off the lawn this morning, and did you see about the whitewashing?'

"Will you talk about whitewashing when all Europe is convulsed with war?' he fiercely demanded as he shook the other four maps at her.

"I—I'd like those onion beds marked out some time to-day,' she replied, as she hunted through the work basket for a button with an eye in it.

"Onion beds marked out, when this very copy of the London Times editorially predicts that over one million armed men will be rushing at each others' throats in less than sixty days!'

She found the button and he unrolled the balance of his maps. There was a dead silence until his finger rested on the city of Erzeroum, when he shouted:

"Here she is! Right around here is where they are making the Turks howl for sugar!'

"By the way, John,' she softly remarked, as she looked up from her work, "don't you think that summer kitchen will have to be reshingled this spring?'

The girl who does general house-work says he tore the five war maps into five hundred pieces, and banged the London Times against the wall with an awful thump as he jumped out doors; but girls are sometime prejudiced. Mr. White was in the corner grocery at half-past eleven saying to the proprietor:

"Don't it make the blood in your veins jump as you read of the European situation?'

And the proprietor raked the cheese knife on the edge of the counter to clean it, and replied:

"Seems like I shall haf to kill doze poys who cut soap mit dis knife.'

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but natural that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St. Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A CARRIAGE containing Hugh McDougal and Mrs. William Parks and daughter, of Paterson, N. J., was demolished at that place by an Erie train, and all seriously and probably fatally injured....The militia was invoked with good effect to suppress a riot among striking brickmakers at Haverstraw, N. Y., the other day. [illegible] the rioters saw the militia they threw down their clubs and became quiet.... In the United States District Court at Hartford, Ct., Judge Shipman sentenced to hard labor, at the State prison, for a number of years, the two self-confessed guilty officers of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank of Hartford—James L. Chapman, Cashier, and John C. Tracy, President. Their crimes were perjury and embezzlement, whereby the bank lost $500,000.

THE death of Fletcher Harper, of the famous publishing house of Harper & Brothers, occurred at his home in New York last week. He had been ill for some time. Mr. Harper was 72 years old....Capt. Thomas Crapo and his wife sailed from New Bedford for London last week in a vessel twenty feet long. An immense crowd witnessed the departure of the boat, which is the smallest that has ever attempted the feat....Erastus Brooks, the veteran editor of the New York Express, has retired, and is succeeded by Charles F. Wingate.

THE annual report of the New York Cotton Exchange shows a marked falling off in the cotton trade of that city during the last two or three years....Ex-Gov. Warmoth, of Louisiana, was married at Newark, N. J., last week, to Miss Sallie Durand, daughter of a well-known jeweler.

A MONSTER 52-ton gun has just been successfully cast in Boston. It is to be mounted in New York harbor....The billiard contest for the championship of America was played at New York last week between Joseph Dion and William Sexton. Score: Sexton, 600; Dion, 443.

THE WEST.

IT is stated in a dispatch from Omaha that the Black Hills branch of the Union Pacific railroad will be built immediately. Two routes have been surveyed by the Union Pacific engineers—one being from Cheyenne and the other from Sidney—and the people of North Platte have also surveyed a route from that point. Either Cheyenne or Sidney will be the starting-point.

THE assassins—five in number—of a party of inoffensive Chinamen at Chico, Cal., have been tried and found guilty of murder in the second degree....The Chicago Tribune prints a series of crop reports from Illinois, Kansas, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and Nebraska, according to which the prospect is uniformly favorable for a growth and harvest of the very heaviest. Seeding and planting are well disposed of, and for winter and spring wheat, oats, corn, etc., the outlook has not been so flattering for years.

At North Vernon, Ind., one day last week, the dwelling of James Bess was destroyed by fire, and three small children, who were in the house, perished in the flames.

GEN. MILES has again punished a band of hostile Indians infesting the Tongue river country. The engagement was a sharp little affair, resulting in the death of four privates and the wounding of several officers and men. The Indians left fourteen dead on the field, and lost 450 ponies, with outfits, lodges, etc. The band belonged to the Minneconjous.

ADVICES from the West confirm the reports of a battle between a portion of Gen. Miles' command and a band of hostile Indians. The fight took place on Muddy creek, some eighty miles from the mouth of the Tongue river. The meager accounts we have of the affair state that "after an obstinate battle, the hostiles, under command of Lame Deer, were defeated and some fifty Indians killed and eighty wounded. This number of dead bodies was found on the field, and a large number are known to have been taken off by the warriors. The surprise was perfect. Gen. Miles, with companies H, L, C, and F, Second Cavalry, and twenty-five mounted soldiers of the Fifth Infantry charged upon the village, finding the Indians in their lodges, from which they instantly retreated and commenced a running fire on the troops while retreating. The pursuit lasted six hours, resulting in the capture of five hundred and thirty ponies, and a large quantity of Government supplies, a small portion being recognized by Gen. Miles as belonging to the fated Custer's command. The Government troops lost but four killed and ten wounded. The fight was gallant in the extreme, the hostiles and troops being many times mixed man to man. The Indians in this fight showed more bravery on square fighting ground than usual, which accounts for their repulse and heavy loss. Two of the soldiers were scalped and Gen. Miles came near being ambushed."

GOV. CULLOM has vetoed the bill passed at the recent session of the Illinois Legislature, making silver coin a legal tender for the payment of all debts....George Schneider, of Chicago, to whom the President recently tendered the position of Minister to Switzerland, has determined to decline the same on account of a pressure of private business....The two scoundrels—Mullins and Hughes—who attempted last fall to steal the remains of Abraham Lincoln from his tomb at Springfield, Ill., have been tried, found guilty, and sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the penitentiary.

THE session of the Illinois Legislature just closed was the most costly that ever met in the State. The following is a semi-official statement of its cost:

Pay of members	$144,040
Mileage of members	5,242
Postage, etc.	10,200
Pay of officers and employes	65,000
Incidental expenses	30,000
Total	$255,282

THE SOUTH.

A COLUMBUS (Ga.) dispatch announces the lynching of three negroes for the murder of Mrs. C. C. Chambliss, of Stewart county, Ga. They attempted to rob the house and were resisted by Mrs. Chambliss, when she was shot dead. The murderers were hanged with a trace-chain, negroes participating in the lynching.

WASHINGTON.

IT is stated in a dispatch from Washington that "the President, with the concurrence of the Cabinet, has determined to recall all the foreign Ministers. The theory is that those higher diplomatic officers sustain relations to the President similar to those of Cabinet Ministers; that the civil-service rules do not apply to them, and that they, in the very nature of the case, ought to change with the administration."....Simms, the fugitive slave who was captured by Attorney General Devens, when the latter was United States Marshal at Boston during Pierce's administration, and under the Fugitive Slave law turned over to the authorities at Savannah, Ga., has been appointed messenger in Gen. Devens' department.

IN the ten months of the current fiscal year the value of exports from the United States to foreign countries exceeded that of the imports $157,000,000, while the exports and imports of coin and bullion during the same period show only a difference of $282,415 against this country....Orders have been prepared for the closing of the national armories after the 30th of June, no appropriations having been made for the pay of workmen and other expenses.

THE commission appointed some time ago to investigate the workings of the New York Custom House have made a preliminary report to Secretary Sherman, in which they recommend a reduction of 20 per cent. in the working force of the office, and urge a discontinuance of the practice of levying political assessments and a general freeing of the customs service from the control of party. The President, to whom the report was submitted, addressed the following letter of indorsement to Secretary Sherman:

> I concur with the commission in their recommendations. It is my wish that the collection of revenues should be "free from partisan control, and organized on a strictly business basis, with the same guarantees for efficiency and fidelity in the selection of chief and subordinate officers that would be required by a prudent merchant." Party leaders should have no more influence in appointments than other equally respectable citizens. No assessments for political purposes on officers or subordinates should be allowed. No useless officer or employe should be retained. No officer should be required or permitted to take part in the management of political organizations, caucuses, conventions, or election campaigns. Their right to vote and express their views on public questions, either orally or through the press, is not denied, provided it does not interfere with the discharge of their official duties. Respectfully, [illegible]

PRESIDENT HAYES will visit Boston about June 17....No more officers are to be retained on duty at the White House....The Postoffice Department has let the contract for printing postal cards to the American Photo-Type Company, of New York....Postmaster General Key has reconsidered his determination to do the department advertising through the medium of advertising agents, and will deal directly with the publishers of newspapers....The administration has concluded to take vigorous steps toward putting an end to the Mexican raids across the Rio Grande into Texas. At a Cabinet meeting, the other day, it was determined that a letter should be addressed to the Mexican Government by the Secretary of State notifying that Government that it must take immediate steps to prevent any more raids into Texas, otherwise our military commander there will be instructed to follow marauders into Mexico and punish them upon that territory.

POLITICAL.

THE Brazilian mission was tendered to ex-Senator John A. Logan, and was by him declined for two reasons: first, because he did not desire to enter into enforced political retiracy, which would be the natural consequence of his acceptance; second, because the income ($12,000) was not such as would warrant him in a pecuniary sense in accepting.... The Associated Press agent at the national capital reports that, "according to previous arrangement, a secret meeting was held in Washington one night last week, for the purpose of organizing a national party," and furnishes the following brief report of the convocation: "About 150 persons were present. Those from the North expressed themselves strongly against the course of the President and the Cabinet, alleging that they retained in office men who are opposed to the principles of the Republican party, to the exclusion of its tried and true adherents. The representatives from the South declared that the President had discarded the States which elected him, and had given offices to the enemies of the party. Resolutions were adopted organizing the meeting into a national joint body. Permanent officers were elected, with power to institute branches throughout the country, with headquarters at Washington."

IT is rumored in Washington political circles that, as Attorney General Devens is not altogether contented with his position in the Cabinet, the vacant Justiceship on the Supreme bench of the United States will be placed at his disposal by President Hayes.

A WASHINGTON dispatch to the Chicago Tribune says Senator Conkling, "in his conversation, is quite bitter in his denunciation of the President's policy, particularly as regards Louisiana."

THE Ohio Democrats have called their State Convention to meet at Columbus on the 25th of July....Gen. Cady, of the Ohio State Journal, has been appointed Minister to the Sandwich Islands.

GENERAL.

BURNED: The office of the National Printing Company, on Franklin street, Chicago, loss $65,000; the Youngstown rolling-mill, at Youngstown, Ohio, loss $100,000; J. & A. J. Murrer's molding and looking-glass factory, at Cincinnati, Ohio, loss $90,000; forty stores and dwellings in the town of Walkerton, Bruce county, Canada, loss $250,000....The checker-match between Yates, of Brooklyn, and Martins, the British crack player, for the championship of the world, has just been concluded at New York, after a contest of twenty-one days, the American coming off victorious. Forty-nine games were played, Yates winning three and Martin one, while forty-five were drawn. Yates is only 19 years old.

THE Statistician of the Department of Agriculture at Washington reports, as a result of the investigation of losses from the diseases of swine during the past twelve months, the destruction of 4,000,000 animals of all ages, and the money loss more than $20,000,000. One-fifth of the reported loss occurred in the State of Illinois. Next in prominence are Missouri, Iowa and Indiana, which together lose $10,000,000. The losses were very small in the country bordering on the great lakes and the Pacific coast. The apparent loss is equivalent to one-third of the sum of the exports of the pork products last year.

THE perils and uncertainties of ocean navigation are curiously shown in the loss of the Pacific Mail steamer San Francisco. This vessel, sailing over a course that hundreds before her had safely taken, struck an unseen and unsuspected rock in mid-ocean, and in one hour went to the bottom, ship and cargo proving a total loss. Fortunately all on board were safely landed in the boats on the Mexican coast....The vessel was valued at between $350,000 and $400,000....A fire at Montreal, Canada, last week, destroyed over sixty houses in the quarter known as Griffintown. Loss, $150,000.... The Israelites of America have just held their annual convention in New York. From the annual report of the Committee on Statistics we learn that there are about 250,000 Jews in the country. There are fourteen public institutions under the control of the Jews, and fifteen newspapers and magazines devoted to Judaism. The Jewish secret orders or societies were four in number, comprising the Independent Order of B'nai Brith, with a membership of 20,000; the Independent Order of Free Sons of Israel, with 8,604 members; the Order of Kesher Shem Barzel, 10,000 members, and the Improved Order of Free Sons of Israel, 2,632 members. The value of the Israelitish church property in America is placed at $5,897,400.

THE house of Alexander Snyder, of Portland, Ontario, was destroyed by fire one night last week, and two children perished in the flames. ....Later accounts of the Montreal fire place the loss at $500,000....From the Sandwich islands comes an explanation of the recent destructive submarine convulsion on the South American coast. The cause of this upheaval is now discovered to be the sudden eruption of the volcano Kilauea, on the island of Hawaii, the same which caused the great earthquakes of 1837, 1840, and 1868....Burned: The tobacco factory of Spaulding & Merrick, River street, Chicago, loss $75,000, insurance $35,000; the wholesale drug-store of W. H. Brown & Co., Baltimore, loss $95,000, fully insured; a large quantity of lumber at Greenwood, Mich., loss $35,000, insurance $10,000; a coal-breaker at Wilkesbarre, Pa., loss $80,000, insurance $25,000; two dry-goods stores at Monckton, N. B., loss $55,000, insurance $40,000.

THE TURCO-RUSSIAN WAR.

ADVICES from Russian sources in Asia Minor claim that the Turks in Armenia are in a critical position. The Russian forces investing Kars and Erzeroum have secured advantageous positions commanding both places. Their surrender is claimed as certain. ....The turbulence of the Softas in Constantinople has induced the Government to proclaim martial law in the city and vicinity. Street assemblages are forbidden, and disturbers of the peace will be shot or banished.... Reports are current of a Bulgarian rising in the Balkans....The cable reports a brisk engagement on the Danube, near Nikopolis, between a Turkish ironclad and the Russian fortifications. The Turks destroyed the earthworks and the enemy retreated, leaving forty dead on the field....Roumania's reply to Count Andrassy's note respecting the free navigation of the Danube was unsatisfactory. The Austrian Government replied in energetic terms that it is not disposed to recognize Roumania as a belligerent.

THE Russians have succeeded in blowing up another Turkish monitor on the Danube. A small party of Russians approached the vessel under cover of darkness, carrying a chain of small torpedoes filled with dynamite. No lookout being kept aboard the monitor, they securely lodged the chain across her bows. On their return they discharged the whole series of torpedoes by means of an electric battery. The monitor was blown into the air, and all on board perished....The Czar has issued a proclamation forbidding the granting of letters of marque. His Majesty says he accepts the declaration of the treaty of Paris regarding free navigation to neutrals, and guarantees careful observance of this provision of the treaty....A Turkish force of 60,000 or 70,000 men is massed at Shumla, a fortified city in Bulgaria, standing in a gorge on the northern declivity of the Balkan range. This stronghold is considered one of the keys to the Turkish capital.

IT is again reported that Russia, Germany and Austria have come to an understanding by which the war is to be localized....The inhabitants of Rustchuk, Silistria, Varna and Shumla, the four fortresses comprising the Turkish quadrilateral, have been notified that unless they have six months' provisions on hand they must leave within twelve days....A dispatch from Bucharest says it is now certain that the Roumanian army will not cross the Danube with the invading forces, but will remain on the Roumanian side to guard the right flank. The departure of the Egyptian contingent from Alexandria was delayed by a refusal of twenty-seven English engineers of the fleet to sail without the payment of arrears of salary.

THERE are serious apprehensions of a popular uprising in Constantinople against the authorities. The populace are greatly incensed at the military reverses sustained in Asia....A number of prominent persons, including two editors, have been banished for participation in the recent softa demonstration in Constantinople....The Scherif of Mecca has placed the treasures of the holy shrine, the accumulated money-gifts from pilgrims, at the Sultan's disposal. The treasures aggregate 200,000,000 piasters.

A CABLEGRAM announces another attack upon Batoum, with disastrous results. It is stated that the Russians, with a large force, made a series of assaults on the Turkish positions, but after several hours' fighting withdrew. Their loss was heavy....Large numbers of disaffected Circassian troops in the Russian service have been disarmed and sent to the rear....If Constantinople rumors are to be believed, the Sultan's Government have determined, for the first time in the history of the empire, to enlist Christians in the army. The reports say that a levy has been made upon the Christian population for 200,000 men.

AND now comes the Russian version of the late action at Batoum, claiming a victory, where, according to Turkish reports, they were so badly worsted. "You pays your money and takes your choice."....Some Bashi-Bazouks lately crossed the Danube between Kalarack and Jalomitza. They captured fourteen Roumanian militiamen, and cut off the calves of their legs. The Turkish Government officially announces the recapture of Ardahan, in Asia....The New York Herald's correspondent in Vienna telegraphs that it is announced from Warsaw that the Czar is irritated at the slowness manifested in the conduct of the campaign and the bad nourishment supplied to the troops. He has ordered the mobilization of three more divisions for the Caucasus, where the Circassian insurrection is a source of some anxiety.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

ADVICES from Egypt state that "peace with Abyssinia has not yet been concluded. Gordon Pasha had opened negotiations which seemed to be progressing most favorably, when King John discovered a conspiracy in his camp, which he attributed to Egyptian agency. He immediately arrested Gordon Pasha's envoys and two sons of the Egyptian Sheik of Zeila, and cut an arm and leg off the two latter."

EX-PRESIDENT GRANT and party arrived at Liverpool on the 28th of May, were warmly welcomed by the Mayor and other distinguished officials, and left the day after for London.

ADVICES from Shanghai state that the sufferings from the famine in the northern provinces of China are unabated. Thousands are dying of starvation.

THE wheat trade in England continues dull. Millers have been buying very sparingly at reduced prices. Agricultural prospects there and on the continent are promising. The growing crops, in France and Italy especially, give general satisfaction. Germany appears to possess a large surplus for export. Large shipments will be made from Revel, Russia. It is probable that the large quantities usually shipped from Odessa will be sent for shipment from Baltic ports.... The Cretans propose to avail themselves of the opportunity furnished by Turkey's extremity, and, if certain guarantees are not conceded, will make a bold stroke for freedom from the galling yoke of Turkish rule....The City of Brussels, the steamer in which the Canadian pilgrims to Rome took passage from New York, for whose safety there was for a time a feeling of painful anxiety, has arrived safely at Liverpool....In France, President MacMahon has removed the Republican prefects in nearly every department of the republic, and appointed in their places persons known to be strongly in favor of the return of the Bonapartists to power.

GEN. GRANT'S reception upon landing at Liverpool was an extremely flattering one. In honor of his arrival, the cable tells us, "all the shipping in Liverpool docks exhibited a profuse display of bunting, flags of all nations waving along seven miles of water-front, presenting a magnificent coup d'œil. As the Indiana neared the docks, Gen. Grant was seen standing on the bridge with the Captain, acknowledging the cheers of the immense crowds which lined the water-front and every pier and vessel along the river. As the General and his party, in a tug, ran alongside the wharf, a tremendous, deafening cheer went up from the immense throng of people that congregated to see the great Yankee General. Thousands of hats were raised as the Mayor slowly advanced to meet the ex-President, reading as he moved forward, according to the old English custom when greeting noted guests, an address of formal welcome. After the cheering had subsided, Gen. Grant quietly replied to the address of the Mayor in a few well-chosen words."....The report of another destructive earthquake on the South American coast, received some time ago by telegraph, is fully confirmed by mail advices, which furnish some details of the terrible disaster. A tidal wave, varying in height from thirty to sixty feet, swept shoreward with frightful velocity, along the coast of Peru and Bolivia, partially or wholly destroying the cities of Antofagasta, Iquique, Arica, Tambo de Maro, Pabellon de Pica and Ilo. Although severe shocks of earthquake were felt, they caused but little damage. The destruction of life and property was owing entirely to the frightful upheaval and ingress of the sea. The loss of life, it is calculated, will reach 700 or 800, while the destruction of property is counted by the millions....A London dispatch announces the death, in that city, of John Lothrop Motley, the well-known American historian. Mr. Motley was 63 years old....The long-threatened orders for the reinforcement of the garrisons in Alsace and Lorraine have at length been issued in Berlin.

A SETTLEMENT of the disturbance between Egypt and Abyssinia has been agreed on.... The Gladstone anti-Turkish meetings in England are being largely attended. At Birmingham, the other day, the ex-Premier addressed an enthusiastic audience of 30,000. A resolution was unanimously passed declaring that England ought to use her influence to exact from Turkey effectual guarantees against the oppression of Christians....The editor of a Marseilles journal has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment and a fine of 4,000 francs for writing disrespectfully of President MacMahon....The Catholic Church in Wieschen, Grand Duchy of Posen, was lately struck by lightning during service. Six persons were killed and about seventy seriously injured.

A BEAR STORY.

Perilous Adventure of Three Sailors in Greenland.

[From the Dundee (Scotland) Advertiser.]

Three of the crew of the steamship Intrepid, Captain Soutar, had a very exciting adventure at the Greenland seal fishery this season. During the time that their vessel was last beset among the ice, three of the crew—Thomas Royall, Wolverhampton; James Wistet, Peterhead; and William Mulligan, Dundee—set out one day to pay a visit to the ship Perseverance, of Peterhead, which lay apparently about four miles distant. After walking about a couple of miles it was seen that the distance between the two ships had been misjudged, and that in reality they were six miles apart, and the dangerous nature of the journey began to dawn upon the seamen when they realized how far they were from any vessel, and that their sealing clubs were the only weapons with which they were armed. When they came to realize the real distance they began to deliberate whether it would not be the best course to return to their ship. One of the trio insisted on making the journey, while the others were of opinion that they should give up the attempt. In the midst of the debate an unwelcome visitor came upon the scene in the shape of a she bear, with one of her cubs, and, as she was fast coming up between the men and their ship, the only chance was to run on in the hope of reaching the Perseverance, a distance of about four miles. When the men took to their heels the bear quickened her pace, and in a short time was close upon the sailors. To attempt to face the animal with their clubs was useless, and accordingly one by one of the men took off portions of his clothing and threw them on the ice. In this way the progress of the bear was retarded, as Bruin stopped to snuff and tear at each of the articles as she came up to them. By this means the men were enabled to keep a little ahead for a couple of miles, by which time, however, they had parted with most of their clothing, one of them having nothing but his pants, a cravat and a woolen shirt upon him. He had retained possession of his club, and, fastening his cravat to the end of the weapon, he waved it as a signal of distress, and, fortunately, the attention of the crew of the Perseverance was attracted to the perilous position of the three seamen. Several of the crew of the Perseverance immediately set out, armed with guns, and, after running about a mile they came up to the three men just in time to save them, as they had almost no clothing left, and were quite exhausted with the chase. The bear and her cub were so close behind that the rescuers had no difficulty in dispatching them with several bullets. The following morning the three sailors returned to the Intrepid. They were escorted part of the way by a number of the crew of the Perseverance, and, the male bear having been seen in the vicinity, apparently on the lookout for the she bear and her cub, he was likewise killed. The most of the men's clothes and their sea-boots were picked up, all more or less torn. The three men had been kindly treated on board the Perseverance and supplied with clothing, so that they suffered no bad effects from their exposure and exciting adventure.

Commercial Frauds.

Perhaps the most lamentable circumstance in connection with the frauds and failures that have happened during the last three years is the fact that it seems possible for a man to be guilty of almost any delinquency in regard to money, and yet retain his social position, if his dishonesty be only on a sufficiently large scale. To give an instance in point: A man came to a friend for a loan of $100,000, and the friend, with very great difficulty, managed to oblige him. Within a few weeks the borrower failed, having meantime settled largely on his wife, and his failure caused the ruin of the lender. Not long since the latter observed to a friend, with great emotion, "I have experienced to-day the greatest insult I ever had in my life. That fellow P., who ruined me, positively had the audacity to ask me to drive up town in his carriage, which, with its liveried servants, was at his office door." The P.'s are reported to "live delightfully," and their dinners and parties are greatly in request. The head of another firm, which failed at over $6,000,000 not long ago, and haven't paid one cent on the dollar, lives with similar elegance. As long as the doers of such deeds are exempt from social ostracism commercial morality will remain what it is.—New York Sun.

A Rival Yosemite.

A new grove of giant trees, recently discovered, 100 miles south of the famous giant trees of Yosemite, is just explored and described. It is on a line with the other grove, 6,000 feet in altitude. Instead of a small cluster of thirty or forty trees, there are 10,000 trees, covering six miles square. Besides several thousand of old fellows, whose age is estimated at from 1,200 to 4,000 years, there are thousands of young chaps from 100 to 1,000 years old, and full of vigor. The older trees, being decapitated by storms and by weight of winter snows on their bushy tops, are mostly overtopped by the juniors. Some of these fallen trees, 3,000 to 4,000 years old, have revealed underneath the buried bodies of ancestral sequoias of similar size, which grew there 8,000 years ago—say thirty feet in diameter. Large lakes and waterfalls are found along the route. The attractions are so much superior to the Yosemite that it is contemplated to extend the route of travel to embrace this interesting circuit.—California Letter.

Sheridan's Babies.

On Monday night the household of Gen. Phil Sheridan was thrown into a state of confusion. Certain swaddling garments were brought forth. An addition was expected in Phil's family ranks. There were just clothes enough for one. But a pair came, and two had to be garmented.

"General, I trust that you will pardon me for tampering with your family affairs," said a reporter this morning, "but it is understood that you are a father."

"Yes," said the little General, brightening up, "and a happy one, too. All that bothers me, however, is that I made a wrong calculation. I expected one, while two came. They are girls at that, and bouncing ones in the bargain."

The babes being both of the female persuasion, the General can't make army officers out of them, and he is seriously contemplating making them both goddesses of liberty.—Chicago Post.

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

THE failures of the last year in the United States have been far fewer and smaller in amount than in England or Canada.

THE Railway Age says that 395 American locomotives, worth $5,490,640, have been exported in seven years, and that "the reputation of American engines is steadily increasing."

NEW ORLEANS resolves to vote this spring on the subject of raising money to complete her Pacific railroad to Texas. A tax of 1 per cent. for four years is proposed, and, if it is carried, the road will be finished within twelve months, there remaining only 120 miles to be graded. New Orleans appears to be aware that no well-regulated city can afford in this age to be without railroad lines.

GOOD authorities estimated the last cotton crop in the United States at 4,100,000 bales. It turns out to be 4,500,000. The crop in Egypt and India was larger than expected, and there is enough of the raw product to last until the beginning of the new crop year. The war in Europe has caused a falling off in consumption and a decline of price. Neither a scarcity nor a rise is to be expected this spring.

THE people of the South anticipate no benefit, but rather serious injury, from the European war. They draw their food mainly from the Northwest, and the appreciation in the price of breadstuffs certainly does not help them. On the other hand, there is no hope of an increase in the price of cotton. Turkey is a large consumer of cheap cotton goods, and Russia also takes great quantities of English manufactured goods. The closing of these markets will of course reduce the demand for raw material in England, and suffering in the South will result. The only remedy is to plant corn, and this has been done to an unprecedented extent in the Southwest.

DURING the eight months ending with February, 1876, the coffee imported by the United States amounted in weight to 255,784,000 pounds, and in value to $43,140,800; the importations of tea for the same period amounted to 43,331,000 pounds, valued at $13,796,000. During the eight months ending with February, 1877, the importation of coffee had fallen to 190,574,000 pounds, valued at $29,344,000; while the quantity of tea brought into the country was only 38,565,000 pounds, valued at $11,175,000. In this country coffee is ranked among the necessaries of life, and the decrease of nearly 25 per cent. in the use of it may be taken to mean that the pinch of hard times is nearly 25 per cent. tighter this year than last.

An Extraordinary Tragedy.

Spalatzo, in the Austrian province of Dalmatia, was a few weeks ago the scene of a most extraordinary and terrible tragedy. Opposite the parish church lived a householder named Tomic, who, becoming suddenly a prey to mad rage, killed his wife and then his father, who had attempted to restrain him. When the police came they found that Tomic had everywhere effectually barred an entry, and taken up a commanding position with a musket and plenty of ammunition. They were, therefore, compelled to turn back, and meanwhile Tomic put a bullet through a young man who crossed the street, and severely wounded a woman. The police then drew a cordon around the house, but Tomic's musket commanded the space between his house, the church, and the top of the adjacent streets, and no one dared cross the street or approach the body of the young man. At length a clergyman who had great influence with Tomic bravely went forward and implored him to give up to his care his little child. The father's answer to this appeal was by throwing out her limbs one by one! Then he resumed his fusilade. The authorities would not allow the police to fire, inasmuch as they deemed the man bereft of reason. So the only course was to continue the blockade. All sorts of devices were suggested. Some were for firing on Tomic with stupefying cartridges, others for concentrating the fire engine force on the house, and all this time the unhappy sexton of the parish was sending up from the bell tower a wail for food, he having gone to ring the bell just before the tragedy began, and his only mode of egress being in front of the maniac's window. After the blockade had lasted two days, and Tomic showed no signs of giving in, it was resolved to keep up a perfect hailstorm of stones at all the windows of the house while the door was forced. The madman flew to the garret, where it was no easy matter to disarm without killing him. Altogether, he had killed four and wounded five persons.

The Late Ex-Gov. Kent.

Edward Kent, the venerable ex-Governor of Maine, who died at Bangor Saturday, at the age of 75 years, was graduated at Harvard in the same class with Ralph Waldo Emerson and Josiah Quincy. He was Whig candidate for Governor six times, but elected only twice. In 1837, he was elected by 198 majority, and in 1840 by a majority of only sixty-seven in the largest vote ever polled in the State. The last year was that of the ever-memorable Harrison campaign. George Evans proclaimed: "As Maine goes, so goes the Union," and the poets of the day said:

Oh, have you heard the news from Maine, Maine,
Maine,
Rolling, rolling the country through?
She went, hell-bent, for Gov'nor Kent,
And Tippecanoe and Tyler too!
And with them we will beat little Van,
Van, Van is a used-up man,
And with them we will beat little Van!

Arms for the Turks.

The Providence Tool Company are making 600 guns a day for the Turks, and have yet 180,000 to make before the contract is completed. There are a number of inspectors from the Turkish Government at their works, but they are wholly incompetent to do the work for which they are sent, and the only safe inspection is made by United States officers detailed by the request of the Turkish Government to pass on the arms. The Turkish inspectors speak neither English nor French, and know nothing about arms except what they have learned since their arrival here. Mr. Peabody, the inventor of the rifle manufactured, receives a royalty of $300 a day.—New York Sun.

BARNUM AND CHARLEY ROSS.

The Great Showman Sets Himself About Finding the Boy.

[From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.]

The negotiations between P. T. Barnum, the showman, and Christian K. Ross, the father of the kidnapped Charley, by which the former is to offer $10,000 for the return of the child, and the latter to agree not to attempt any prosecution of those bringing him back, were finished at a conference in this city, and the formal offer is now made. The idea first occurred to Mr. Barnum when he was in Philadelphia two years ago, but he decided not to countenance any condoning of the offense. Lately, however, the idea has been growing upon him that the persons who have had the child in custody since the death of the original abductors must find him a burden on their hands which they would be glad to get rid of for money if they could be sure they would escape exposure. These parties being only accessories after the deed, there would be little or no moral harm in giving them their safety for the return of the child. Mr. Barnum, being an eminent man and having no connection with the Ross family, could best negotiate with those holding the child, and thus relieve the parental anguish that has been so strained for the last three years, while helping to keep himself before the public. Accordingly he telegraphed his offer to Mr. Ross, and requested that gentleman to visit him at Bridgeport, and the two men met there. Mr. Barnum's proposition then was that he should offer the reward as proposed, and, if the boy was secured, some arrangement should be made for exhibiting him by which Mr. Ross should have a large share of the profits, and thus, perhaps, restore his estate of $60,000 which he has spent in the search. Mr. Ross made no answer at that time, but returned to Philadelphia to consult with his wife and her brothers, who are quite wealthy, and met Mr. Barnum at the Haynes House to accept the offer, with the condition that if the boy is found it shall be discretionary with the family to reimburse Mr. Barnum or arrange for the child's exhibition, but in no case is any other exhibitor to have the privilege, and these terms were readily accepted by Mr. Barnum.

Mr. Ross and his family dislike the publicity the affair has given them, but feel that their honor and affections are too deeply involved for them to drop the search.

Following is the formal announcement of Mr. Barnum's offer:

> I will pay $10,000 in cash for the delivery to me alive of the kidnapped child, Charley Ross, or for information that will lead to his recovery. I most solemnly and sacredly pledge my word of honor and my reputation as an upright business man not to attempt for myself to discover the identity of the persons negotiating with me in this matter, nor to convey to any other person any hints or clews by which any accusation or even suspicion shall be directed against them. The parents of the child unite with me in this pledge, and agree, if their darling child is by this means restored to them, to abandon all attempts to punish any person connected with his abduction or concealment; they agree never to appear against such parties, and, with myself, will use every endeavor to shield them from exposure. For the last three years these parents have suffered more than death, and now that Mosher and Douglass, the real abductors, are dead, it is hoped that the persons who have the child in custody will be willing to accept this reward and immunity. The reward shall be paid in current money as soon as the child is identified by its parents. As an additional security to the persons bringing him, a reasonable time shall elapse between his delivery and the public announcement of the fact, that the parties delivering him shall have every opportunity to avoid discovery.
> P. T. BARNUM, Bridgeport, Conn.
> I sanction the above arrangement for myself and wife. CHRISTIAN K. ROSS.

Foxes Nursed by a Cat.

About the 1st of April, George Green, a son of W. R. Green, who lives in Ashmore township, captured two foxes only a few days old, took them home and gave them to a mother cat that had just lost her kittens. The cat has carefully cared for them from that day to this, and, although they have grown faster than kittens usually do, seems to think that they are her own young, and will not allow them to leave her for a moment. —Charleston Plaindealer.

THE Emperor Alexander has thanked the Holy Synod for finishing, after twenty years of incessant labor, the translation of the Bible into the Russian vernacular. This is the first translation into Russian approved by the Czar and the church. The British and Foreign Bible Society's translation is now prohibited in Russia.

OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

The Imports, Exports and Trade Balance.

[Washington Cor. New York World.]

A statement has been prepared at the State Department at Washington showing the value of the imports, exports and total trade, and the trade balance between the United States and all other countries and possessions of North and South America and the West Indies, for the year ending June 30, 1876—that for the last fiscal year not having been completed—which shows a balance of trade against the United States of $93,767,379, excluding the British North American possessions. There is a balance in favor of the United States in British Guiana, Honduras and the West Indies, Chili, Peru, Santo Domingo and British North America, amounting to about $10,000,000. The largest balance against us is in the Spanish West Indies, and amounts to $49,227,880. Brazil is next, with $34,287,687.

The Chief of the Federal Bureau of Statistics furnishes a statement of our commercial transactions with foreign countries for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, from which the following items of information are extracted. The exports of domestic products, re-exports of foreign commodities and imports of merchandise have been annexed:

Domestic exports	$655,463,969
Re-exports of foreign goods	21,270,035
Total	$676,734,004
Imports	476,677,871
Balance	$200,056,133

Owing to the fact that the domestic exports are presented in mixed values of coin and currency and the imports in gold the foregoing balance is an apparent one; the real balance, however, will be sufficiently large to show that we are living well within our means and making preparations for a better order of things at home. England and her possessions have been our best customers. Of the $655,463,969 of domestic products sent abroad they took $422,416,533, and $13,334,587 of the $21,270,035 of foreign commodities re-exported. Germany was our next-best customer, her purchases amounting to $51,107,147. France and her possessions received from us $48,327,066; Spain and her possessions, $26,169,791; the Netherlands and Dutch Indies, $13,692,513; Russia, $11,922,285, and the balance was distributed among the several nations of the old and new worlds, Greece receiving the smallest amount, $143,235.

Turkish Information.

Sultan—The sovereign of the Turkish empire—the recognized organ of all executive power in the state. His headquarters are at Constantinople.

Porte—The Government of the Turkish empire.

Sublime Porte—The official name of the Government, so called from the gate of the Sultan's palace.

Grand Vizier—The chief Minister of the Turkish empire.

Divan—The Turkish Council of State—the "Cabinet."

Grand Mufti—Chief interpreter of the Mohammedan law and head of the "wise men"—jurists, theologians and literati—who assemble for consultation on his order. He is mostly styled the Chief of the Faithful. A writer says a fetwa or decree from him would summon around the standard of the Prophet all the fanatical hordes of Islam to fight to the death against the "infidels, in the firm belief that death on the battle field is a sure passport to Paradise."

Pashas—Governors, Viceroys, commanders, civil and military rulers of provinces.

Deys—About the same as Pashas.

Sheik—The name given the heads of Arabian tribes or clans. It means elder, or eldest in dignity and authority.

Osmandi—A Turkish official.

Islam—The religion of Mohammed.

Islams—Mohammedans themselves.

Musselman—A follower of Mohammed.

Ottoman empire—Another name for the Turkish empire, and derives its name from Osman, its founder.

Osmanlis—The Turks proper.

Not all followers of the Prophet are Turks. In European Turkey there are, in round numbers, 5,000,000 Mohammedans, less than half of whom are Osmanlis, the rest being of Slavonic descent, but none the less ardent worshipers of Islam.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

An Emperor in a Jersey Court.

It is rare that a real Emperor stalks into the courts of our republic to seek redress at the hands of American law. But, rare as this scene may be, New Jersey now looks upon such an one. Emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria, has there entered suit in chancery against Dr. E. W. Buck, a physician of Hudson county. And this is why: Some years ago, when Dr. Buck was County Physician of Hudson county, a man who registered his name as Aloysius Molnar committed suicide at the Hotel Hansa, at Hoboken. On seacrhing his room, a large amount of money and other valuables were found. No friend appeared to claim the property, and the Surrogate appointed Dr. Buck administrator of the estate, and his assets have ever since been in the hands of that gentleman. It is claimed by the Austrian authorities that this man was really one John Kunner, employed in a railroad office under the Austrian Government, and that he stole a large quantity of bonds and fled with them to America, and that the money found in his room is the proceeds of the robbery. The Emperor asks the New Jersey Court of Chancery to listen to proofs of the asseverations, and order the funds to be returned to the Austrian treasury.

The Cossacks.

The Cossacks are divided into several corps—the Cossacks of the Don, the Cossacks of the Ukraine, the Cossacks of the Caucasus, etc. Each of these divisions has a chief, who is called an Ataman, and holds the rank of General, and all the Cossacks of the empire are united under a single chief, who has the title of the "Attaman General." This latter title always devolves upon the hereditary Grand Duke. The Cossack clothes and equips himself, and his uniform and his horse belong to himself. He wears a large, round, low cap made of skin from Astrakhan, wide pantaloons stuffed into his boots and reaching just below his knees, the whole covered by a kind of overcoat buttoning on the back and having three long flaps reaching to the feet and fastened on the full length. On his breast, to the left and right, in vertical cases, he carries six cartridges at each side. In his belt he carries a pionard. A baldrick hangs from his left shoulder and passes to the left side, where it supports a long saber in a leather scabbard. On his back, hanging from a bandolier, and wrapped in a case made of goat's skin, he carries his rifle. The Cossack always carries in his hand a whip, with a short lash, which he calls kinjal. His horse is small and rather ugly, and, though he is made of good stuff, his form is somewhat angular. To form an idea of the Cossack saddle, imagine an ordinary saddle upon which would be fastened by a strap a square leather cushion about four inches high. This is the reason that at first sight one is so much surprised to see this curious-looking cavalier perched so high up on his saddle. He sticks on his horse's back by sticking his knees into the animal's sides with all his strength, which gives the legs the appearance of a pair of pincers. The stirrup is an equally curious thing. The bottom is round and thick enough, but from that up it resembles very much one of those tin boxes in which preserves are sold. It has been already said that the Cossack's horse is his personal property, and it may be added that he turns it to business account by hiring it out. Since the arrival of the troops at Kischeneff they have been the delight of the collegians, who, for a rouble an hour, have been enabled to make promenades on horseback in bands on these valiant little animals.—Kischeneff Cor. New York Herald.

Murder Without Motive.

The late murder and suicide at Brandon, Vt., is in some respects the strangest of the strange crimes for which peaceful Vermont has of late years been famous. Frank Brassor, Jr., aged 15, borrowed his employer's fine repeating rifle for a day's hunting Saturday morning. His father, who was working in a swamp, heard two quick shots near by, but thought nothing of it till a passer-by found the boy dead in a ditch, with a pistol-ball in his body, and the rifle missing. About 10 o'clock at night a section-hand on the Rutland railroad met a young man near Pittsford, who fired at him with a rifle, but was immediately knocked down, bereft of his rifle and let go, the railroad man keeping on to Brandon, where he heard of the murder and found the rifle to be the one taken from the dead boy. A hand-car was manned and started back, but when near the scene of the tussle a pistol-shot was heard, and the murderer, a young man of fine appearance and clothing, with small white hands, was found to have shot himself dead through the head. He is since found to have been an English lad of fine education and quiet manner, who worked for a while on a farm in a neighboring town, and has been loitering about Brandon. It has been thought without particular reason that he was crazy, but the facts indicate a deliberate murder from pure covetousness. His light curly hair had been dyed black, and a burglar's mask and other articles were found in his pocket, with burnt cork, with which he had partly blackened his face. He probably saw the Brassor boy with his handsome gun, and to get it coolly killed him, afterward fired on the railroad man, thinking him one of his pursuers, and finally, when he found he was really in danger, killed himself to escape hanging. —Springfield Republican.

The First English Printing.

About 400 years ago the art of printing was introduced into England by William Caxton. There is some dispute regarding the precise date, but Mr. William Blades, Caxton's biographer, inclines to the belief that Caxton arrived in England in 1476. At all events the first indisputable date is that of the "Dictes and Sayinges of the Philosophers, enprynted by me, William Caxton, at Westmestre, the yere of our Lord m.cccc.l.xxvij." The present year has therefore been adopted for the celebration of the four hundreth anniversary of the introduction of the art of printing into England, and next month there will be held at South Kensington an exhibition of antiquities and curiosities connected with the art in its early days. The proceeds of the exhibition are to be added to an existing fund for the erection of a monument to Caxton.

As an instance of the decline of Bonapartism in France, La Nation, which has had only a six months' existence, and which absorbed a short time ago another Bonapartist paper, Le Petit Caporal, is to be fused in its turn with L'Ordre. Le Petit Caporal is to be resuscitated for another trial in case a capital of $60,000 can be raised for it.

DRAGGED TO QUICK DEATH.

Particulars of the Calamity at the Launching of the Steamer Saratoga, at Chester, Pa.

[Gleaned from the Philadelphia papers.]

The launching was to take place at 9 o'clock. The beautiful weather had drawn an immense concourse of spectators to the ship-yard. On the vessel were Capt. [illegible], who is to command her, Capt. Curtis, who is to command her mate, the Niagara, which was launched a few weeks ago; an agent of the owners; Miss Fountain, who was to christen the vessel, and two citizens of Chester. Below were forty workmen, to whom was confided the labor necessary to affect the launch. At a little distance away, on an eminence from which he might command the whole scene, stood Mr. John Fountain, the superintendent of the yard. The ship is held upon the stocks by means of two stout oak planks securely fastened upon a cradle, or series of cradles, conforming to the shape of the hull. The cradles are held together by a long chain passing under the keel. At the prow there are two planks, intended to retard the launch after all other obstructions are removed. Two other boards, that show by their parting when the ship begins to move, are called the tell-tale; one of these is fast to the stocks and the other to the ship. The very warm weather melted the grease on the hull and cradles sooner than was expected. Mr. Fountain suddenly observed that the tell-tale boards were parting, and this meant that the ship was pulling. The superintendent knew that the momentum gained by the slightest movement would make it impossible to stop the launch; so orders were at once given in a loud voice to stand from under before he gave the order to cut loose the last stays. At the same time the men at the saws were ordered to cut the planks holding the cradles, as, if this was not done promptly, the movement of the ship would wrench the bolts from their sockets, and there would be danger of the vessel, frame and all, toppling over. The two planks were sawed, and the vessel glided into the water with the velocity of lightning. Miss Fountain raised the bottle of Saratoga water prepared for the christening, and was about to break it over the bow, when a scream arose, and, terrified beyond measure, she dropped it overboard.

The ways were now clear, and, as the screams that terrified Miss Fountain reached the ears of the spectators, their eyes were greeted by a sickening sight. The great chain holding the cradles was dragging along in the wake of the ship, carrying in its folds men, iron bars and wooden blocks. One man was cut in half; another was mashed beyond recognition; others were limbless; some were carried into the water with the vessel. A scene of great confusion followed. The bell of the yard was rung, and in the course of a few minutes the news spread all over the city and brought a crowd of women and children to the gates, clamoring for admission.

The workmen devoted themselves to the extrication of the killed and wounded from the debris of the stocks. Seven dead bodies were soon recovered and identified with more or less certainty.

John Nelson was completely doubled up. The back part of his head was torn off, and one ear was gone. The head was cut off and was hanging to the body by a slight ligament. The arms were cut off and were hanging on the clothing, and the lower part of the body was crushed. He was identified only by the brass tag which is given to each of the workmen when they enter the yard in the morning, and the number on which corresponds with a number opposite the names on the books of the firm. Nelson was a single man. The injuries of the men were principally below the breast, and the bodies and legs were badly torn, in some instances the limbs having been torn out from the sockets.

Several of the deceased have left large families. All the killed and wounded were workmen employed in the yard, having formed part of a gang of about fifty men who knocked the blocks from under the keel of the vessel preparatory to the cutting asunder of the fastenings at the bow, by which act the vessel was liberated, and sent sliding down her greasy way and into the river.

Russian Sleeping-Rooms.

The homes of the rich are furnished with every appliance for comfort and every embellishment for the gratification of the taste that modern refinement can suggest or modern art supply. The splendor of the Orient there meets the luxury of the Occident, producing sumptuous effects elsewhere unsurpassed. Yet in the appointments of the stateliest residences there linger traces of the Tartar origin of the race, and of the habits of an ancestry that dwelt in the romantic tent of the steppes. The sleeping-rooms of even royalty are meagerly furnished, and point back to a time when the Muscovite dropped carelessly upon a divan and enjoyed his slumber without disrobing. The narrow chamber of the Czar Nicholas contained only a hard camp bedstead and a few articles of cheap furniture, and that of Alexander I. was equipped in a similar style of simplicity. The Russian cares little for the seclusion of a private chamber, and is apt to take his night's rest by simply folding his pelisse about him and reposing on the broad leather-covered sofa which is an appendage of most apartments.

DISEASE IN WAR.

The Great Enemy of the Russians.

[From the New York Times.]

The Russians will encounter one enemy on the Lower Danube which the most daring courage and the best organization cannot completely conquer—that is disease. The flat banks on the Roumanian side of the great river are overflown in the spring. As the water retires, there is a broad stretch of quagmires and stagnant pools for miles in extent—a prolific source of malarial fevers. As the heat increases in the burning summer, these marshy hollows are filled with a high, rank grass, so that for miles the eye can see nothing but broad steppes of waving grass, without a tree or a house. These meadows, however, seem equally unhealthy with the more swampy plains of spring, and, owing to the putrescent vegetation and the scarcity of pure water, are a peculiar nidus for cholera and intestinal diseases. In the campaign of 1828, the Russians are believed to have lost 80,000 men between the Pruth and the Balkans, of whom much the larger proportion perished from "plague"—which appears to have been a malignant form of typhus, cholera, and typhoid or malarial fevers. In 1829, they lost 60,000 men, mainly from disease, and, out of the whole army of 100,000 men, the returns showed more than 200,000 cases in hospital, or an average of two hospital treatments for each soldier during the year. When the Russian General took Adrianople, he had a mere skeleton of an army, and, after the peace of Adrianople was made, he had but 10,000 to 12,000 men to lead back over the Danube, so reduced had his forces been by sickness. In fact, fever and cholera had already defeated him before the peace, and, had the Sultan but known the real condition of the army, the issue of the war would have been utterly different. The great deficiencies of the Muscovite service are the commissariat and the medical staff, and never were the results of these deficiencies so painfully shown as in the war of 1828-'9.

In 1854-'5, the Russians suffered, but, owing to their more limited operations on the Danube, not to the same extent as in the former campaign. It was in these years that the allies felt the terrible climate of the plains of the Danube and the Dobrudscha. The British and French camps near Varna became abodes of pestilence. In the French movement to the Dobrudscha in pursuit of the Russians, who had abandoned the siege of Silistria, the march became a track of death. Cholera destroyed a force before it reached the enemy; and the French had not made many marches before they found that it was all the living could do to take care of the dying and dead. The pursuit soon turned into a retreat before the ghastly enemies of pestilence and fever. The especial causes were said to be the bad water, the wells poisoned by carcasses thrown in by the Russians, the burning heat of the sun and cold nights, and the miasma from the lately submerged ground. In fact, if the genius of the allied leaders had not transferred the war to the comparatively healthy peninsula of the Crimea, the allied expedition to sustain the Ottoman empire would have ended in disaster and disgrace.

Taxation.

The New York Bulletin persistently invites public attention to certain figures which are not without interest to taxpayers outside of New York. From one comparison it appears that the debt of New York city, $160,000,000, is almost two and a half times as much as the debt of the United States was in 1860. The debt per head of the population in New York is $133. The debt of the United States is less than $50 per head. From another comparison it appears that the taxation of New York is $33,000,000, or only $20,000,000 less than the taxation of the United States in 1860. The taxation per head in New York is $27.50. In the United States it is only about $6.14. Following is a table showing the amount of taxation, and the amount per head of population, in ten foreign countries:

	Taxation.	Taxation per Head.
Canada	$21,200,000	$6.36
Ireland	21,000,000	3.82
Netherlands	41,000,000	11.16
Switzerland	6,000,000	2.36
Portugal	26,000,000	6.50
Bavaria	50,000,000	16.81
Saxony	20,000,000	7.30
Hamburg	5,000,000	14.71
Argentine Confederation	23,500,000	13.43
Chili	13,500,000	6.63

It should be remembered that the taxation in these countries is for the support of armies and navies, as well as for civil administration. It should also be remembered that the local taxation in those countries is comparatively trifling. In Chicago city taxes alone are about $10 per head, and other taxes, not national, perhaps $5 more. Adding national taxes, and we have about $21 as the taxation per head in Chicago, which is equal to two and a half times the average for the ten countries above named. Chicago is not so heavily taxed as New York, in proportion to population, but it pays enough. A like state of facts exists in most towns and cities of any size throughout the country. It cannot be doubted that we pay more taxes in proportion to numbers than any other people in the world, and but for our abundant natural resources and uncommon energy we should not be able to carry the load.—Chicago Times.

Nature's Baths.

Only think of it, kind old dame Nature herself superintending the heating arrangements, furnishing the water direct from her own tanks, and goodness knows how far they are in these huge mountains. Never experienced such a sensation, such exquisite play of faculties, as when up to my neck in the bath filled with mineral water. My lungs expanded until I felt as if my body was not a twentieth part large enough to compass their expansion.—Rocky Mountain Tourist.

Social Life in the Russian Empire.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

It is asserted that there are no castes in Russia, and it is true that there are no impassable barriers intervening between the lowest and the highest social grades. The peasant may become an equal of the Prince, and be acknowledged as such without reserve, while the possessor of the oldest and noblest pedigree in Russian heraldry may rank with the humblest inhabitant of the empire. There is no special respect felt by the people for titles or ancestry. It is chiefly official position which elevates one above another in the public estimation. The Czar is the head of the nation and the source of power, and they who stand nearest him, bearing the largest share of the burdens and honors of his administration, occupy the first circles of the aristocracy. There may be those among them who trace their immediate origin to obscure progenitors; but talent, education and the favor of the Emperor make the accident of birth a matter of light account in the balance.

Peter the Great converted the Russian aristocracy into servants of the state, and they who showed themselves most efficient were advanced to the highest positions. It mattered nothing to him how nobly or obscurely born were the men who proved intelligent and skillful coadjutors. He was capable of descending to the level of an artisan or a navvy and working side by side with him at any essential though menial labor, and he wisely lifted up to the highest rank, from whatever plane they chanced to occupy, men who were fitted by nature and culture to associate with him in the labors of the Government. Servants of the state the aristocracy have continued to the present time, but with a greater degree of freedom in their service than the tyrannical Peter was content to allow them. The division of the officers of the civil and military service into fourteen distinct ranks or classes—a division which was instituted by Peter the Great—still obtains, and advancement from the lower to the higher grades is generally secured by regular progression. Any person possessing intellectual qualifications is eligible to a place in the public service, and his rise depends upon his own ability or the approval of the Emperor.

The law of primogeniture does not prevail in Russia. The titles of noble parents are borne by all the children from their infancy, and at their death the family possessions are equally divided among the sons and daughters. This practice produces continued mutations in the ranks of the nobility, multiplying titles indefinitely, and at the same time diminishing the means for sustaining them. Here is found one of the fruitful reasons why there is so little dignity attached to noble lineage.

The only genuine Russian title, according to Wallace, is that of Prince, which is borne by the descendants of certain ancient houses, and has been bestowed by the imperial power upon fourteen families in the course of a couple of centuries. Peter the Great introduced the titles of Count and Baron, since which time the former has been bestowed upon sixty-seven families, and the latter upon only ten.

The wealth of the nobles and landowners was seriously reduced by the emancipation of the serfs. Each proprietor lost by that act not only his slaves, but one-half his land, which passed to the serfs as their just share of the estate.

The wealth and the fashion of Russia congregate in St. Petersburg and Moscow. A few weeks in the summer may be spent by the landed proprietors on their country estates, but the remainder of the year finds them domiciled in the mansions and palaces of the great capitals, where the amusements of the pleasure-loving classes flourish in unrivaled splendor. The opera, the ballet, and the theater are munificently supported by Government and by private patronage, and their representations are of the highest order of excellence. In none of the metropolitan cities of Europe is there more culture, and refinement, and elegance to be met with in polite society than in the two chief towns of Russia. The upper classes dwell in an atmosphere of luxury, and sedulously cultivate the manners and the accomplishments common to a high-bred aristocracy. Particular attention is paid to music and the languages as attainments which give special advantages in the commerce of society. Children are placed at the earliest age in the care of French nurses and English governesses, in order that the speech of these chosen nationalities may become as familiar to them as their own.

Fruits are plentiful the year round. In the short, hot summer those of the warm temperate zone ripen readily on the steppes of Southern Russia, storing in their heart the sweet, spicy flavors distilled from the ardent sunbeams. The fruits of torrid countries are imported or are reared in hot-houses, and with flowers are profusely used in the desserts of lavish entertainments. Vegetables are also abundantly reared by artificial heat to supply the cuisine in winter. Cigars are a luxury which must be enjoyed within doors, as it is forbidden to smoke them on the streets in all Russian towns.

The Greek Church, with its imposing ritual, is the religion of the state, and edifices reared for the accommodation of its worship lift their myriad spires and pointed domes heavenward in every city and village in the empire. The imperial family and a large portion of the inhabitants profess its faith and attend with more or less regularity its ceremonials; but the spirit of unbelief that is rife in the age has spread wide among the reading classes. Religious as well as political "Nihilism" has hosts of followers, and to what extent they will go with it in its rejection of time-honored creeds and customs cannot now be predicted.

A Fish Story.

The Dubuque Times tells the following story about two young men of Dunleith, Ill.: "Two young gentleman who took a fishing excursion down the river, having fallen short of bait, commenced using the eyes of the dead fish already caught. One of the fish caught on this bait struggled so hard that the hook accidentally fastened in one of its eyes and tore it out. The pain occasioned by this accident made the fish struggle still more, and at last it slipped from the fisherman's hand and escaped to its native element. The disgusted fisherman retained the eye of the fugitive, applied it to his hook, and again launched the line into the water. Only a short time elapsed and he had a bite, and, jerking his line out of the water, he was surprised to find the identical fish which had eluded his grasp a few minutes before, and which perished by swallowing its own eye."

"THE SUNRISE NEVER FAILED US YET."

Upon the sadness of the sea
The sunset broods regretfully;
From the far, lonely spaces, slow
Withdraws the wistful afterglow.
So out of life the splendor dies;
So darken all the happy skies;
So gathers twilight, cold and stern;
But overhead the planets burn.
And up the east another day
Shall chase the bitter dark away;
What though our eyes with tears be wet?
The sunrise never failed us yet.
The blush of dawn may yet restore
Our light and hope and joy once more.
Sad soul, take comfort, nor forget
That sunrise never failed us yet!

A Parisian and his wife quarreled. "I shall drown myself," she finally cried out, exasperated. "Go, if I am all that deters you," he answered. Still, he followed her, and, when she threw herself into the Seine, plunged in and brought her to land. As he was climbing up the bank, however, he slipped back into the river, and, being exhausted by his previous exertion, was unable to save himself. His wife, seeing his situation, plunged in after him, but, as she could not swim, that was of no avail, and both must have been drowned had it not been for the timely arrival of some policemen, who pulled them out. The pair went home like two turtle doves.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS.

CORUNNA.

The great temperance reform movement is gaining ground day by day. Nothing in the past history of this country has taken such a firm hold upon public opinion tending toward the suppression of the evil of drunkenness. It is well for our common humanity that the good angel has run up the signal light as a beacon to those drifting on a lee shore, warning them of impending breakers and pointing the way out. No candid, impartial thinker, can conscientiously deny that the country was going by an air line route to the devil until arrested by the tidal wave of temperance reform now moving with irresistable force through the land. Claiming for ourselves as fair a record for sobriety as our neighbors, yet there is room for improvement, and we would commend Corunna to Mr. Johnson as a fruitful field inviting his attention.

A girl of the most abandoned character may be occasionally seen hanging around on the outskirts of the village, where she entices boys into her iniquitous den and introduces a young hell o' nights into the community by way of variety, We understand that this much soiled dove belongs to Waterloo. She is hereby notified that a second visit to this place will not be conducive to her spiritual welfare.

While on the wing last week we stopped over at Hicksville, Ohio, and while there dropped in upon our friend Hank Little of the Independent. We are rejoiced to learn that Hank has fallen into pleasant quarters. As the Independent looks well and reads well we doubt not but that the enterprising people of Hicksville will sustain his efforts with their patronage and encouragement.

The fact that your correspondent has donned the red ribbon seems to have called forth a left-handed compliment from the presiding genius of the Garrett News. So sparkling, so fresh, oh daisy! For this we are constrained to thank the guttersnipe of the News for nothing; and from all such afflictions, good Lord deliver us!

It is generally conceded that simply one mother-in-law is ample affliction to produce a bald-head and eventually drive a man to murder or suicide, and perhaps both. But what think you of the man that is the rightful claimant to no less than three mothers-in-law? We know of such a case and the party lives not a thousand miles from this village.

If this should meet the eye of our enemies, especially those who are hankering after gore, because we are so bold as to expose tricks that are vain and shed light into ways that are wicked and dark, we warn them to beware, for as certain as Ruth. B. Hayes is a fraud any attempt at hostilities will witness another scalp dangling to our belt.

The grain traffic is gradually falling off and prices are on the decline. For the past week buyers have paid on an average only $1.65c. for Amber No. one, and $1.50c. for No two do. Corn, 55c., white oats, 45c., eggs, 9c., butter, 10c., potatoes, $1.00, and green hides 6½c.

Nearly two weeks have passed over since rain has fallen in this section sufficient to lay the dust. Corn and all kinds of vegetation are beginning to show effects of the drouth.

The various sabbath schools of this county will meet in convention at Corunna on Monday next, June 11th, 1877, this being the annual meeting of the DeKalb County S. S. Association.

GARRETT.

During the past week our young city has had some little excitement. First, the arrival of the pay car of the B. & O. R. R., was hailed with delight by the employes of the company and their creditors. This has been followed by a series of Murphy Meetings and quite a number of our town people have signed the pledge and stated their resolve to fight old King Alcohol, who has held high court in our town for the past three years.

Rumor has it that the railroad company will shortly commence the erection of a large moulding shop, just east of the round house, which will add still further to the great future of Garrett. But we cannot help saying that unless the frieght traffic picks up a great deal we do not see how some of the men employed on the road will be able to make both ends meet; for on two days work a week it will be tough.

We must not forget to speak of the amateur Dramatic Club. They played Friday and Saturday nights last to very fair houses. The acting of Mr. Knoder as McClusky, being all that could be wished for. Our space will not permit a review of all the characters so we will not attempt it.

Our usually healthy town is just now under a cloud. About three out of every five you meet are suffering from ague. Scarlet fever has been prevalent for a short time back, but is gradually dying out.

Monday night our unusually quiet neighborhood was shocked by the sudden and unlooked for demise of Mrs. Henry Lindorfer, who died of heart disease. It appears she had been ailing for a few days back, but still being able to be about the house. On Monday evening a few minutes before eight o'clock, she had been nursing her child and the little thing cried so that a daughter of the deceased took it out of the room and on returning in five or ten minutes was horrified to find that her mother was dead. Dr. Pratt, who happened to be in an adjoining house, was called, but after making an examination of the body, [illegible] to the conclusion that there was no hope, and that the spirit of Mrs. L. had passed to Him who does all for the best. The whole neighborhood was plunged into grief, for she was loved and respected by all who knew her. She leaves a family of eight children, the youngest being but ten months old. Deceased was in her 41st year. The remains were taken to Butler for burial. D.

Our former fellow citizen, Hank Little now of the Hicksvill Independent, has the following in last weeks issue. "Last week we were several days under the paternal roof and while there met many of our old friends. We would like to mention each business man separately but it would occupy too much space. The red ribbon movement has created quite an excitement, and we were never so surprised in our whole existence as we were on our arrival there. All the old "bums" in the city disply the red ribbon on the lapel of their coat, and the temperance people there have placed them in as officers to encourage them to go forward in the good work. Temperance meetings have been held for three weeks every evening and on last Sabbath afternoon about five hundred of the citizens gathered together in the court square and were ably addressed bp W. L. Penfield, and others. The meetings seem to have been rightly conducted as heretofore they have generally terminated in a failure owing to the fact that they were conducted by a certain clique who are altogether to cute for this century, and now with their excellent success in saving nearly every man, young and old, who have been addicted to strong dring, they are doing all in their power to stir up a bad feeling between the temperance people and our old friend, Tom. C. Mays, editor of the COURIER, because his paper contained an item not co-inciding with the views of the ring. The item was written in favor of the R. R. C. but these old foggies could not find fault in anything else and they were totally lost. They must have have their put in. If they knew Tom as well as we have, and there is no reason why they should not, they would all know that he has been in favor of temperance since his location in Auburn. * * * * * *

We hope that all the boys in Auburn will ever wear the red ribbon, and although its more "to be in the fashion" than anything else it reminds us all of the pledge we signed, speaks well for our standing in society to the stranger we meet and gives a life of joy and happiness where the "brine juice" drags us down to sorrow and degradation. There is no one on God's foot-stool who is more anxious to see these old friends stick better than the writer himself, and again we beg, boys, keep that red ribbon prominently displayed upon your every day and Sunday garments.

Quite an excitement prevails among the hack men, the competing parties being Bill Britton and Obe Cool. Several hacks are run to each train and the cry of "free 'bus up town, jump right in," fills the weary travelers heart with joy. But one of these fine mornings you will see a broad shouldered conductor knock three or four of them "clear through their self" if they dont keep off of the car steps. Its all nonsense, boys. Better have a little brotherly love and make the hack business pay enough to "buy the baby a dress" occasionally. Bill Britton has just built a nice new wagon, which is a daisy; Obe's wagons are all good and we are sorry to see the boys wear them out "just for fun." There's Theo. Swinart—Windy Theo.—with Bill Britton, who, if his lungs hold out, will catch them all. "No harm done, I-I-I-I 'spose.

We called on Bros. Mays and Weamer and found both in good spirits. The COURIER has been adding new material to the job rooms and is now one of the best offices in Northern Indiana."

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent. ; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time is reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

Fatal Accident.

We learn of a distressing accident at Angola, yesterday morning. As John McConnell of that place and another young man were out fishing on Fox Lake near Angola, the boat capsized and McConnell was drowned. He is a brother of our prosecutor, Will McConnell, and a son of Dr McConnell. He was about 16 years of age.

Some of the sentimental papers are going into raptures because the Russians have for some purpose procribed the polish language in Poland, so that where a man would have said "Qiachki willski givski youski a punchski in the sneatzki," the poor fellow is compelled to say, "Qiskvitch willvitch givivitch youavitch a punchvitch in the snootvitch."

A great deal of corn has been replanted, owing to poor seed. It is strange that farmers should be neglectful of so important a matter as the selection of their corn each fall, for the next years planting. In every case in which the farmer has to replant, we have no doubt the trouble and expense could have been saved if the farmer would have gone into his field and selected his seed, and then properly cared for it.

The Democratic State Committee of Ohio met at Columbus, Thursday, and decided to hold the State convention in that city on the 25th of July. During the session of the committee the currency question came in for some discussion, and it was decided that the party should take no affirmative action for soft money in the next campaign, but should oppose the resumption act on the ground that longer time is required for preparation. But there will be no demand for more greenbacks.

It is a well established fact that, the richer one makes his food, the poorer he makes his appetite. We have good appetites down at our house, per necessity. But such an appetite, as beneficial as it may be theoretically, does not inspire us with any great degree of thankfulness toward those of our delinquent subscribers who, by their disregard of our just claims on them, compel us to that state of hygienic happiness.

Argus calls us malignant. And this, too, just when we were priding ourself on a superabundance of the milk of human kindness, overflowing in fact with milk—and honey, especially the latter. But doubtless, there is no redemption for us, as we have printed "done" for "did," and in the egotism of Argus we are lost. But how are we to judge of this truly great person. Unlike Mr. Philips, in last week's COURIER, he assumes a name, and keeps himself hid. If he will come out and show himself to be such a wonderful man as he assumes to be, we will show him some attention. Until then, vale Argus

All around and about us, in different countries in this section of the State, farmers and business men are moving in earnest in the construction of gravel roads. The farmer fully appreciates their utility and the immense benefit good roads are to him in making his crops, and general convenience in passing to and from town. The business man also fully appreciates the difference in the amount of his sales when all the country can wend its way to market on good roads. Bad roads cost the consumer and producer thousands upon thousands of dollars yearly. The only remedy in this country is to grade and gravel them. Now who will prove himself a real benefactor by moving in the matter? Don't wait on somebody else but put your own shoulder to the wheel.

There has been a question whether that hundred eyed monster of old, called the Argus, was a reptile or an animal, but since the effusion of Argus in last weeks Press, we are inclined to the opinion that it belonged to the former class. He flops around in his endeavor to find something against us and finally settles upon an error in grammar, ignoring the fact that there are few, if any, papers in the country which do not contain similar mistakes. We have a suspicion that this Argus has been stealing or doing something equally as naughty and we have rapped him over the knuckles for it, and now he wants his revenge. Well, go ahead we have no objections. A coward will stab in the dark.

The Fourth at Newville.

The citizens of Newville are making extensive preparations for the celebration of the Fourth, at that place. Rev. W. B. Hendrix of this State will deliver the oration. The officers of the day are Isaac Gunsenhouser, President; Henry Wanemaker and Hugh Nelson Vice Presidents; D. H. Murray, Marshal; Zeba Hathaway, Chief of Police; Rev. E. W. Erick, Chaplain; B. F. Blair, Reader.

There will be a boat race of one-half mile, prize $5; Foot race, $5; Fire works and baloon ascension in the evening, and a bowery dance.

Wooden Wedding.

The celebration of the fifth anniversary of wedded life by Dr Casebeer and his estimable lady, last Monday evening, was a joyous, happy occasion, notwithstanding inclement weather. An unusually large number of our citizens were in attendance, and the presents were elegant and appropriate. The parlor set, to which about all present contributed, was very much admired, while the wheel-barrow, the gift of Mr. Snyder, created considerable merriment They were presented and received in due form. A splended lunch was served, and at a late hour the guests withdrow wishing the Doctor and his lady much prosperity and happiness.

Ben Butler's characteristic letter to J. G. Pitkins, of New Orleans, in which some uncomplimentary illusions were made to Mr. Wayne McVeigh, of Pennsylvania, has brought fourth a severe and caustic letter from the latter. In response to the insinuation that money was used to induce the desertion of members of Packard's legislature, he says: "I had no money of my own to spare, and it is only a military commandant at New Orleans, in time of war, who can safely appropriate any considerable quantity of the property of others to his own use." That they may properly be called a "center shot." It is rather sad to see that the row in the radical camp is still progressing and that the men who stole the presidency have fallen to fighting among themselves.

There are three comets now visible, by the aid of small telescopes, at the same time. One is situated in the constellation of Ouriga. It is moving away never to return making thus its first and last visit at the same time. It was discovered February 8, by Borelly, of France. The second was discovered April 6, in the constellation of Pegasus, but has past into the Lizard, where it can be seen by the naked eye, its tail being about half a degree in length. It will increase in length and brightness for some time to come. The third was discovered by Professor Swift, of Rocchestor, New York, April, 11, in the constellation of Cassiopeia. Borelly, of France, discovered also on the 14th. It has no tail, but can be seen all night long by the aid of a small telescope. It is growing brighter, and may become visible to the naked eye.

A few Things that We Know.

We know that a disordered stomach or liver produces more suffering than any other cause. We know that very few physicians are successful in their treatment of these disorders. We know that DaCosta's Radical Cure will without the shadow of a doubt, almost immediately relieve and permanently cure all of these distressing symptoms. We know of thousands who are willing to testify that what we say is true to the letter. We know that if you will give it a fair trial, you will let us add your name to the "cloud of witnesses." Will you give it a trial, and do it now? Trial size only 25 cents. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

Prof. Parker's pleasant worm syrup is perfectly safe and extremely palatable. No physician required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

WHISTLING IN HEAVEN.

You're surprised that I ever should say so?
Just wait till the reason I've given
Why I say I sha'n't care for the music,
Unless there is whistling in heaven;
Then you'll think it no very great wonder,
Nor so strange, nor so bold a conceit,
That unless there's a boy there a-whistling,
Its music will not be complete.

It was late in the autumn of '40;
We had come from our far Eastern home
Just in season to build us a cabin,
Ere the cold of the winter should come;
And we lived all the while in our wagon,
That husband was clearing the place
Where the house was to stand; and the clearing
And building it took many days.

So that our heads were scarce sheltered
In under its roof, when our store
Of provisions was almost exhausted,
And husband must journey for more;
And the nearest place where he could get them
Was yet such a distance away,
[illegible] to be absent
At least a whole night and a day.

You see, we'd but two or three neighbors,
And the nearest was more than a mile,
And we hadn't found time yet to know them,
For we had been busy the while;
And the man who had helped at the raising
Just staid till the job was well done;
And as soon as his money was paid him,
Had shouldered his ax and had gone.

Well, husband just kissed me and started.
I could scarcely suppress a deep groan
At the thought of remaining with baby
So long in the house all alone;
For, my dear, I was childish and timid,
And braver ones might well have feared,
For the wild wolf was often heard howling,
And savages sometimes appeared.

But I smothered my grief and my terror
Till husband was off on his ride,
And then in my arms I took Josey,
And all the day long sat and cried,
As I thought of the long dreary hours
When the darkness of night should fall,
And I was so utterly helpless,
With no one in reach of my call

And when the night came with its terrors,
To hide ev'ry ray of light,
I hung up a quilt by the window,
And, almost dead with affright,
I kneeled by the side of the cradle,
Scarce daring to draw a full breath,
Lest the baby should wake, and its crying
Should bring us a horrible death.

There I knelt until late in the evening,
And scarcely an inch had I stirred,
When suddenly, far in the distance,
A sound as of whistling I heard.
I started up, dreadfully frightened,
For fear 'twas an Indian's call;
And then very soon I remembered
The red man ne'er whistles at all.

And when I was sure 'twas a white man,
I thought, were he coming for ill,
He'd surely approach with more caution—
Would come without warning and still.
Then the sounds, coming nearer and nearer,
Took the form of a tune, light and gay,
And I knew I needn't fear evil
From one who could whistle that way.

Very soon I heard footsteps approaching,
Then came a peculiar dull thump,
As if some one was heavily striking
An ax in the top of a stump;
And then, in another brief moment,
There came a light tap on the door,
When quickly I undid the fast'nings,
And in stepped a boy, and before

There was either a question or answer,
Or either had time to speak,
I just threw my glad arms around him,
And gave him a kiss on the cheek.
Then I started back, scared at my boldness,
But he only smiled at my fright,
As he said, "I'm your neighbor's boy, Elick,
Come to tarry with you through the night.

"We saw your husband go eastward,
And made up our minds where he'd gone,
And I said to the rest of our people,
'That woman is there all alone,
And I venture she's awfully lonesome,
And though she may have no great fear,
I think she would feel a bit safer
If only a boy were but near.'

"So, taking my ax on my shoulder,
For fear that a savage might stray
Across my path, and need scalping,
I started right down this way;
And coming in sight of the cabin,
And thinking to save you alarm,
I whistled a tune, just to show you
I didn't intend any harm.

"And so here I am, at your service;
But if you don't want me to stay,
Why, all you need do is to say so,
And, should'ring my ax, I'll away."
I dropped in a chair and near fainted,
Just at thought of his leaving me then,
And his eye gave a knowing bright twinkle
As he said, "I guess I'll remain."

And then I just sat there and told him
How terribly frightened I'd been,
How his face was to me the most welcome
Of any I ever had seen;
And then I lay down with the baby,
And slept all the blessed night through,
For I felt I was safe from all danger
Near so brave a young fellow and true.

So now, my dear friend, do you wonder,
Since such a good reason I've given,
Why I say I sha'n't care for the music
Unless there is whistling in heaven?
Yes, often I've said so in earnest,
And now what I've said I repeat,
That unless there's a boy there a-whistling,
Its music will not be complete.

MARGARET VENTNOR.

"Why, Maggie! Not dressed yet; Cousin Richard will be here in half an hour," cried Stella Liscombe, throwing back the folding doors and entering the back parlor where her half-sister, Margaret Ventnor, was reclining on a sofa, with an interesting book in her hand, and a handsome morning dress carelessly robing her slender figure.

"It is hardly necessary that I should be the first to welcome him," she said, curling her lip slightly, and making an impatient gesture, as though the subject was not a pleasant one. "You and mamma will be sufficient to entertain him, at least until dinner time."

"But, then," pleaded Stella, "you might please me just this once, and I have no doubt Richard is anxious to become acquainted with you."

"I don't suppose he is aware of my existence," Margaret said, carelessly turning the leaves of her book.

"Oh! just as you please," replied Stella, in a provoking tone. "You are determined to hate Richard Gleason, Margaret; and, indeed, it's a matter of perfect indifference to me whether you like him or not."

Stella had worked herself into quite a heat, and Margaret thought it best to withdraw to her own room for the sake of quiet.

Half an hour later, looking from her window, she saw the family carriage draw up before the door, and a handsome stranger alight in company with her father. Stella and her mamma came forward with cordial greeting—Stella gay and impulsive, without a trace of her recent ill-humor, and Mrs. Ventnor calm and cordial as usual.

After the group had disappeared within doors, and Margaret had seen the carriage drive away, she threw herself into an easy chair, and resumed her reading.

"Dear me!" she cried, when at length she threw aside her book. "I had no idea it was so late. I have scarcely time to dress for dinner."

She changed the morning costume she wore for another of rich material, and of a dark gray color, fastening a scarlet ribbon at her throat, and a bunch of dark red berries in her hair; then she took a survey of her figure in an opposite mirror.

"Very becoming, dear," said a merry voice at the door; and Stella came tripping into the room, bringing a stream of sunshine in her wake this time. "Really, Margaret," she said, "you must excuse the provoking things I said to you an hour ago; but I am always hasty, you know; and I want you to tie this ribbon for me, and then I'll go away and leave you."

Such a confession as this from Stella was nothing unusual; so Margaret accepted it with very good grace; and Stella, after giving a glowing account of Cousin Richard, hurried down to the garden, to gather some flowers for her hair before dinner. Margaret, left alone once more, gave a few finishing touches to her toilet, and then directed her steps to the drawing-room.

Mrs. Ventnor and her nephew, Richard Gleason, were enjoying a quiet talk on various topics; both heard the rustle of Margaret's garments on the landing.

"This is my step-daughter," was all Mrs. Ventnor could say before Margaret's step sounded in the hall.

She swept proudly into the room, acknowledging the introduction by a haughty bow, and a cool "Good evening" to Mrs. Ventnor.

After dinner the family adjourned again to the drawing-room, where the conversation became general.

"Tell us something of your travels, Richard," said Mrs. Ventnor at length, when other topics were exhausted.

"Perhaps it will not be agreeable to the others," he returned, fixing his dark eyes searchingly on Margaret's face.

Mrs. Ventnor noted her embarrassment, and came to her relief.

"I think it will," she said quietly; and Margaret soon became interested, in spite of her determination to dislike her step-mother's relative.

"How do you like him, Maggie?" Stella inquired, putting her head in at Margaret's door, after she had retired to her room.

"Oh! well enough," Margaret answered, lightly; and Stella withdrew to her own apartment, laughing gayly at her half-sister's indifference.

Rose Villa was the summer residence of the Ventnors. Mr. Ventnor had been married to his second wife about a year. She was a widow lady when he became acquainted with her, and Stella was her only child, now a school-girl of about 17. At present she was at home, spending her first vacation at Rose Villa. Margaret could not but like her, though she had rebelled against her father's second marriage. She had not entirely forgotten her old scruples; and Richard Gleason's coming among them aroused some of the old feeling of enmity toward her step-mother's family.

The days sped rapidly at Rose Villa. Mrs. Ventnor planned some new amusement each day for the young folks.

"Do you know, Maggie," Stella said, coming into her half-sister's room, one evening, after Mr. Gleason had been with them about a fortnight, "that Richard talks of going to town in less than a week? Mamma is using every endeavor to persuade him to remain the summer, and wishes you to assist her; so come down to the parlor at once."

Margaret, thus urged, followed Stella to the parlor, where she found Mrs. Ventnor endeavoring, as her daughter had said, to persuade Richard to give up all thought of leaving Rose Villa for the present.

"So you have come to my aid, Margaret?" she said, in a relieved tone. "See what you can do with Richard. He persists in saying that he cannot remain with us more than a few days at the furthest."

"I don't think I can succeed where you fail," Margaret returned, pleasantly. "Is your business so urgent, then, Mr. Gleason, that you cannot leave it any longer?" she inquired, hesitatingly.

"No, not exactly," he said, bestowing on her a glance which brought the color to her face.

A summons to dinner prevented any further discussion on the subject for the present. Mr. Gleason gave his arm to Margaret, and as they passed out into the hall he said to her, in a half whisper, "Shall I go or stay, Miss Ventnor? It must be as you desire."

"Stay," she replied; "though, of course," she added, "it is immaterial to me; yet, as mamma wishes it, I ask you to remain."

Richard Gleason bit his lip fiercely; but he was silent, for they had reached the dining-room, and Margaret, drawing her hand from his arm, took her place at the table, half wishing that she had not spoken as she did. After dinner she stole out into the garden, catching up a book as she passed through the library. She followed the winding path until she came to a small arbor, half hidden by the shrubbery, and, throwing herself in one of the rustic seats, she began to read in the semi-darkness of the evening. A quick footstep startled her; she glanced up hurriedly, and saw Mr. Gleason's figure in the doorway.

"I am intruding," he said, politely. "I merely came to ask you a question. Why is it that you dislike me so much, Miss Ventnor?" Then, seeing the flush rise to her face and neck, he added, "It is no more than right that I should ask. If I have said or done anything to offend you, I desire to apologize."

"It is I who should apologize," she said, "if I have not treated you cordially."

"It is not that," he returned. "You have been polite, but so distant! I desired your friendship."

"You shall be gratified," she said, playfully, offering him her hand.

He grasped it warmly.

"Now I will leave you," he said. "Pardon the intrusion."

He was gone, and Margaret soon arose, and followed him slowly into the house.

A few days afterward Mrs. Ventnor, Mr. Gleason and Margaret were quietly conversing in the parlor, when Stella came rushing into the room.

"What do you think?" she exclaimed, merrily. "We are invited to a picnic next week! It is to be held in Derby's grove. Don't you remember, Maggie, that lovely place where we went boating last season? Won't it be charming? Why, I don't believe one of you are at all glad."

"Oh, yes," Mrs. Ventnor returned pleasantly; "but how could you expect us to give our opinion until you had finished speaking?"

"Well, I think it will be delightful," Stella continued. "Cousin John Elliot is going to take me, and you will have to escort mamma and Margaret, Cousin Richard."

"That will be very agreeable," Richard replied, laughingly. "Do you enjoy attending picnics, Miss Margaret?"

"I don't care much for them," she returned. "I think it is very tiresome to spend a whole day in the woods, with no other occupation than that of lunching with a number of people, taking a walk in the afternoon and a sail by moonlight, etc.; that is the programme of our country picnics."

"That's just like you, Margaret," interrupted Stella. "I know we shall have a splendid time, and Richard will create quite a sensation, I can tell you. Now, cousin, you must promise to be very attentive to my young lady friends. I told Sophie Elliott all about you, and I've no doubt she'll be setting her cap for you yet."

"She might spare herself the trouble," Richard mentally ejaculated; but he merely bade the ladies good-night, and retired to his room, the hour being late.

At length the morning of the picnic arrived, and, in spite of Stella's fears to the contrary, the day was clear, and very favorable. Mr. Gleason, dressed to accompany the ladies, came down into the hall, where the two were assembled. Mrs. Ventnor and Stella were already equipped; but Margaret was leaning carelessly against a marble statuette, still in her morning dress.

"Why! are you not going, Miss Margaret?" he inquired, in a surprised tone. "I had no idea that you intended to remain at home."

"But I do, nevertheless," she said, quietly. "I have a slight headache this morning; and, besides, I don't care much for going."

"Well, I suppose we shall be obliged to leave you," Mrs. Ventnor said, drawing her lace mantle carefully over her shoulders, "for the carriage is waiting. Good-by, my dear. If your head is better, it will doubtless do you good to come over to the picnic place this afternoon."

"Well, perhaps I may," she returned.

She watched the trio descend the steps, and enter the carriage. After the vehicle was out of sight, she turned listlessly into the house.

"Perhaps I shall feel better," she thought, "if I dress myself and sit in the back parlor, where it is so cool and pleasant."

Accordingly she ascended to her room, where she donned a cool dress of white cambric, with cherry ribbons knotted in her hair. She came down and seated herself in the airy parlor, near one of the low French windows, where the balmy zephyr, redolent with the breath of dewy roses and clematis, was gently wafted over her face. Unconsciously she glanced in an opposite mirror, where her fair countenance was reflected, forming a rare and lovely picture; a low, broad, white forehead, starry eyes, classic features, and an abundance of black hair, brushed smoothly away at the temples, and gathered into great, shining coils at the back of the head; her soft white robes fell gracefully about her, and the daintily molded hands were busied with a trifle of embroidery, which fell unheeded at her feet, as she indulged in a pleasant day-dream.

She was startled by a light footfall; and, looking up, she beheld Richard Gleason at her side, with a world of love in his handsome eyes. She sprung quickly to her feet, and anxiously inquired if an accident had befallen the absent pleasure party.

"Oh, no, Margaret," he said taking her hand. "I came here, hoping to find you alone, as I have something I must say to you before my departure."

Margaret felt the warm color rise to her face, as he bent his gaze scrutinizingly upon her.

"Tell me," he cried, eagerly, "that you return the passion I feel for you—that you will be my wife—my pearl—my priceless treasure!"

"I will," was the simple reply; but the words came straight from the inmost depths of her heart.

Richard Gleason returned to the picnic place in the afternoon, and Margaret accompanied him, the betrothal ring glistening on her finger. As they drove along the quiet country road, Margaret said,

"I never meant to fall in love with you, Richard."

"Nor I with you," he returned; "but what fate has ordained we cannot change."

"Not even if we wished to," she answered softly.

A Maine Murder Case.

Those who believe in hanging will regret that Maine has abolished the death sentence in view of the conviction of Edward M. Smith of killing the Trim family at Bucksport, last fall. He seems to have thoroughly earned the rope if man ever did, and the convicting proof of his guilt gives New England another and one of its most terrible stains of crime. The Trim family consisted of old Mr. Trim, his widowed daughter, Mrs. Thayer, and her child. The old man had a little money hoarded in the house, and Edward M. Smith, a retired sea Captain and accounted respectable man, was a frequent visitor. One night Smith accompanied Mrs. Thayer from a neighbor's to the Trim home, and later the house and barn were burned with the family. Examination of the ruins disclosed that the occupants of the house had been horribly murdered and cut into pieces, and the buildings fired to conceal the greater crime. Of course, suspicion fell upon Smith, whose motive for the crime was no doubt the old man's little money. Traces of a struggle before the house were evident, and a gradually accumulating chain of circumstantial evidence has left no doubt that the ex-sea Captain committed the wholesale killing. His clothes worn upon the fatal night were covered with blood, for the presence of which he was not able to account, and his attempted defense of an alibi was effectually disproved.

Suspension Bridges.

The Brooklyn bridge is the longest yet projected. It is 3,475 feet between the anchorages, with a clear span of 1,595 feet, the bottom chord of which will be 135 feet above the water. The Niagara bridge has a span of 821 feet; the Cincinnati bridge is 2,220 feet long, with a span of 1,057 feet. The bridge at St. Louis is of steel, with four piers of granite and limestone sunk to the bed-rock of the Mississippi; there is one span of 520 feet and one of 515 feet over the waterway.

The Khedive of Egypt is credited with the evil eye, not to mention the money he secured from the Suez canal bonds.

LOVE AND REASON.

BY ROSA VERTNER JEFFREY.

Young Love went sailing without fear
Upon a lotus leaf,
Though Reason said, "Pray let me steer,
Or you will come to grief."
Then laughed the saucy god and cried,
"You look too grum and blue,
Go walk along the river's side;
I'll paddle my own canoe."

So Reason, plodding on the shore,
Watched Love's frail shallop floating,
And thought, "Though walking is a bore,
It's very risky boating.
Hallo! young imp, you will be wrecked;
Your bark is very frail."
But Love sang gayly, "I expect
To have a jolly sail!

"Keep off the rocks and cataracts,
They oft beguile a stranger."
Quoth Love, "A truce to stupid facts
I rather like the danger.
The stream is smooth, the sky is clear,
You need not come to measure
The crystal deeps through which I steer,
My pilot shall be Pleasure!"

On with the tide did Cupid drift,
His hand at Reason kissing,
To where those sun-lit waters swift—
Swift down the rocks went hissing;
A warning scorned, a danger spurned,
Of which he saw no token;
Love's lotus leaf was overturned,
His fairy rudder broken;

The gossamer sail was torn to strings!
He seized on Pleasure, crying,
"Come, let us rise! Though drenched my wings
They're light enough for flying.
From yonder bark—to ruin whirled—
We shall escape in season,
I'll fly with Pleasure through the world,
And leave my wrecks to Reason."

PITH AND POINT.

A dwarf pear—Tom Thumb and wife.

There is one redeeming quality about croquet. It is within the reach of the feeblest intellects.

The new spring hats worn by ladies are so big that two or three of them in a theater make the place look crowded.

Dresses are to be so tight that if a husband kick his wife on the shins the bruises will be plain to the public eye.

St. Louis girls now explain it by saying that when they were young their mothers made them wear blue stockings.

Violet-colored ink is no longer used for love letters.—Detroit Free Press. Heavens! Why didn't you tell us that before? Here we've been and—but no matter, no matter.

A Virginia bridegroom over seven feet high is announced. The affair created considerable sensation, but it is believed she only married him to go chestnutting with.

A young man, whose sweetheart has pretty, pouting lips, says that a kiss of hers always reminds him of the menu of the best restaurant in town. It's such a delicious bill affair.

About this time the hen that has entered upon her second childhood is dished up at 75 cents a plate as spring chicken. You can tell her every time by the warts on her spurs.

Among fashion notes, the New York Times says: "All-silk dresses are no longer seen." True—a great many, in these hard times, are under the protecting wing of "my uncle."

A house-holder, in filling up his schedule of the last census, under the column "Where born," described one of his children as born "in the parlor," and the other "up stairs."

An exchange says: "It takes a mental effort to pay a gas bill with a genial look." Of course it does, but it doesn't equal the effort, physical, mental and otherwise, to pay it with greenbacks.

A New York State man grated some horse-radish for his wife, and then sneezed, broke a blood-vessel and died. Husbands will by-and-by learn to sit on the veranda and let domestic drudgery alone.

Scientific student—"Who is that you speak of?" "Huxley." "Oh, yes! Let's see, what did he lecture on, now?" "Evolution." "Why, of course, I had forgotten. He was—er—he was in favor of it, wasn't he?"

A Missouri woman writes to a St. Louis newspaper that politeness is an instinct with which the Eastern man was never blessed, and he has been more unsuccessful in its cultivation than anything he has ever undertaken.

"Sunday is the golden clasp that binds together the volume of the week," says a writer. It is also a good time to pull off your boots and try what bunion remedies you have accumulated during the preceding six days.

When you see a tomcat, with glaring eyeballs and back-hair erect, come scratching out like lightning from under a board fence, and a second afterward hear a brickbat strike the fence on the inside, the process of a posteriori reasoning is not a difficult one.

"Isn't he a darling little spring blossom?" asked Mrs. Kobobulus, dandling the crowing baby toward her husband. "Yes," grunted Mr. Kobobulus, standing before the glass, deep in the mystery of fastening a collar with three buttonholes on one button; "yes, he is a regular little crow cus." And it made Mrs. Kobobulus so mad that she threw the baby at him.

You can't always tell. We have known a sweet-faced young man, who spoke such beautifully-melodious words of moral benevolence at the boarding-house table as brought tears to the eyes of the tender-hearted landlady, suddenly depart with a month's board unsettled, and all the souvenir he left in his valise, a second-hand pocket-Testament and pair of faded paper collars.

"Did you never," asked a transcendental young lady just three weeks from Vassar, of the West Hill young man, "did you never feel a vague, unrestful yearning after the beyond? a wild, strange, impulsive longing and reaching out after the unattainable?" And the West Hill man said he often had, last summer, at such times as he was trying to scratch a square inch full of hives, right between his shoulder blades, and just out of reach of anything.

A living toad weighing three pounds was found imbedded in a solid sandstone, fifteen feet below the surface of the earth, at Ashland, Wis., the other day. He presented no abnormal appearance, says the Ashland Press, except that, where a small fissure in the rock occurred, just in front of his head, his starboard eye had grown into the cavity, and, when removed from his prison, his eye stuck out about two inches and a half. He seemed perfectly healthy, in every respect, and, on his release, he inflated the bladder beneath his throat and trilled a hymn of rejoicing.

Sanitary Skill in War.

One of the principal lessons taught by modern military science is that sanitary skill is as important for military success as strategical. Our war with the seceding States was finally won, not only by superior numbers and strategy, but by greater sanitary skill. It would be difficult to number the thousands of able-bodied men saved to the Union army by the operations alone of our sanitary authorities. The care taught by them in selecting camps, the medicine and nourishing food furnished, the prophylactics given, the efforts made to prevent the spread of gangrene or local pestilence, the intelligence employed in preventing disease and in treating wounds and fevers—it was all this which preserved so large a ratio of our soldiers, and constantly furnished renewed men to the main armies. Our troops were serving for years, in the Gulf States and in Virginia, in quite as pestilential and sickly regions as is the Dobrudscha, or the plain of Bulgaria. But science and intelligence saved our men. It is the want of these modern appliances and modern skill which has so often ruined the Russian army. The Lower Danube has too frequently been a pest-house for their armies. When the noonday heats become intense and the nights begin to be chilly, we shall hear again of the painful histories of plague and cholera among their ignorant and careless soldiery, and perhaps hear again of a Russian army crippled by these invisible enemies. The Turks seem to suffer less from these diseases. Not from their sanitary appliances, for they have none; but the race is accustomed to a warmer climate than their northern enemy, and their religion teaches rigidly one of the first means of preserving health—cleanliness—while their loose costume is more suited to the extremes of the climate near the mouths of the Danube. The great defect of Russian administration, so well illustrated in Wallace's book, its stupid routine, follows all military operations of the Czar's Government, and we shall see abundant illustrations of its influence in this campaign against the Turks.—New York Times.

Lieut. Col. Martin, late of the British cavalry, is about to set on foot an anti-torpedo association. He says: "When explosive bullets and chain-shot were invented, and actually used in war, nations unanimously agreed to discontinue their use and prohibit their manufacture; yet explosive bullets and chain shot, it must be admitted, are harmless as compared with torpedoes. Poisoning is prohibited in war. Why not prohibit torpedoes, which are actually more subtle and deadly than poison, there being no antidote to or escape from them?" He might have added that muskets, rifles, bombs and artillery are also apt to seriously damage suffering humanity.

There is now in Ottawa, Ont., a Bedouin named Jacob Abdallah, born in Palestine upward of 100 years ago, and who has served in the British navy many years. He wants to go to Europe, but has not the wherewithal to get there. The Canadian Government will assist him.

"Survival of the Fittest."

The ingenious doctrine propounded by Mr. Darwin, the tireless investigator of nature and her laws, is as applicable in determining the fate of medicines as in that of the animal species. Every year new remedies are brought before the public, and are soon completely discarded as their sale rapidly decreases. Only those medicines which are best suited to the people's wants survive the test. If they "are tried and found wanting" in the merits which they are claimed to possess, no amount of advertising will make them popular. Of all the remedies ever introduced to the public, none are so popular as Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Their sale has steadily increased each year, and wholesale druggists assert that the present demand for them is greater than ever before. If you would patronize medicines scientifically prepared, use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. Golden Medical Discovery is alterative, or blood-cleansing, and an unequaled cough remedy; Pleasant Purgative Pellets, scarcely larger than mustard seeds, constitute an agreeable and reliable physic; Favorite Prescription, a remedy for debilitated females; Extract of Smart-Weed, a magical remedy for pain, bowel complaints, and an unequaled liniment for both human and horse-flesh; while his Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is known the world over as the greatest specific for Catarrh and "Cold in the Head" ever given to the public. They are sold by druggists.

Cheerfulness the [illegible] of Health.

That equable state of the mind which is unruffled by trifling incidents, and looks on the sunny side of things in general, is the result of a healthful state of the brain and stomach. The dyspeptic and nervous invalid may—although this is rare indeed—feign cheerfulness, and may bear the harassing symptoms which persecute him with an assumption of heroic indifference, but in reality he is the victim of despondency. To experience genuine cheerfulness of mind the stomach must recover its lost tone, the thinking organ its normal quietude. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are the best remedy for mental depression, since they overcome the nervous debility and indigestion which originate and foster it. Persons suffering from infirmities peculiarly incident to the decline of life, ladies in delicate health, and convalescents, derive solace and vigor from its use. Drive away the blues and revive the drooping energies with this grand stimulative tonic.

Dooley's Yeast Powder

Is prepared on scientific principles, and from ingredients that are the most effective and wholesome. It has received the highest encomiums for these merits from eminent chemists, scores of our best physicians and thousands of intelligent cooks and housewives. The genuine can be had only in tin cans.

Wilhoft's Tonic!—A Safe, Sure, and Scientific Cure!—The unprecedented sale of this world-renowned medicine proves incontestibly that no remedy has superseded the use of this reliable Tonic. No spleen has been found so hard as not to yield to its softening influence, and no liver so hypertrophied as not to give up its long-retained bilious secretions, and no Chill or Fever has yet refused to fall into line. The essentials for wide popularity are fully met in Colgate & Co.'s Cashmere Bouquet Soap. It is universally esteemed by the tasteful and refined as the most delicate and recherche of perfumes, and the name and trade-mark of Colgate & Co. on each package are a guarantee of superior and uniform quality. With such nice adaptation the success of this article is not surprising.

The inventors of Burnett's Cocoaine—knowing that when the loss of hair occurs, it is generally from that part of the head where the greatest heat is necessarily generated, and that animal fats by their nature induce heat rather than alleviate it—turned their attention and pharmaceutical science toward vegetable oils, as the basis of a medicament to promote the growth and preserve the beauty of the hair. The cocus cocos, or Cocoanut Oil, presented itself most strongly, as possessing many properties peculiarly adapted for the purpose; but its odor was objectionable, and its density (except when exposed to heat) seemed for a long time to defy all efforts to render it available for popular use in cooler climates. By a scientific selection of other ingredients, those which will chemically combine with the oil have been discovered, and they together have produced a compound which is unquestionably pronounced to be the best that has yet appeared.

In the form presented this oil is permanently deodorized, and held in a combination which peculiarly adapts it for the toilet; Burnett's Cocoaine is unrivaled in delicacy and agreeableness—cooling in its nature—and possesses such a penetrating affinity for the secretions of the skin that it is rapidly absorbed.

Its greatest efficacy is best secured by a perfect cleansing, before its application, of the hair and scalp, under which circumstances this oil allays irritation, removes all tendency to dandruff, and invigorates the action of the capillaries in the highest degree. Its effect upon the glossiness and richness of the hair is such as cannot be surpassed; and it is offered to the public in the firm belief that it only requires to be known to supersede all other preparations. We are confident that no one who will make a trial of its efficacy will be willing to return to the use of any other preparation.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

Around the Farm.

THINNING THE POTATO CROP.—I have found out one thing about potatoes that perhaps you don't know; that is, potatoes need thinning to insure a good, early, marketable crop. At the second hoeing pull out all the tops except from one to four, taking the small and weakly ones, and you will see the benefit of it.—Cor. Maine Farmer.

SPLITTING CABBAGES.—When the gardener is troubled in consequence of his nice drum-head or stone-mason cabbages splitting open, he will find it a good practice to pull them up partly, or give them a sufficient start to sever a portion of the roots. It will enable him to keep his cabbages a week or two longer in the ground.—Exchange.

SETTING STRAWBERRY PLANTS.—A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker describes his method of setting strawberry plants, by which he did not lose 300 out of 10,000 plants. After having selected hardy plants, he placed them in a pail and covered the roots with water. He planted them as soon as possible, taking them singly from the pail. His instrument was a planting trowel. He has also found this method successful in planting seedlings, evergreens and small plants.

THE WAR AGAINST WEEDS.—The labor required to kill 100 weeds, well grown and firmly rooted, will kill 10,000 when just sprouted. It is easier in every respect to go over your ground three times when weeds are in the earliest stages of their existence than once after they have become firmly established. Another point of much importance is a proper arrangement of the crop and the use of suitable implements. A prominent New England horticulturist plants everything, when that is practicable, in drills, as straight as a line can be drawn, thus greatly facilitating culture, either by hand or by horse power.

A TIMELY WARNING.—Cooling off suddenly when heated sends many of our farmers' youth to an early tomb. It is often a matter of surprise that so many farmers' boys and girls die of consumption. It is thought that abundant exercise in the open air is directly opposed to that disease. So it is; but judgment and knowledge of the laws of health are essential to the preservation of health under any circumstances. When overheated cool off slowly—never in a strong draught of air. Gentle fanning, especially if the face is wet with cold water, will soon produce a delightful coolness, which leaves no disagreeable results.—Economist.

COLLAR BRUISES AND HARNESS GALLS.—The following is recommended for collar bruises in horses: Camphor gum, 2 ounces; alcohol, 10 ounces; tincture of iodine, 3 ounces; tincture of cantharides, 3 ounces; mix. It is very necessary, particularly in warm weather, to keep the harness perfectly clean, as the dirt which accumulates from sweat and dust is a great source of irritation. The sore shoulders may be bathed occasionally with some of the following lotion: Liquor plumbi sub-acetatis, 4 ounces; alcohol, 6 ounces; tincture of camphor, 2 ounces; water, 6 ounces; mix. The following is an excellent liniment for general purposes: Alcohol, 12 ounces; gum camphor, 2 ounces; tincture of arnica, 4 ounces; tincture of aconite root, 1 ounce; mix.

LICE ON CATTLE.—In the Country Gentleman are several new recipes furnished by correspondents. One recommends sifting ground plaster along the back and neck: "Two or three applications did the work effectually. The plaster should be very fine and dry. Another method used with great satisfaction is carbolic acid. One ounce of carbolic crystals, one pound of common bar soap, melted together by the addition of a little water. Let an animal be washed in a strong suds made with this, and it is sure death to all parasites, and will cure all skin diseases. Both these remedies are simple, harmless, and effectual. Lice will live for a long time in the woodwork about the barn; it is a good plan to whitewash about the lean-to, and prevent their spreading in that way." Here is an internal remedy guaranteed to kill the lice without killing the cattle: "Give a teaspoonful or so of sulphur at intervals of a day or two, and apply lard with kerosene oil enough to thin it so as to rub it in easily cold, with a little sulphur in; the lice will die or leave in disgust. Usually the internal remedy will suffice. There are cattle, however, that seem to breed lice, as they will return again and again, after the most heroic treatment, and while the remainder of the herd are clean. A little sulphur in the meal will sicken hen lice also." A third correspondent says, "Twist lightly a few strands of yarn, and draw through mercurial ointment until thoroughly saturated; tie this around the animal's neck tolerably tight, and it will kill every louse on it in a short time." Again: "Put two quarts of air-slacked lime into a cotton-cloth bag, and shake it over the cattle, whipping them lightly with it under the belly and between the legs."

About the House.

TO KEEP MILK FROM TURNING.—Wet the dish with cold water before using.

A RELIEF FOR CHILBLAINS.—A lemon cut in half and rubbed on the feet will relieve chilblains and the tenderness following.

RELIEF FOR RHEUMATISM.—Four drops of fluid extract veratrum, taken once in three or four hours. There is nothing dangerous about it, it is its own antidote; if any one gets a little too much they will throw it up.

NEURALGIA AND RHEUMATISM.—Two table-spoonfuls each of beef's gall, laudanum, spirits of turpentine, hemlock oil, sassafras oil, and amber oil, half a pint alcohol; mix all together. Apply three or four times a day.

CLERGYMEN'S SORE THROAT, CATARRH, ETC.—These affections are not to be relieved by local applications only. Get the stomach and liver right and the troubles are apt to cease. Indigestion is the common cause of the sore throat of public speakers.

PNEUMONIA.—Crude petroleum (pure Pennsylvania) is good for pneumonia; outward application; rub well (taking care not to blister) once or twice a week; take five to ten drops of same in coffee; keep oil from lamp or fire, as it is very inflammable; refined oil will not do, as there is acid in it.

BOILED-CIDER PIE.—Take nine spoonfuls of boiled cider and six of water, if the cider is quite thick, sugar with regard to the sweetness of the cider, and a little flour. Line a deep dish with biscuit crust. Take fresh meat, cut into bits, cook and season as for a stew and fill the dish, put on a cover of paste, with an opening in the center for the steam to escape. This is a good way to use up bits left over from a previous meal. A crust made of sour cream and saleratus, with a little salt, is the best.

MOST medicines can be taken with safety at the regular meals and in our daily habits than people generally believe. An excellent lesson in this sort of remedies can be taken from the domestic animals constantly surrounding us. Where many human beings would take [illegible] out doors and eat grass, and where many others would take a concoction of nervines, the domestic cat will find a comfortable place and take quiet naps.

A REAL remedy for sea-sickness is said to have at last been discovered. The formula varies with the state of the water, the constitution of the individual, and the more or less liability to suffer from that distressing malady. The following is the recipe for very rough weather: Chloral, three grams; distilled water, fifty grams; currant sirup, sixty grams; French essence of mint, two drops. Half the mixture to be taken on embarking.

MILDEW ON PRESERVES.—Aunt Addie, in the New York Times, tells her friends that they will find that tissue-paper cut the exact size of their jars of preserves and laid on double will prevent mildew; or a muslin cloth, dipped in melted butter or sweet olive oil, will also answer the purpose, or equal parts of tallow and beeswax melted and a cloth dipped in it and put on warm. Also that they may take the white of an egg and wet slightly both sides of a piece of letter paper, sufficiently large to cover over the top of the preserves snugly; I have kept them free from mold and spoiling two years.

Sixteen Executions Ordered in Pennsylvania.

The Governor to-day issued warrants for the execution of eight Molly Maguire murderers, in addition to four issued a few weeks ago. Hugh McGehan, James Roarity, James Boyle and James Carroll, convicted of the murder of the Tamaqua policeman, and against whom the Supreme Court recently decided, will be hanged at Pottsville on the same day—the 21st of June—on which Thomas Munley, the murderer of Thomas Sanger and James Urnes, mining bosses, will be executed. Alexander Campbell, convicted of the murder of John P. Jones, mining boss, will be hanged at Mauch Chunck, June 21, with Michael Doyle, Edward Kelly and John Donahue. The 9th of August has been designated for the execution of Patrick Hester, Hugh Tully and Patrick McHugh, of Columbia county, convicted of the murder of Alexander W. Rea, Superintendent of a colliery, in the fall of 1868. The Governor also fixed the same day for the hanging of Thomas F. Curley, the murderer of Miss Whitby, of Montgomery county. The number of unexecuted death warrants issued by the Governor the past two months is sixteen, all of which will be carried into effect in June, July and August. On the 21st of June ten murderers will expiate their crimes on the gallows in this State. Nine of them are Molly Maguires.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Cor. New York World.

Gen. Grant's Farewell Address, on Sailing for Europe.

MY DEAR FRIENDS: I was not aware we would have so much speechmaking here, or that it would be necessary for me to say any more to you, but I feel that the compliments you have showered upon me were not altogether deserved. They should not all be paid to me, either as a soldier or as a civil officer. As a General, your praises do not belong to me; as the executive of the nation, they were not due to me. There is no man that can fill both or either of these positions without the help of good men. I selected my lieutenants when I was in both positions, and they were men, I believe, which could have filled my place often better than I did. I never flattered myself I was entitled to the place you gave me. My lieutenants could have acted perhaps better than I, had opportunity presented itself. Gen. Sherman could have taken my place as a soldier or in the civil office, and so could Sheridan and others I might name. I am sure if the country ever comes to this need again there will be men for the work—there will be men born for every emergency. Again I thank you, and again I bid you good-by, and once again I say that if I had failed Sherman or Sheridan or some of my other lieutenants would have succeeded.

Statistics of Immigration.

In connection with his last quarterly statistical report, the Chief of the Federal Bureau of Statistics furnishes a number of elaborate tables relating to immigration into the United States during the calendar year ending Dec. 31, 1876. According to these statements the whole number of immigrants which entered American ports during the year was 157,440. Of this number 102,960 were males, and 54,840 females. As to the ages of this influx of population, 26,618 were under fifteen years, 111,764 were over fifteen and less than forty, while 19,068 were forty years of age and upward. Europe, Asia, Africa, the countries of this continent and the isles of the sea are represented in this body of strangers placing themselves under the protection of the laws and flag of the United States. A few countries, however, contributed the great bulk of the immigration, and are as follows:

Great Britain	42,243
Germany	31,323
British North America	25,618
China	16,879
Russia	6,787
France	6,723
Norway	6,031
	135,604

THERE is a bottomless bog in an important highway which crosses a corner of a swamp in Litchfield county, Conn. Attempts have been made every season for the last twelve years to fill it up with gravel and stones, but without success. Rocks as large as a team of oxen could draw were dumped in last spring, and for a time the road-bed remained above water, but this spring the hole appears larger and deeper than ever, and the road board will be obliged to bridge it.

THE SEWING MACHINE.

History of Its Rise—The Earlier and Later Inventions—Difficulties Encountered by Inventors in Securing Patents.

[From the Scientific American.]

In 1755, Weisenthal patented in England a needle with the eye in the middle, which was operated by hand. Alsop also, in England, in 1770, patented an embroidery loom; and, in 1804, Duncan devised machine embroidery by a number of hooked needles. Saint's machine, dated July, 1790, is the nearest approach to the modern apparatus; but this was only adapted to leather sewing, as the notched needle which pushed the thread through could not have been used on fibrous material. In 1825, Thimonnier [illegible] ceived the idea of sewing apparatus, and for sixteen years labored to develop the same. He achieved substantial success; and, in 1841, 200 of his machines were at work, making army clothing. In 1848 the machines were made of metal, and could work at the rate of 300 stitches a minute. The political revolution in France during that year, however, ruined the inventor, and he died in great poverty in 1857.

The above brief statement covers what was first accomplished in Europe. As early as 1832, Walter Hunt, of New York, claimed to have made a lock-stitch sewing machine; but he did not seek a patent until 1854, and then his application was denied on the ground of his having abandoned the invention, and on account of Howe's patent obtained in 1846. In 1842, John J. Greenough contrived a machine having a double-pointed needle, with an eye in the middle, which was drawn through the cloth by pincers. This never got beyond the stage of a model. Benjamin W. Bean, in 1843, patented a machine for making a running or basting stitch, the needle passing through corrugations of the cloth; and George R. Corlies devised an apparatus similar to Greenough's shortly afterward. None of these machines were brought into practical use.

Isaac M. Singer's first patent was obtained in 1851 for a method of tightening stitch and other improvements in the single-thread or chain-stitch machine. Afterward he devised the peculiar feed motion known as the wheel or continuous feed. It proved a most valuable invention. J. E. A. Gibbs, of Millpoint, Va., invented the rotating hook which produces a twist in the loop stitch. The first rotating hook was patented by Wilson in 1851. Charles H. Willcox invented the automatic tension; and in the Grover & Baker machine (1851-2) was first introduced the double-loop stitch employing two threads, effected by a circular, horizontally moving needle. In some machines this stitch is made by the shuttle. It will suffice here to point out that the vibratory eye-pointed needle, the reciprocating shuttle, the rotating hook, and the four-motion feed are the essential foundation elements of the sewing-machine patents; and it follows as a matter of course that whoever controls not merely all but any one of these devices must exercise a potent influence over the entire industry. For some time the owners of these patents exercised sharp rivalry; but eventually they settled their differences, consolidated their several interests, and thus formed a combination which has enjoyed, during the lifetime of the several patents under its control, an impregnable monopoly. In due time, one by one of these patents expired; and probably in the whole history of legislation cannot be found instances where more persistent effort or more powerful influence was exerted to secure extension after extension. Finally all lapsed except the Bachelder and the Wilson feed motion. The latter ended after two extensions in 1871. Every Congress since then has been besought to grant still further extension; and our readers will remember how persistently we have opposed the attempts and explained their objects and bearing on the public interest. The last stronghold of the combination resided in the Bachelder patent, granted in 1848, and containing a claim sufficient to protect the feed motion. This patent the combination unearthed and purchased many years ago. It was twice extended, and its demise marks the expiration of all the fundamental sewing-machine patents.

In 1845 Elias Howe completed his first machine, and obtained a patent thereon in September, 1846. Mr. Howe, almost immediately after obtaining his patent, went to Europe, where he endeavored to obtain capital for the manufacture of his machine; but he was met by a skepticism even more obdurate and discouraging than he encountered from those to whom he applied for the necessary aid here; and he returned home after two years, in a sailing vessel, paying for his passage by manual labor, and arriving literally penniless. He remained extremely poor until after his many legal controversies against infringers terminated in his favor, in 1854. A year after that of Howe's patent, Morey and Johnson devised a single-thread chain-stitch machine. The feed-motion was something like Howe's; the price $135.

During the early part of 1849, there came into our office one day a quiet, spare-looking man, hailing from Pittsfield, Mass. After making a general survey of the premises, and convincing himself that he could trust us with his secret, he carefully untied a handkerchief and exhibited two models—one a rotary steam engine, the other a sewing machine. He could not afford, he said, to obtain patents for both, and he wanted to know which one was likely to prove most advantageous to him. We advised the sewing machine as the most promising of the two, although, if we remember correctly, we had but little faith in the latter at that time, and accordingly he authorized us to proceed. Our visitor was Mr. A. B. Wilson; and in the first crude model, which remained in our possession until a few years ago, was embodied the double-pointed shuttle, making a stitch at each backward and forward movement; and perhaps there was also the germ of the second great sewing-machine invention, namely, the feed motion.

THE youth who cannot wreath his monogram before him with cigarette fumes, entice the same back via his nose, and emit a volume of jaundiced smoke in the face of a companion—all with the air of one having learned it in his infancy—you may be sure hails not from that noble company known as "the boys."

VEGETINE.

HER OWN WORDS.

BALTIMORE, Md., Feb. 16, 1877.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—Since several years I have got a sore and very painful foot. I had some physicians, but they couldn't cure me. Now, I have heard of your VEGETINE from a lady who was sick for a long time, and became all well from your VEGETINE; and I went and bought me one bottle of VEGETINE, and, after I had used one bottle, the pains left me, and it began to heal, and then I bought one other bottle, and so I take it yet. I thank God for this remedy and yourself, and wishing every sufferer may pay attention to it. It is a blessing for health.

MRS. C. KRABE, 638 West Baltimore Street.

VEGETINE.

SAFE AND SURE.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

In 1872 your VEGETINE was recommended to me, and, yielding to the persuasions of a friend, I consented to try it. At the time, I was suffering from general debility and nervous prostration, superinduced by overwork and irregular habits. Its wonderful strengthening and curative properties seemed to affect my debilitated system from the first dose; and, under its persistent use, I rapidly recovered, gaining more than usual health and good feeling. Since then I have not hesitated to give VEGETINE my most unqualified indorsement, as being a safe, sure and powerful agent in promoting health and restoring the wasted system to new life and energy. VEGETINE is the only medicine I use; and, as long as I live, I never expect to find a better.

Yours truly,
W. H. CLARK,
120 Monterey Street, Allegheny, Pa.

VEGETINE.

THE BEST SPRING MEDICINE.

CHARLESTOWN.

H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—This is to certify that I have used your "Blood Preparation" in my family for several years, and think that, for Scrofula, or Cankerous Humors, or Rheumatic affections, it cannot be excelled; and as a blood purifier and spring medicine it is the best thing I have ever used, and I have used almost everything. I can cheerfully recommend it to any one in need of such a medicine.

Yours respectfully,
MRS. A. A. DINSMORE, 19 Russel Street.

VEGETINE.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

BOSTON, Feb. 13, 1871.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

Dear Sir—About one year since I found myself in a feeble condition from general debility. VEGETINE was strongly recommended to me by a friend who had been much benefited by its use. I procured the article, and, after using several bottles, was restored to health, and discontinued its use. I feel quite confident that there is no medicine superior to it for those complaints for which it is especially prepared, and would cheerfully recommend it to those who feel that they need something to restore them to perfect health.

Respectfully yours,
U. L. PETTENGILL,
Firm of S. M. Pettengill & Co.,
No. 10 State Street, Boston.

VEGETINE.

ALL HAVE OBTAINED RELIEF.

SOUTH BERWICK, Me., Jan. 17, 1872.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:

Dear Sir—I have had dyspepsia in its worst form for the last ten years, and have taken hundreds of dollars' worth of medicines without obtaining any relief. In September last I commenced taking VEGETINE, since which time my health has steadily improved. My food digests well, and I have gained fifteen pounds of flesh. There are several others in this place taking VEGETINE, and all have obtained relief.

Yours truly,
THOMAS E. MOORE,
Overseer of Card Room, Portsmouth Co.'s Mills.

— Maize Flour Toilet Soap! —

A great discovery!—a new soap compound! It soothes, softens and whitens the skin, has wonderful healing and superior washing properties, and is equally suited for the bath, nursery and general toilet. It is delightfully perfumed, and sold everywhere at a moderate price. Registered in Patent Office, 1876, by the manufacturers,
McKEONE, VAN HAAGEN & CO., Philadelphia.

$777 is not easily earned in these times, but it can be made in three months by any one, of either sex, in any part of the country, who is willing to work steadily at the employment that we furnish. $66 per week in your own town. You need not be away from home over night. You can give your whole time to the work, or only your spare moments. We have agents who are making over $20 per day at the business. All who engage at once can make money fast. At the present time money cannot be made so easily and rapidly at any other business. It costs nothing to try the business. Terms and $5 Outfit free. Address, at once, H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

A Perfect Anti-Septic and Disinfectant Bath and Toilet Soap.

Takes the Place of all other Soaps for Daily use in the Family.

Manufactured from the purest vegetable Oils with the addition of that greatest known Anti-Septic and disinfectant

SALICYLIC ACID,

Making the most healthful, the most perfect, and the most economical Bath and Toilet Soap ever offered to the public.

Indorsed by the tne medical profession and attested by thousands.

AS THE GREAT PREVENTIVE

In all cases of blood poisoning whether arising from malarial or miasmatic exhalations, defective sewerage, or any other causes.

Its constant use prevents the contracting of contagious diseases, typhoid, scarlet and all malarial fevers. It is invaluable, and should be used in all districts where fever and ague prevails as it is the greatest known preventive to that disease. It is of immense value in the cure of all skin disease; a trial proves it, and its use prevents contracting them. It is a special boon to school children who are constantly exposed. It is the most healthful bath soap for infants, worth its weight in gold in the nursery. It is no more expensive than other toilet soaps of good quality It goes further and its great superiority is bringing it into universal use. It has no disagreeable odor and is absolutely pure.

Extensively used in hospitals and sick rooms by order of physicians.

For sale by all druggists and grocers. Sample box containing three cakes sent post paid on receipt of 75 cents, Liberal terms to the trade.

In the Sweet By-and-By.

Cannot but be the happy thought as the fortunate recipient of the "Rocky Mountain Tourist" scans its wonderfully attractive pages and peruses its fascinating descriptions. Most beautifully embellished with new and highly artistic engravings, its letter press a model of typographical richness, and the arrangement throughout simply superb, the Rocky Mountain Touaist is worthy of comparison with "Picturesque America or The Aldine." It is written in gossipy, graphic style, covering details of the tour through the garden of the Southwest (the Arkansas Valley, Southern Kansas), to the very heart of the Alps of America—the Rocky Mountains. Jaunts are made to all the famous resorts of Colorado, the remarkable ruins, the springs, the mines, and, in short, to every point of interest to tourists, agriculturists, capitalists, miner, and invalid. With the Tourists, the San Juan Guide keeps fitting company, and the two publications are mailed free to all writing for one or both to T. J. Anderson, Topka K.

Figures are what is wanted

Not election majorities, but such as interest the great army of American producers. Twenty-five years ago the eight counties of Missouri, now traversed by the Old Reliable Hanibal & St. Joseph Railroad were nearly a wilderness. To-day, by a late census, it is discovered that these counties produce over one-fourteenth of the entire wheat crop of the entire State, over one-twelfth of the corn crop, and over one-ninth of the oats. The same growth of country is now being repeated in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and New Mexico, and the immortal Greeley had this identical route and section of country in mind when he breath those stirring words of wisdom, "Young man, go West." Therefore, it is but natural that parties taking this advice should desire to pass over a road that has done so much for a great State, (especially as it offers the best facilities) and see for themselves. By the Hannibal & St. Joseph railroad, through cars are run from Cleveland and Toledo, and thro' connections made from Cincinnati and Indianapolis, via Quincy, to St, Jo., Atchison and Kansas City, and from Chicago to Kansas City without change. We are about to issue, in connection with our own, a county map of Colorado and New Mexico, giving valuable information as regards time tables routes, distances, altitudes, &c., which we will be pleased to furnish free, upon application in person or by letter addressed to

A Deaf Man Talks Politics.

One of the oldest and most disreputable citizens of San Antonio, Texas, forgot, as was his usual custom, to pay for "the smile" he had just taken.—The old gentleman is a little deaf, too. The barkeeper mildly intimated that if he had an extra quarter about him it would not be refused with scorn in part payment.

"Another extra out, is there?" he remarked, moving slowly toward the door.

"When are you going to pay that fifteen cents, hey?" said the barkeeper, in a raised voice, moving gently toward him.

The old genteman nodded and hallowed back, "Yes Hayes is in, Eight of the fifteen went for him."

The barkeeper sidled up towards him, to get a fair kick, observing rather excitedly, "You are acting damn badly."

"Damn Bradley, that's just what I say," and slid out just as the foot went up into the air, and was visible for a moment over the top of the swinging doors, while the aforesaid old customer continued on down the street, with a smile on his face as if the angels were whispering to him.

Not Afraid of Hops.

A big-bellied fellow used to frequent an "up-town" dram shop in Philadelphia, where a few wits and a quantity of mutton-headed individuals were wont to congregate. Old Rolff, for such was his name, was "death on a pale hoss" on beer; he could drink equal to a London tapster, or a Dutch Burgomaster, and had often drank his pint down at a gulp as easy as falling off a log. One day a few jokers being around, doubted the capasity of the old man to swallow a quart of beer at a draught.

"You choost pay for 'em," says Rolff, "You choost pay for 'em, an' by dunder you see if Old Jake Rolff can't swaller a quart beer so quick mitout winkin."

"We'll pay for it daddy," says one, "if you will down it with one long guzzle."

"Das ish goot, fetch on de peer."

The beer was brought in a large, deep, brown mug. Before pouring the beer in a defunct mouse had been quietly inured." The old man took the mug, foaming to the brim, raised it to the necessary elevation, and down it went.

"How'd it go, daddy?" was the cry as the old man, with bloated visage and distended eyes sat down the mug.

"How'd it go? Bah! goot! Der vas von tam big hop in de bottom, but tins I care a tam from dem tings?"

At the Union Depot a coffin lay on a baggage truck waiting to be put on Lake Shore train No. 8, when it should go out. It was directed to Mrs. —, Parma, Jackson county, Mich. It contained the remains of the son of a woman who, in one short year, had lost every near relative she posessed on earth—husband, daughter and two sons. This was her last son, who had died in Cincinnatti.

She had been summoned to his side when he was suddenly taken ill, and had arrived just one hour after he had breathed his last, calling vainly in the agonies of death for his mother. At times the realization of her terrible grief and lonliness would weigh down on her with such unbarable force that she would almost grow wild with anguish.

She paced the floor of the depot impatiently, and finally walked out and stood over the coffin, wringing her hands and moaning with grief. Another woman saw her and came to her side. They were utter strangers, but sorrow made them sisters.

"Do not give way to your grief so completely," said the strange lady to the poor wman.

"How can I help it?" said she almost fircely. "It is well enough for you to say so, but what do you know about suffering? This was all I had."

"Ah, my dear woman," said the stranger, taking her by the hand, "I know what sorrow is. Last week I buried all I had on earth.

Almost instantly the poor woman stopped her weeping, grasped her comforters hand eagerly, and walked away from the coffin with her in to the waiting-room.

"I will learn to bear it," said she; "but I did not believe that in this wide world there was one human being called to suffering like mine."

Notes and Items Of Early Times.

BY MAJOR M'FADEN.

We had often heard of an eagle's nest away up north of us that had been there from time immemorial, as far back as the Indians could remember. I had a great curiosity to see it, but did not know the exact locality of it. One time in the summer after I had found the Indian in the tree, and Indian boy about fifteen or sixteen years old came over to see us from the Tippeacanoe, to find out something more about the lost Indian and to let us know that the Indians had returned from Lake Manitou. He knew where the eagle's nest was, and said he would show it to us. So one morning early, Tom Torrence, Sam Rader, myself and the Indian boy took our guns and started for it. After we had traveled five or six mile we came in sight of it two miles off, and the eagle came out to meet us, flying over us and screaming all the time, as they had young ones and are very jealous and watchful for their safety. The nest was in a very large and tall white oak tree that ran up like a poplar without any limbs except at the top where the nest was located. It was as large as a brush heap, and made out of limbs and sticks as big as your arm. The tree was standing on the edge of a large sand ridge, with a wet place or swamp close by. As we approached, the eagle became perfectly frantic. Under the tree we found fish, small animals and other game that had been brought to the young ones for food. We concluded that we would try and get them. We drew cuts as to who should climb the tree, as it was a very dangerous undertaking. It fell to the Indian boy, and as he did not like to undertake it, I thought it was wrong for him to do so, as we had promised to take care of him and that he should not be hurt. I took his place and prepared to climb. There was a grapevine that ran from the bottom to the top. It had been cut loose at the bottom, and looked like somebody else had tried to climb and failed. I undressed to the buff, said my prayers and started up. As I went up the old eagle came closer and struck me with their wings. I got frightened and said I wanted to "go home," but the boys spoke gently to me and said I must not crawfish, so I went ahead. As I got nearly to the top, and was almost given out, an old eagle took me by the top of my head with his claws and lifted me right out and I let all go hold, and said, "Farewell, vain world, I am going home," and fell forty feet into the top of a small tree full of grapevines and bounded off about fifteen feet, and lit right end up in a soft place in the swamp. If I had landed head down, I would have died before they could get me out. As it was, they had to hitch a grapevine around me and had hard work to pull me out. My head was badly hurt, and I bear the marks of it to this day. The boys wanted to shoot the eagles, but I told them that would not be right, that their nest was their castle, and that they were protecting and defending their young, and carrying out the first great law of nature, selfpreservation, and that they were too much for us, and that we would leave them in peace. That was the worst scare that I ever had, and you will notice that I am getting somewhat gray ever since. As we were returning home, we heard a rattlesnake rattling a short distance from us. We went up easily to see what was the matter, and there we beheld a large rattlesnak coiled up, head erect, and eyes flashing fire and a big black snake, about six feet long, circling around him. I went two to one on the rattlesnake. The Indian boy whom we called Othello, (as we could not pronounce his Indian name) said the black snake would whip. The black snake got nearer and nearer, and at last as quick as lightning he made a spring and grappled the rattlesnake by the back of the neck, and then of all the squirming and twisting you ever saw, it beat the world. The black snake never broke his hold, and coiled round the rattlesnake and squeezed him to death. Every once in a while the black snake would uncoil a little, to see what the condition of the rattler was. The rattler would squirm a little, and then the black snake would rewrap and choke him the harder. At last the rattlesnake threw up the sponge and gave up the ghost. We let the black snake go, as it is a rule among hunters case of wild animals fighting or trying to escape from each other, to let the victor go. If wolves are running a deer down, drive off the wolves, protect the deer and let it go. That is, we would never take advantage of a poor, helpless animal when in distress. Many a time have I heard a frog squealing and crying like a child, in the grass; went to it to find a snake had it by the hind legs trying to swallow it alive. I had no conscientious scruples about killing the snake and liberating the frog from a living tomb. Before we reached home we caught a beautiful fawn; took it home, and it became very tame and made a very pretty pet. It is fun to see deer kill snakes. Whenever they find one they go off fifteen or twenty yards and then come up on a full run, jump square up and come down with their sharp hoofs altogether upon the snake and jump away before it can bite them, and keep on until they have cut them all to pieces. We used to catch snakes and bring them home just to see our pet deer kill them in that way.

Othello, the Indian boy, left the next morning for Tippeacanoe, and I promised him that I would come over the next week and hunt and fish with them. He wanted me to go with him then, but I could not, as we had some work to do that must be done. When I found the lost Indian I found his gun close by in a dilapidated condition, and also his tomahawk and some other trinkets. When I got ready I gathered them all together and started for the Indian camp on the Tippecanoe. Before starting my mother made me promise faithfully that I would come back again, as she was afraid that I was going off to stay with the Indians for good. I promised her that I would come and I did, as I always kept my word with her. After I had started and got about half way to the Tippeacanoe, I saw some wild geese off to the left, and I thought perhaps they had a nest of young ones, and I wanted to get some of them to raise, as I heard that it could be done. In wandering around I lost the trail and got among a lot of quaking asp groves, whose leaves are never still, and huckleberry bushes, and at last crossed acraeberry marsh, and found that I was entirely lost. Night was coming on, and the wolves began to howl, and the hair commenced to stand on my head. I concluded that I could not find my way out. I tried to make a fire with the Indians gun by flashing powder in the pan, as it was an old flint lock. We had no percussion caps or matches in those days, and had to get fire with a steel, flint and punk, dry rotten wood, but as the leaves were damp I could not make a fire. It was then getting dark the wolves coming closer, and I concluded to climb a tree and put up for the night. I got up in a small bushy tree, the lowest limbs not more than eight or ten feet from the ground, and got into as good a place as I could in the forks of the tree. I had the old gun with me, but it would not go off. At last the wolves came howling right under me, and every time I would move they would crack their jaws together like fire crackers. One big fellow would rear up against the tree and jump up at me, and I poked the muzzle of the old gun down into his mouth and let him chew on that awhile for pastime. The fore part of the night was very dark, and I could only see them by their eyes, which glared like balls of fire. At last one came up rather close, and I threw the tomahawk at him, and from the way he howled I must have drawn blood, for the rest of them pitched in and tore him all to pieces before he knew it. If blood is drawn on a wolf the rest will turn on him and eat him up. You have read in Æsop's Fables, that the crowing of a cock will scare a lion, and I had heard that the hooting of an owl would scare wolves, so I began to hoot like an owl, and sure enough the wolves left me. When I first began to hoot, I heard a noise away off, like an owl, but louder and shriller than any I had ever heard before. It came closer and closer, and at last lit close by me, and lo and behold, it was my big white owl that had watched by the poor Indian. I was ever so glad to see him, as I had company then, and he stayed all night with me. My father was the greatest weather prophet I ever knew. When he was young he had belonged to the American Fur Company, and had hunted all through the Rocky Mountains with the Indians, and many was the story that he told me of the times he had with them. He could always tell when it was going to storm, rain or snow, or when it would be fair weather. He went altogether on the action of the birds and animals, and relied a great deal on the moon. That morning I had heard him say that the moon would rise at midnight, and that we would have fair weather. (It had been cloudy for some time back.) At midnight the moon came up in all its glorious fullness, and I thought of the words of Prentice:

> "'Tis midnight's holy hour,
> The time for meditation and prayer," and I meditated. The morning came beautiful, bright and clear. The white owl left me, "as other friends had left before," and flew in a northeast direction for about a mile, lit on a tree, and seemed to look back at me. I thought that was a good omen, and came down, took a tooth pick out of the bones of the wolf that had been torn to pieces, and started in the direction the owl had gone. After going about a mile I came in sight of the eagle's nest, and I then knew where I was, and took a bee line for the Tippecanoe. I arrived at the Indian's camp about noon, tired, weary and hungry. The Indians were all at home and very glad to see me, particularly Othello, the Indian boy. The poor little squaw cried over the old gun, tomahawk, and trinkets of her lost Indian, that I had brought her, which surprised me very much, as I had heard that Indians never cry. They gave me plenty to eat, of venison, honey and fish, and I had an appetite like a saw mill, as I had not eaten anything since the morning before. The Indian girl was still there, and I called her Parthenia, as she had a long name that was hard to remember. When I told them of how I got lost, and about the wolves and white owl, and how I had stayed in a tree all night, they said I was a "heap white man," and would make a "big Indian" and said the white owl was the good spirit, that it often came to them when they were sick or in distress, and they always considered it a good omen. Well, I staied a week with them, and had a glorious time, fishing and hunting, which I will tell you about in my next. We will close by singing—

> "From Greenland's icy mountains,
> To India's coral strands,
> Where Afric's sunny fountains
> Roll down their golden sands."

A Slight Mistake.

The brakeman opened the door and shouted out "Shoveltown," as the train drew up to a country station. The only passenger who stepped down and out was an elderly female, who, the moment she struck the platform, started off for up the road in a style which intimated that she reckoned she knew where she was anyhow. She hadn't got more than twenty steps off, however, before a young man, who occupied a seat directly behind the one she had just vacated, bounced to his feet, as if a bombshell had hit him, seized a rusty-looking black valice from the rack above his head, shot for the door like a rocket-stick, jumped down on the platform, and vociferously yelled, "Say, madam, you've left your bag." The elderly female turned around to look, but just then the train started, and the young man, dropping the valise like a a hot potato, jumped aboard again, and resumed his seat.

Presently there came in from the smoking car ahead a snuffy-looking old man in a homespun suit and spectacles.

"Now," said he, "I wonder what has become of my valise?"

The young man felt figity, and was suddenly attracted by the rare beauty of the landscape without.

"Anybody seen a valise that I left in this 'ere rack?" continued the man in the homespun, anxiously.

The youth saw that he'd gone and done it. There was no alternative but to own up. "Why," said he "was that your valise? I thought it belonged to the lady that got out at the last station. She went off and left it. I ran after her with it."

"The d—l you did," continued old Homespun, aghast. I'm the Rev. Hezekiah Holloway, all the way from Injianny, and that bag's got all my sermons into it."

For a minute or two, reader, there was a scene in that car, you may depend upon it. But, when they reached the next telegraph station, a dispatch came that the woman didn't own the bag, and "wouldn't own such a bag nohow," and the Rev. H. H. got his sermons in due season by next train.

Conklin and the Indiana Climate.

A rather amusing interview took place last summer between Cumback, of this State, and Senator Conklin, that has not been printed, and is too good to keep. Cumback was on his way to New York to attend a meeting of the National Republican Committee, and stopped over a day at Washington. He was in the Senate chamber talking to some friends, and Senator Conklin joined the circle and was introduced to Cumback. He said some pleasant and complimentary things to the Hoosier; "that he had heard of him," that he had a National reputation, etc., etc. Cumback, not to be outdone in compliments, said to the distinguished Senator that he was glad to see in the New York Times that morning that he was coming to Indiana to assist in the campaign; that he would receive a hearty welcome from the Hoosiers; that his reputation as a statesman and an orator was well known, and when it was known that he was really coming, the people of Indiana would be delighted, etc., etc.

The Senator elevated his nose and, in a disdainful and positive manner said: "I am not going to Indiana." "Why not?" said Cumback. "Oh," said Conklin, in a languishing way, "you have chills and fevers in your State. The malaria of your climate is very enervating. I shall not expose myself to the bad atmosphere of Indiana."

Cumback replied to him by saying: "I know, Senator, you have grown to your fine proportions in that health-giving atmosphere of New York, where the very breezes are no doubt loaded with savory and life-giving odors, but you can look at me; I am a native Hoosier, about your age; I weigh 215 pounds; have lived all my life in this malaria you speak of, and if you are anxious to know how it weakens and prostrates a man, if you will step out on the grass in front of the Capitol I can throw your heels so high and so quick that you may have a change of views in regard to our climate."

It is needless to say the Senator declined the test, and good humoredly decided to think more favorably of a visit to our State.

AUBURN COURIER.

THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1877.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

PUBLIC DEBT STATEMENT.

THE following is the public debt statement for June 1:

Six per cent. bonds	$ 984,298,000
Five per cent. bonds	703,266,650
Four and a half per cent. bonds	95,000,000
Total coin bonds	[illegible]
Lawful money debt	$ 14,000,000
Matured debt	14,394,309
Legal tenders	360,477,648
Certificates of deposit	46,510,000
Fractional currency	21,206,280
Coin certificates	48,407,800
Total without interest	$ 415,962,072
Total debt	$2,195,461,028
Total interest	34,041,100
Cash in treasury—coin	$ 100,137,089
Cash in treasury—currency	4,515,516
Currency held for redemption of fractional currency	7,709,971
Special deposits held for redemption of certificates of deposit	46,510,000
Total in treasury	$ 156,924,866
Debt less cash in treasury	$2,063,377,342
Decrease of debt during May	6,981,274
Decrease since June 30, 1876	36,062,092
Bonds issued to Pacific Railroad Companies, interest payable in lawful money; principal outstanding	64,623,512
Interest accrued and not yet paid	1,655,887
Interest paid by United States	34,016,922
Interest repaid by transportation of mails, etc	8,455,525
Balance of interest paid by United States	25,563,397

The large reduction in the debt during May is partly explained by the fact that large sums are due to the navy and for the necessary expenses of other departments, but for which there is no appropriation. The ordinary decrease of the debt is $5,000,000. The estimated amount of decrease on account of deficiency in the appropriation, including the pay of the navy, is $1,981,274. The total decrease is $6,-981,274.

THE EAST.

A SERIOUS disaster occurred, a few days ago, on the Lehigh Valley railroad, near Laceyville, Pa., a passenger train being precipitated down a canal embankment a distance of fifteen feet. The coaches, four in number, were smashed in pieces, and many passengers were pinned down in most excruciating positions. Two of them were killed outright, four fatally wounded, and thirteen others seriously injured.

THE notorious Connecticut Borgia, Mrs. Lydia Sherman, who some five years ago was sentenced to a life term in the Connecticut State prison, has escaped from that institution. For some time she had feigned illness, and, having disarmed suspicion and prepared an exit by persuading a matron to leave open a prison door, she escaped easily. This remarkable woman poisoned successively her first husband, Edward Struck, a New York policeman, her children, Martha, Eliza, Edward and George, and subsequently her third husband, Horatio N. Sherman, of Birmingham, Ct., and his baby son, to all of which she confessed, and it has been supposed that she poisoned her second husband, John Hurlbut, of Huntington, Ct.

A LARGE five-story tenement building, occupied by about twenty-five people, was burned in Boston last week. There being no fire-escape and but one exit, the occupants escaped with great difficulty. Mrs. Eliza Carn jumped from a third-story window and received fatal injuries. Mr. Dissel jumped from the fourth story and was likewise fatally injured. Several were more or less burned in their efforts to escape.... A compromise has at last been effected in the Sweeney case, whereby the estate of James M. Sweeney, a deceased brother of the great ring robber of New York city, undertakes to pay the sum of $400,000 to make good in part the stealings of Tweed's chief partner.

THE WEST.

TWO UNSUCCESSFUL attempts have been made at Salt Lake to assassinate Jerome B. Stillson, a New York Herald correspondent, who has lately been writing some pretty hard things about the Mormons.... Arizona advices report the murder of mail-carriers and military telegraph repairers near Camp Bowie. Troops are in pursuit. Much alarm exists among the citizens.

GEN. MILES narrowly escaped assassination at the hands of two treacherous Indian chiefs just before his recent battle on the Rosebud. It appears that just before the fight commenced Gen. Miles told his interpreter to halloo out to the Indians in their language that if they surrendered and laid down their arms they would be saved. As soon as he had done so the two chiefs, Lame Deer and Iron Star, came toward Gen. Miles on foot. When they got within about fifteen paces of him they laid their guns on the ground, and, walking up to him, shook hands with him and his Adjutant, Lieut. Baird. While they were doing this, Gen. Miles ordered his aid to dismount and get their guns. Scarcely had the aid touched the ground when the Indians stepped back, took up their guns, and one of them fired at Gen. Miles. Fortunately, Gen. Miles just at that moment, seeing the intention of the Indian, partly wheeled his horse around so that the bullet, instead of hitting him, passed by, killing a man in his rear. The two chiefs were instantly shot down in their tracks.... A diabolical attempt was recently made to wreck and plunder a train on the St. Louis and San Francisco railroad, near Woodend Station, fifty miles west of St. Louis. Obstructions were placed on the track and two of the rails displaced, throwing the engine and baggage car down an embankment forty feet high. The engineer and fireman and Dr. E. L. Atkinson, the physician of the road, were killed. The intention was to throw the entire train from the track, evidently with the object of robbery. Several shots were fired, and the passengers say they saw five men standing near who were revealed by the flashes from their pistols, but nobody was hit.

MT. CARMEL, Wabash county, Ill., a thriving town of about 3,000 inhabitants, situated on the Cairo and Vincennes railway, was visited last week by a tornado of unusual violence, and with appalling results. From the meager accounts before us at this writing we learn that the tornado started at the foot of Fourth street, and swept every house or building on that street for half a mile; then changed its course, and went up the river, sweeping everything in its course. Over 20 people were killed and upward of 150 wounded by the falling buildings. Three churches, two school-houses, the Court House, twenty business houses and about 150 residences were wholly or partially destroyed, and the breaking out of a fire still further added to the disaster. The loss to property is estimated at not less than $500,000, probably much more. At the time of the storm whole roofs of houses could be seen flying two or three hundred feet in the air, and carried away. Imagination, says an eye-witness, could not picture such a sight. It would have to be seen to be believed.... We continue to hear encouraging crop reports from Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and Iowa. Localities which by this time last year and two years ago had suffered terribly from grasshopper ravages have thus far either escaped altogether or else have received the visitation in a mild form. Everywhere the farmers, who generally take a very practical and matter-of-fact view of affairs, are highly encouraged at the excellent crop prospect, as well as at the prospect of realizing a better return upon their investment of toil and trouble than they have done for years.

GEN. CROOK, who is now in Salt Lake City, Utah, looking over the situation, has come to the conclusion, it is stated, that no more troops are needed in that Territory.... Avery Moore, hitherto a respected citizen of Chicago, and until quite recently a Town Supervisor, has pocketed about $9,000 of the county's funds and absconded to parts unknown.... Advices from the West represent that the Shoshone Indians, in Wyoming, are in an almost starving condition, and fears are entertained that they will be driven to commit depredations upon the settlers.

A DEPLORABLE case of insanity was developed in Chicago the other day. A widow lady, living in a lonely condition in the northwestern section of the city, lost her only child about three months ago. She brooded over the bereavement to such an extent that it unsettled her mind. On the day in question she was observed on the roof of her house, having in her possession a bundle, which was afterward discovered to be the remains of her child. How the poor creature succeeded in gaining an entrance to the cemetery, or how she succeeded in exhuming the body without being discovered, is not known, but it is supposed she visited the grave during the preceding night, and with [illegible] the remains of the dead babe.

SEVERAL of the parties who recently made the dastardly attempt to wreck and rob the St. Louis and San Francisco express train, fifty miles west of St. Louis, Mo., have been arrested, and one of their number, a youth of 20 years and an ex-convict, has made a full confession. The crime was concocted by eight men of the county, all farmers, whose intention it was to wreck the train by pitching it over the forty-foot embankment, and then pillage the express-car and rob the dead passengers.

OMAHA, Neb., was visited a few days ago by a tornado of unusual violence. Houses were wrecked, and chimneys, sheds, fences, trees, etc., were sent flying in every direction. The damage will amount to several thousands of dollars. Fortunately no lives were lost.... The roof of the seed-house occupied by C. F. Vick, near Fairmount, Neb., suddenly fell in a few days ago, burying the family in the ruins. Mr. Vick was only partly covered, and succeeded in rescuing his wife and two children uninjured, but a boy and a girl, 7 and 10 years old, were dead when taken from the ruins. The shock to the mother was so great that she became deranged.

THE SOUTH.

A FIRE in Baltimore last week destroyed a coal-oil refinery and twenty-five other buildings. Loss, $75,000.

THE trial of the Ellenton (S. C.) rioters, before Judge Waite, has resulted in a disagreement of the jury, which was equally divided. The six whites on the jury, it is stated, were for a verdict of acquittal, and the six blacks against. The black jurymen, however, were willing to agree on a verdict convicting two of the accused and acquitting all the rest, but to this the six whites would not consent.

WASHINGTON.

TREASURER WYMAN will transfer the United States Treasurer's office to Mr. Gilfillan on the 1st of July, and will then assume his old position of Assistant Treasurer. Ill-health is assigned as the motive for Mr. Wyman's retiring.

THE Cabinet, at a meeting last week, arrived at a very important decision in regard to the Texas border troubles. An order to Gen. Sherman was drawn up and adopted, of which the following is the most important part:

> The President desires that the utmost vigilance on the part of the military forces in Texas be exercised for the suppression of these raids. It is very desirable that the efforts to this end, in so far at least as they necessarily involve operations on both sides of the border, be made with the co-operation of the Mexican authorities, and you will instruct Gen. Ord, commanding in Texas, to invite such co-operation on the part of local Mexican authorities, and inform them that, while the President is anxious to avoid giving offense to Mexico, he is nevertheless convinced that the invasion of our territory by armed and organized bodies of thieves and robbers to prey upon our citizens should not longer be endured. Gen. Ord will at once notify the Mexican authorities along the Texas border of the great desire of the President to unite with them in efforts to suppress the long-continued lawlessness. At the same time he will inform those authorities that, if the Government of Mexico shall continue to neglect its duty of suppressing these outrages, that duty will devolve upon this Government, and will be performed even if its performance should render necessary the occasional crossing of the border by our troops. You will therefore direct Gen. Ord that, in case the lawless incursions continue, he will be at liberty to use his own discretion when in pursuit of a band of marauders, and when his troops are either in sight of them or upon a fresh trail, to follow them across the Rio Grande, and to overtake and punish them, as well as retake the stolen property taken from our citizens, and found in their possession, on the Mexican side of the line. I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
> GEO. W. MCCRARY, Secretary of War.
> To Gen. W. T. Sherman.

TWO LOUISIANA Postmasters at Clinton, East Feliciana parish, and St. Francisville, West Feliciana parish, who were recently commissioned by President Hayes, represent to the authorities at Washington that they are prevented from taking possession of their offices, and the Postoffice Department has dispatched a special agent to Louisiana to investigate the matter.

THE President has signed the commission of ex-Gov. Thomas A. Osborn, of Kansas, as United States Minister to Chili.... It is stated from Washington the pension consolidation order is to be modified in some particulars at least. The changes mentioned are: The Illinois agency will be moved from Springfield to Chicago; the Ohio consolidated agency to be removed from Columbus to Cincinnati.

SECRETARY SCHURZ has appointed a board of expert accountants to examine into the mode and methods in full in the finance and accounting divisions of the Indian Bureau, especially as to the analysis of money and property accounts of Indian Agents.... The President has appointed A. D. Hazel, of Pennsylvania, Third Assistant Postmaster General, vice E. W. Barber, of Michigan, resigned.

POLITICAL.

GEN. GEORGE A. SHERIDAN, of Louisiana, who has been an applicant for a foreign mission, has accepted a position as Special Agent of the Postoffice Department.

GENERAL.

BUSINESS failures: Maschuetz, Mach & Co., wholesale liquors, Dey street, New York, liabilities, $200,000; George H. Wolff & Co., dry-goods jobbers, New York and Cincinnati, liabilities $450,000; Vosburg & Baker, ship-chandlers, Buffalo, liabilities $40,000.... Sunday, June 3, was the fiftieth anniversary of the episcopate of Pius IX., and the day was duly celebrated by the Catholics all over the country.

IF Gen. Grant crossed the sea with the intention of making a quiet visit he is destined to be disappointed. In England he is booked for a series of banquets with distinguished personages that will keep him busy for several weeks to come.

BARNUM'S reward of $10,000 for the return of Charley Ross has reawakened public interest in the case, and the Philadelphia Times reports a strong probability that it will result in his restoration by the 1st of July, the third anniversary of his disappearance. A person who has worked long on the case is sure that the boy is in hiding in Western Pennsylvania, and says that the only hitch now is the fear of those who have him in charge that Barnum's promise of immunity might not be observed by the authorities. If they can have assurance that the Governor will grant them freedom from punishment, they will give him up, and the matter will probably soon be arranged.

MILLIONS of caterpillars have made their appearance in the region of London, Can. They are so thick as to seriously delay the railroad trains.... The Canadian Government has received advices which lead to the belief that Sitting Bull is at Wood Mountain, in Canadian territory.

A DELEGATE convention of representatives of the various medical colleges of the United States assembled in Chicago, last week, for the purpose of organizing the American Medical College Association, the object of which is the advancement of medical education in the United States, and the establishment of a common policy in the more important matters of college management. Twenty-nine of the principal medical colleges of the country were represented. A constitution, by-laws and articles of confederation were adopted.

THE annual report of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago railroad, for 1876, just submitted to the stockholders, shows the receipts to have been $7,853,848, against $7,968,-664 in 1875; expenses, $4,597,161, against $4,602,092 in 1875; net earnings, $3,[illegible]687, against $3,261,572 in 1875.

OUT of reports of crops from 211 points in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Kentucky, published in the Cincinnati Commercial, 179 indicate good crops of wheat; 31, fair crops; 1, light crop, if any; 47, good crops of fruit; 74, fair; 90, light crop, if any.... Burned: A lumber mill at Eau Claire, Wis., loss $60,000, insurance $25,000; eight buildings in Sauk City, Wis., loss $10,000, partly insured; several buildings at Indiantown, N. B., loss $30,000; a wool warehouse at Gallipolis, Ohio, loss $12,000; a large number of houses at Saxton's River village, Vt., loss heavy.... Business failures: Walter S. Babcock, lumber dealer, Chicago, liabilities $70,000; Bowen Brothers, large real-estate dealers, Chicago, liabilities heavy; James K. Doolittle, the leading dry-goods merchant of Denver, Col.; the Union Savings Bank of Bath, Pa.

THE TURCO-RUSSIAN WAR.

A SPECIAL from Vienna to the London Times has the following: "One thing seems pretty certain, that for one reason or another, possibly for several, a delay has occurred in the Russian advance in Asia. Fortunately for Russia, the Turks seem scarcely in a position to take an advantage of this delay. All accounts from the spot agree that the condition of their forces is even worse than generally believed. They are considerably fewer than has been assumed, and, with the exception of arms, lack everything requisite for an army in the field. It is impossible to expect that all these shortcomings can be remedied before the Russians push forward to Erzeroum."... A Constantinople dispatch announces that plans for the proposed fortification of Constantinople are being prepared with all possible care and dispatch, as if the Turkish Government had made up their minds for the siege.... A Russian army on the Danube is to be increased to 400,000 men. Provision contracts have been made for this number.

A SPECIAL dispatch from Constantinople to the Chicago Tribune gives a discouraging picture of the state of lawlessness and corruption now reigning there. "The corruption and bribery which are everywhere rife," says the dispatch, "destroy all chances of Turkish success. There are no horses, no money, and no order in the management of affairs. All the carriage horses in the country have been seized by the Government for war purposes. The Sultan is a nonentity. With 300 women and 5,000 persons of all classes in the palace to feed daily, the strain on the treasury is intense. Contracts for army stores and equipments are awarded by means of bribery of the officials having the matter in charge. The advertisements in newspapers of contracts open to general competition are mere shows, and are connived at by the Minister of War. The constitution of the country is disregarded in every possible manner. The Parliamentary Deputies are returning to their homes in disgust, and the laws which have been passed will never be put in force."... A special dispatch from Erzeroum says: "Two nights ago 4,000 Circassian cavalry, commanded by Mousha Pasha, were ordered to proceed toward Kars, entirely unsupported by infantry or artillery. They rested for the night at Bekli-Ahmed. The Russians secretly organized a powerful force, and during the night surrounded and surprised the village in which the Circassians had halted. Only about 5 per cent. of the entire force of 4,000 Circassians escaped the carnage which followed. Mousha Pasha himself is among the missing. The Circassians fought desperately, and no quarter was given."

THAT story about the massacre of 4,000 Circassians by Russian "barbarians," heretofore mentioned in these columns, is shown by Russian accounts of the affair to have been a gross exaggeration. Instead of being massacred, the Circassians were simply put to flight, the modest number of eighty-three being killed.... Some severe fighting is reported between the Turks and Montenegrins. The brave mountaineers appear to be more than holding their own.... The temporary lull in the Russian operations in Asia Minor, occasioned in part by heavy rains and also by the necessity of attending to the insurrectionary Circassians in the rear, has given place to a general advance of the entire army, and the cable brings reports of a series of preliminary successes which are evidently the prelude to a great and crushing victory over the forces commanded by Mukhtar Pasha. A Constantinople dispatch says the latter has established his headquarters about thirty miles east of Erzeroum, for the purpose of barring the advance of the Russian left wing. Ismail Hakki, commandant at Erzeroum, has taken a position near Kizil-Kilissa to meet the Russian center and right advancing via Soghanli and Alti.

IT is cabled that Count Schouvaloff is the bearer of a note from Russia to the English Government, the purport of which declares that the Czar desires no increase of territory in Europe, but demands the cession of a portion of Armenia, "from Bayazid to the coast, but not including Erzeroum."... A severe battle is reported between Montenegrins and Turks near Maljat, in which the latter were defeated with the loss of 500 men.... England has notified Russia and Turkey that any attempt on their part to blockade or otherwise to interfere with the Suez canal would be regarded as a menace to India, and incompatible with the British attitude of passive neutrality.... The Czar has rejoined the army on the Danube. During the journey, in order to guard against any attempt on his life by wrecking the train, the imperial coaches were preceded and followed by safety trains. The numerous accidents which have recently occurred on the Roumanian railways are believed to be the work of conspiracies.... The London Times' war correspondent estimates the strength of the Turks, of all arms, between the Danube and the Balkans, at about 200,000 men.

A DISPATCH from Constantinople asserts that 1,000 Abkasians have been surprised and cut to pieces by Russians.... A Vienna dispatch says: "In military circles here the opinion gains ground that the Russians will not cross the Danube. They expect such decisive success in Asia that every condition of a durable peace may secured from their effects."

A SHARP battle is reported between Turks and Montenegrins at Kristoc, in which 600 of the latter and 1,200 Turks were killed.... A Vienna dispatch says the houses of 150 Jewish families have been pillaged by a mob, at Dowbani, in Roumania. Eleven were killed, twenty-four wounded, and 90,000 ducats stolen.... Out of the thirty-three districts into which Roumania is divided, twenty-eight have been virtually placed under martial law. This was done because capital punishment is not recognized by the civil law, and the frequent discovery of spies rendered the measure necessary.

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

HEREAFTER all political gatherings numbering over twenty persons are to be interdicted by the French Government.... There was recently an emeute on board the British iron armor-plated ship Alexandra, the flagship of the Mediterranean squadron. It is stated that, in consequence of the stringency of discipline and the unusual severity of punishment, the whole of one watch refused to do duty, and threw the sights of the guns overboard.

IT is stated that Austria recently demanded and received from both Russia and Turkey written declarations that the obstruction to free navigation of the Danube shall be removed immediately upon the termination of the present war, and shall form no precedent for any future restriction whatsoever.... Sophia Frederica Matilda, Queen of Holland, is dead, aged 59.

FOURTOU, MacMahon's new Minister of the Interior, has issued a circular to the Prefects of France, instructing them to revise all licenses for hawking and selling newspapers, books and pamphlets, and only allow fit agents, offering proper guarantees to social order, to retain their licenses.... Hopes are entertained by the Government of British India that the crisis of the famine is nearly passed.

THE cable records a shocking disaster at Bath, England. During the celebration of the Bath and West of England Society's centenary, the Widcombe suspension bridge fell, and about 200 persons were precipitated thirty feet into the river Avon. About twenty perished, and many others were seriously injured.

A DISPATCH from St. Petersburg says the Russian Ambassadors to Paris, London and Vienna have been charged to give the most ample assurances to the neutral Governments that Russia does not aim at a political transformation of the map of the East, nor desire or intend to do anything that would provoke fresh European complications.... The Pope realized from the jubilee contributions of the faithful 5,000,000 lire, or something less than $1,200,000 in gold, besides a large assortment of costly gifts.... Turkey's attempt to borrow money abroad has signally failed, and it is now proposed to levy an internal loan.

Torpedoes in the Civil War.

The two Russian engineers who fastened a torpedo under the bow of a Turkish monitor in the Danube, and, on their return to the northern bank, discharged it by means of an electric battery and destroyed the vessel have taken a hint from Lieut. Wm. B. Cushing's exploit in the Roanoke. He slipped up the river in a steam launch under a fierce fire from the Confederate ram Albemarle, which was lying in her dock behind a barricade of logs. He lowered a torpedo-boat, rowed it up to the Albemarle, and fired it. The ram went down like a stone. At the same instant one of the enemy's shots crashed through the torpedo-boat and utterly destroyed it, and the launch was also disabled; but, Cushing, calling upon his men to save themselves as best they could, dropped into the water, swam down stream half a mile, crawled out at daybreak to hide himself in a swamp, and finally found a skiff and escaped to the Federal fleet. The Russian engineers rowed ashore and called electricity to their aid; Cushing had no such luck. Torpedoes were not used to any extent during the American war. The iron Tecumseh was shattered to fragments in Mobile harbor by one of these deadly implements. At the siege of Charleston a monitor stood in so close to Fort Sumter that for twenty minutes she lay immediately above a large Confederate torpedo, connected by wires with a magnetic battery on shore. The electric fluid was shot along the wires until they were red-hot; but the torpedo failed to explode, and it was subsequently found that a cart had passed over the wires while they were exposed upon the sand fringing the seacoast, and that their power to convey electricity was thereby neutralized.—New York Tribune.

Venus of Milo.

The report that the arms of the Venus of Milo have been discovered is confirmed by a letter received at the State Department in Washington from Gen. Meredith Read, our Charge d'Affaires at Athens. He writes that they were found on the Island of Milo, at a distance of less than thirty feet from the place where the statue itself was found in 1820. He says: "The arms are exquisitely modeled. One holds a kind of disk or shield. The workmanship and the locality compel even the skeptical to acknowledge the authenticity of these wonderful relics."

—Simultaneously with this announcement comes news of the death of Col. Voutier, the discoverer of the Venus of Milo, which occurred a few days ago at Hyeres, a health resort in the South of France. In 1820, when a midshipman in the French navy, Col. Voutier landed on the island of Milo, the ancient Malos, in search of antiquities, and noticed a peasant digging for stones in the ruins of an old chapel, who had unearthed part of a statue in a bad state of preservation, and, as he had no use for it, was beginning to cover it up again. Voutier, however, at once saw the value of the discovery, and bribed the man to completely excavate the figure.

That Tidal Wave.

Concerning the disastrous tidal-wave which submerged the western coast of Peru, S. A., last month, with great destruction of life and property, some additional particulars are printed. The wave, ranging in height from four to thirty feet, washed the shores of the Sandwich islands, causing considerable damage by the submersion of piers, stores and houses, and five persons are said to have perished. One effect is said to have been that ships lying in water twenty-four feet deep were left high and dry at each subsidence of the wave, and roughly whirled about whenever it returned. The sudden eruption of the volcano Kilauea, in the island of Hawaii, is said to be the cause of this terrible upheaval. Similar eruptions of this mountain have several times caused severe disturbances of the earth's surface.

A Pious Hen.

A hen crawled into a Methodist church, in Jefferson City, Mo., the other Sunday, and laid an egg in the contribution-box. While the minister was making an earnest appeal to his congregation for foreign missions, the hen left her nest, and, presenting herself in the chancel, cackled most energetically. The deacons discovered the egg when they went forward to get the boxes. The pious hen's contribution was adapted to the domestic rather than the foreign field.

ABOUT sixty of the Nimrods of New Hanover county, N. C., started last week in pursuit of an animal supposed to be a lioness. The hunters were divided into cavalry and infantry, and armed with every variety of weapon, from rifles to pitchforks. After a two days' chase the beast was overtaken and shot. But the game, when killed, was not a dead lion at all; it was only the carcass of a big yellow dog. To talk about lion hunting there is now considered impolite.

THE New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company have been experimenting for some time past to discover how long a locomotive can be run, with due regard to economy, without repairs. It is found that locomotive No. 90 has run 70,000 miles in eleven months without going to a repair shop.

THE City of Pittsburgh has fallen into a careless fashion of not paying the interest on its bonds when due, and legal proceedings, like a mandamus or some such thing, are now under consideration by the bondholders to make the city authorities punctual.

OBITUARY.

Fletcher Harper.

Fletcher Harper, whose death occurred recently in New York, was the last of the four brothers who together founded the publishing house of Harper & Brothers. He was the youngest of the brothers, having been born in 1805. James was born in 1795, John in 1797, and Joseph Wesley in 1801. The two younger brothers were at an early age apprenticed to their elders, who had in 1818 begun the work of publishing under the firm name of J. & J. Harper, in Dover street. In 1823 Joseph Wesley Harper was admitted to the firm, and two years later Fletcher was also made a member. In the year 1833 the firm name was changed to Harper & Brothers. The progress of this now historic establishment toward fame and fortune, the extent and variety of its enterprises, its liberality and thoroughness, the business principles to which it has rigidly adhered, have been too often rehearsed—and especially in connection with notices of the deaths of the other brothers—to need further exposition. Fletcher was the best educated of the brothers, but, singular to relate, his attention was directed exclusively to the management of the business department, while Wesley was the literary man. It is said that Fletcher, for a short time, was at the famous school in Roosevelt street, kept by Mr. A. T. Stewart; he may there have imbibed some of the business principles so successfully applied by him in after life. While he was learning the printer's trade, at the age of 19, he married, and he followed a pretty well-established custom of the Harpers in marrying so early. It is said that Fletcher was responsible for the establishment of each one of the periodicals, and that they owed their success to his fostering care more than to any other cause. "In fact," says one biographer, "he was the life of the firm." In religion Mr. Harper, like his brothers, was a devout Methodist. He had a pious fondness for fast horses and salt water, finding constant amusement during his declining years in ocean voyages. He leaves a wife and two sons—Fletcher Harper, Jr., and Joseph. The firm of Harper & Brothers is now composed of Fletcher Harper, Jr.; Philip J. A. Harper, a son of James; John Wesley and Joseph Abner Harper, sons of John; and Joseph Wesley Harper, a son of Wesley Harper.

John Lothrop Motley.

John Lothrop Motley was born at Dorchester, Mass., in 1814, and died at London, Eng., May 30, 1877. He graduated from Harvard College at the age of 17, and spent a year each at the Universities of Gottingen and Berlin, after which he traveled in the South of Europe, chiefly in Italy. He returned to America, and was admitted to the bar in 1836, but never attained any eminence in the profession, and practiced only a short time. His first literary work was in the department of fiction, and was inspired by his study of the colonial history of the United States. His first novel was published in 1830, and was entitled "Morton's Hope; or, the Memoirs of a Young Provincial." This was followed in 1841 by another called "Merrymount." In 1856 his history, "The Rise of the Dutch Republic," was published in London. It was speedily translated into German, Dutch, Russian and French, the introduction for the last-named edition being furnished by Guizot. In 1860 Mr. Motley published the first two volumes of the second portion of his work, entitled "The History of the United Netherlands from the Death of William the Silent to the Twelve Years' Truce, 1609;" and in 1867 it was completed in two additional volumes. This was followed, in 1874, by "The Life and Death of John Borneveld, Advocate of Holland; with a View of the Primary Causes of the Thirty Years War." At the time of his death Mr. Motley was said to be engaged in writing a "History of the Thirty Years' War." The diplomatic career of Mr. Motley began as far back as 1840, when he was appointed Secretary of Legation to the American embassy to Russia, and held the post for eight months. In November, 1861, he was appointed Minister to Austria, and resigned in 1867. On the accession of President Grant, in 1869, he was made Minister to England, succeeding Reverdy Johnson. He was recalled in November, 1870, in consequence of the disagreement between the President and Senator Sumner, the appointment in the first place having been secured, it is understood, by the latter.

Miraculous Escape from Death.

We have just heard the particulars of an escape from instant death which appears little short of the miraculous. About two miles below Albina, on the east side of the river, Mr. Carrico lives, whose occupation is that of a logger. His house is situated near the river bank, behind which stands a high, steep bluff. The logs are hauled to the top of the bluff, and shot down into the river through a chute. This chute is only a short distance from where the house stands. Last Saturday Mr. Carrico and several men were employed in sending down logs to the water. A large log was rolled into the mouth of the chute and started down. By some means the log did not get a straight start, and away it shot down the bluff like an arrow, on its "own hook." Mr. Carrico saw that the log would inevitably strike his house, and, fearing for the safety of his wife and children, all of whom were in the dwelling at the moment, he shouted at the top of his voice for them to run for their lives. They did not heed the warning, but even if they had it would have been next to an impossibility to escape, so rapidly did the log move. In a moment the huge piece of timber came down like a thunderbolt on the building. It struck one side of the house with terrific force, and crushed its way clear through. Mrs. Carrico was sitting in the house and a small child was lying in the cradle at the moment. The log missed the mother and, passing on, struck the cradle, knocking it into splinters and pitching the babe several yards to one side of the room. The child was holding a doll in its arms when the log struck, which was also crushed to pieces. Very strange as it may appear, the child escaped without a scratch or bruise, as did also the mother and other children. Mr. Carrico, as may naturally be supposed, was dreadfully frightened at the accident. He hastened with all speed to the foot of the bluff, expecting to find his wife and children crushed to jelly. Imagine his joyful surprise on ascertaining that they had all escaped without injury.—Portland Oregonian.

COMMERCIAL NOTES.

THE first week of the season on the Erie canal under a system of low tolls shws a great stimulus to business.

IT is said that the English colonies gained an increased trade by the displays they made at the Centennial Exhibition.

SINCE the first of the year New York has exported over 70,000,000 gallons of petroleum, against 25,000,000 by all other ports.

THE record of the last four months shows a steady decline in the imports of all woven stuffs from England except silk. In silk there is a slight increase.

WAR helps a great many trades. A paper concern in Ohio has an order for 250 tons of paper for cartridges for Turkey, and a Pennsylvania town is shipping about 600 tons of spelter to Europe as fast as it can be made, also for cartridges.

IT appears that the war in Europe is already aiding American shipmasters. The Liverpool Freight Circular says in long-voyage chartering merchants give a decided preference to American, Norwegian, Swedish, Italian, and other flags, which are not likely to be imbroiled in the present war.

AT Leipsic they have blown a bugle from the ramparts to awaken all the world. They want a practical way of telling how to detect butter which is not pure butter, and offer a $75 prize to whoever will discover one. Germany has tried to tell some grades of American oleomargarine from butter and gives it up.

THE chief engineer of the Government railways in Australia recently reported that the locomotives made in Australia were not only poor ones but an injury to the roads. He recommends that hereafter all engines be bought in the United States. He is right. The American invention runs smoother, pulls stronger, lasts longer, and costs less to run than any in the world.

THE New York Tribune says Europe is now taking a surprising quantity of American fruit. The purchases have amounted to over $2,500,000 worth since last June, compared with $600,000 in the same period the year before. Dried apples figure largely in this movement. This country has exported over 12,000,-000 pounds of them since last June, as compared with 522,000 the previous year.

CINCINNATI'S great elephant, the Southern railroad, which is destined to extend to Chattanooga when $2,260,000 more can be obtained to put into it, has passed under the control of a syndicate of well-known and wealthy citizens, of whom Rufus King and E. M. Shoemaker, President of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton and Dayton Short Line roads, and of the Consolidated Street-Car Company of Cincinnati, are the leaders. The city has already put $16,000,000 into the road, and some fear is expressed that this new move means that it will never see any return for this money.

FOR the nine months that ended March 31, the receipts of the Government were $201,282,115, and the expenditures $199,473,990. Up to May 23 the customs receipts of this fiscal year had been $117,610,622, against $134,771,093 for the same period in the preceding fiscal year; and in internal revenue the figures for the same periods were $105,496,735 and $103,949,881. It will be noticed that, while the customs have fallen away, the internal revenue has increased slightly. The expenditures, on the other hand, have decreased so much that it is possible to expect that at the end of the fiscal year the sinking fund will have been paid $33,705,806, and that besides that there will be a surplus of $3,000,-000 to $5,000,000. There was a deficit in the sinking fund last year of more than $3,000,000.

BIRDS killed on the Western prairies, packed closely with paper in barrels, and without any freezing or other artificial process of preservation, now go regularly to Leadenhall, and are sold and eaten in the dining-rooms of London and the West side by side with the much more expensive partridges and fowls which are reared in England.

THE NEW EL DORADO.

Some Facts and Figures About the Black Hills Mining Region.

[illegible]

The story of the Black Hills has as yet been written only piecemeal, and it can never attain to the significance which made the gold-hunt of California's early years worthy of special historic treatment; it is an episode, not an epoch. The treaty, the rumors of gold, the military prospecting tour, the irruption of adventurers, the Sioux war and the tragic retribution of Custer's death, with his brave men—are its incidents. The Black Hills have since copied the other El Dorados of these thirty years past, and furnished in abundance the delightful elements of Mr. Harte's stories for the benefit of his imitators.

A writer in the New York Sun gives the first really sober and probable account of the whole region that we have seen, and it is worth while to indicate briefly what he tells us, for there has been enough emigration thither from hereabouts to give local interest in the matter. The Black Hills are a mountain mass rising abruptly from the center of an immense prairie to from 3,000 to 8,000 feet from the sea-level, and pierced by a few cañons and gulches at wide intervals. They derive their name from the somber pines which clothe them; but within, as the fatal Custer expedition proved, exists a beautiful and fertile country. And it was likewise found then and made certain by the subsequent scientific exploration of Prof. Jenny in 1875, that the tales of gold there were true. It is said that the Jesuit missionaries knew it many years ago, and, having regard to better things than gold—namely, the welfare of human souls—they persuaded the Indians to keep the secret of the Hills to themselves. However that may be, they did keep the secret as long as they could.

The Black Hills embrace some 6,000 square miles, but not all this region is gold-bearing, and much of what may be called so is not rich enough to pay for working. The gold belt extends twenty-five miles wide for a distance of eighty miles along the Hills, from Bear range on the northwestern slope to French creek on the southeast; of this, the only really profitable district is that known as Deadwood, comprising the northern fourth of the belt, about 500 square miles, as rich as it can be with gold and silver—the "richest diggings in the world," according to old miners. Two streams, Whitewood and Deadwood, rise in the Hills fifteen miles southwest of Deadwood City, unite at that point, and flow northeast; the Deadwood is "the bonanza." On the gulch proper 200 claims are located, and on a half-dozen dry branch gulches (bearing such poetic names as Split-tail, Bob-tail, etc.) there are as many more, each claim being valued at from $15,000 to $30,000, and sometimes at still higher figures. For instance, the owners of a claim which yielded $1,300 in one ten-hour run not irrationally refuse $10,000 for a fifth interest in it; and adjoining this is the Wheeler claim, the crack one of the Hills, which yielded $97,000 last year, and now yields from $300 to $500 per shift. From bank statistics and the miners' statements the production of the whole mining region last year is estimated at $2,500,000, four-fifths of which were from Deadwood and its tributaries. This year's yield is calculated at $25,000,000, in support of which apparently wild estimate it is asserted that in the tunnel of one quartz lead is now visible ore worth $800,000 by mathematical demonstration. We may remark, for the benefit of those who may feel tempted thither by these glittering figures, that every foot on these gulches is taken.

In the Deadwood district, as extended by the Sun correspondent for his convenience, he includes Potato gulch, which is in Wyoming Territory, 20 miles west of Deadwood City, and covers some 25 square miles, full of streams, chief among which is the Redwater, 60 feet wide, 20 inches deep, and falling 100 feet to the mile. Here was found the biggest nugget of the Hills, weighing a little over seven ounces, and worth about $150. It was found by accident by two penniless colored miners who were sadly wandering back to civilization. They took shelter from a storm under the roots of an overturned tree, and by mere accident saw this lump in the clay. Of course they "located," and netted $20,000 by their season's work. Such stories as these are frequent, but to one such fortune there are hundreds of cases of ruin. One of the most deceptive statements made about mines is that ore is taken out which will assay at the rate of $20,000, $30,000 or $50,000 to the ton. Of course such ore is sometimes found, but the fact is that it is extraordinary ore that averages $30 or $40 to the ton.

The gold in the Black Hills is found in auriferous ores in well-defined leads on all the southern sides of the hills, which will only be developed when capital brings in machinery. In the rich portion of the belt, however, the gold occurs also in a quite peculiar deposit of reddish sand-stone, sometimes conglomerate, which covers certain hills, and does not possess a single recognized feature of a mineral lode.

The best authorities in the Hills agree that there is no chance there now for any poor men, though men with money can find there opportunity to invest it. All the territory that remains unexplored has no water, and without water there can be no mining. Discourage emigration, they all say; there are hundreds in Deadwood streets and gulches that are actually starving.

The False Balance.

Alas! what narrow creatures we are, after all! How distinctly we can see the "mote" in other eyes, so imperceptible in our own. How easily we can settle the question of duty for a tired, tempted, discouraged fellow-creature, and what a large margin we allow for our own weaknesses and follies! How seldom do we reflect that, placed in the same circumstance, we might be even more reprehensible than they whom we so uncharitably condemn! God help us—what if He so unsparingly and unrelentingly measure our motives and lives! Who if our unworthiness were the measure of His daily favors and recognition? May we then be more careful of our lips, the harsh judgment, and prefer the extended hand of welcome to the tempted and discouraged!

The Case of Dr. Ayer—A Lesson to Advertisers.

The insanity of Dr. J. C. Ayer, of Lowell, affords a terrible warning to advertisers. Here was a man engaged in the manufacture of a pill, not differing much from a hundred other pills which may be obtained at any drug store. In an unguarded moment he made up his mind that he would advertise, not in the picayune style of the ordinary dealer, but in a comprehensive sort of way, by which he could reach every possible purchaser of pills. He started with the idea of devoting half of his profits each year to advertising.

The result might have been foreseen. He accumulated money so rapidly that he did not know what to do with it. When he had rolled together $15,000,000, and had vainly striven to find some outlet for his ever-increasing profits, his mind gave way under the absorbing cares of his vast business, and he is now a patient at an asylum for the insane. How easily this calamity might have been averted! If he had stuck to the conservative methods of many of our merchants and refrained from advertising, he might have been passing quietly through bankruptcy now, instead of being loaded down with his uncounted millions.

It is a dangerous experiment for a man who does not want to become rich to advertise; or, if he advertises at all, he must advertise grudgingly and at long intervals, lest his profits should grow out of all proportion to his requirements, and he should find himself burdened with wealth. Advertising, conducted on the principle of devoting half the profits of a business to it, is, we repeat, a dangerous experiment. It precipitates a fortune upon the advertiser so suddenly that the chances are even that he will not know what to do with his money. The multitudinous pleasures of bankruptcy, insolvency, and "shinning around" for the wherewithal to meet a note are permanently denied to the man who advertises.

There never was in Europe or America a great advertiser who did not accumulate a great fortune. Let those who desire to live unburdened by the cares of wealth take warning.—Utica (N. Y.) Observer.

Turkey Sinking to Extinction.

Whatever Turkey does, whether she be steeped in her ancient poverty or rich with fresh loans, whether left to herself or strong in European alliances, she is still sinking, depth below depth, and falling to pieces. Some, indeed, hold out a hope that, if left to herself, she might carry out reforms; but on one point all are silent, and that is, what all these reforms are to end in, and what is to be the reformed Turkish empire of the future? It is a castle in the air. The Turks are incapable of representative institutions and constitutional government. Their pretense of it, whether honest or not, is an illusion. They have it neither in their race nor in their creed, nor even in their circumstances. It is the common assumption of every speaker, on whatever side, that Turkey is in this evil case. Whether she be oppressor or oppressed, mistress of her actions or under evil possession, it all comes to the same thing; that the world is seeing the last of Turkey. Her visible and awful changes are not those of development, but of dissolution. Then comes the question, Are we to attempt to keep life in the body, to infuse young blood, to inflate the collapsing lungs, to warm the chill extremities, and flatter ourselves we can make her once more a living thing? Is it possible? Is it desirable? Is it even right?—London Times.

Josh Billings Insures His Life.

I kum to the conclusion lately that life was so onsartin that the only way for me tu stand a fair chance with other folks wuz tu git my life insured, and so I kalled on the agent of the "Garden Angel Life Insurance Company," and answered the following questions which wuz put to me over the top ov a pare of gold specks, by a slick little round gray head, and as pretty a little belley on him az enny man ever owned:

1st. Are you male or femail? If so pleze state how long you have been so.

2d. Are you subject to fits, and if so, du yu have more than one at a time.

3d. What is yure precise fiteing weight?

4th. Did you ever have enny ancestors, and if so, how meny, and of what sex?

5th. What is yure legal opinion of the constitutionality of the tenth commandment?

6th. Do yu ever have any nightmares?

7th. Are you married or single, or are you a bachelor?

8th. Do yu beleave in a future state? If yu du, state it.

9th. What are yure private sentiments about a rush of rats tu the head? Can it be did successfully?

10th. Have yu ever committed suicide, and if so, how did it seem to effect yu?

Timber Pirates.

The Government is making war upon the timber-depredators on the public lands. Special agents will be detailed by the Interior Department to seize stolen timber and arrest the thieves. The agents are forbidden to compromise with the depredators. It is stated that seizures of timber have been made in Minnesota and Louisiana within two months the value of which aggregates more than the total amount recovered by the Government during the preceding twenty years. It is believed that this wholesale plundering can be stopped and millions of dollars saved to the Government by the increased vigilance of the proper authorities. In the mining districts on the Pacific coast, it is said, the cutting and removal of Government timber has been very great, large quantities having been used in propping mines and preparing charcoal for smelting ores.—Chicago Journal.

The colored people of Washington city are no inconsiderable element of its population, numbering, as they do, about 40,000, or nearly one-third of the inhabitants.

OCEAN'S PERILS.

Particulars of the Loss of the Steamship San Francisco, on the Mexican Coast.

(Gleaned from the San Francisco Papers.)

A peculiar, indescribable tremor was felt, the ship having struck against an unknown danger, cutting into the hull the length of sixty feet, and the water rushing in with fearful velocity. The ship was at once turned toward the shore, thirteen miles distant, gradually sinking. She had full steam on and grounded on a sand-bank. Fortunately three compartments were not burst. The Captain and his officers were cool, calm and clear-headed. As soon as the ship struck orders were given to get the boats ready and life-preservers on, as the danger of sinking was most imminent. A sounding between the reef and the sand-bank showed five and a half, seven and a half, eleven, and finally sixteen fathoms of water and no bottom. During the fearful interval while evidently sinking not a cry was heard from the passengers. There was little confusion, but silent, anxious waiting, although there were 187 passengers, twenty of them small children, and many young men never before at sea. The boats started for the shore three miles away. Not a passenger was allowed a pound of baggage of any kind, and when reaching the shore each boat was overturned and the passengers thrown in the surf. The scene was one never to be forgotten. A kind Providence preserved every life and all were safe on the Mexican shore. Fortunately a stream of fresh water was found between the mountains, where, with the stars for a covering and the roots and branches of the trees for mattresses, all slept. The Captain at once sent one of his officers to Acapulco, eighty miles distant, but fortunately the boat fell in with the gunboat Mexican, Capt. Lolor commanding, and, although under orders to get provisions for the besieged city, the inhabitants of which were starving for food, the Captain at once steamed off to the relief of the shipwrecked passengers. They were all taken off safely, crowding the deck of the gunboat, and next day transferred to the Pacific Mail steamer Costa Rica. Capt. Waddell and his officers behaved splendidly, and were brave, humane and unselfish. Capt. Waddell says seven steam-pumps of 160 barrels of water per minute capacity were absolutely useless. The whole bottom was out of the steamer. He has run the steamer over the spot repeatedly. The only conjecture is that the late earthquake, which was made manifest on the coast by a tidal wave, may have upheaved a submarine rock. The Captain was on the bridge an hour before the steamer struck and timed everything by his watch. Twenty minutes after she struck the fires were out. In that twenty minutes she was running in shore under a full head of steam, and ran forty-two minutes, making a distance of nine or ten miles, and then grounded in thirty feet of water on a sand bottom. The next morning a foot of the stern was seen out of water. The whole body of the ship was submerged. The mizzen mast was gone. The baggage of the passengers, furniture, etc., was constantly floating ashore during the day. The money of the passengers in the purser's hands, the ship's money, and all the baggage was totally lost. It was a run for life. The perfect coolness of all the men, women and children was extraordinary, there being only one instance of panic. A young man from New York, fearing the ship would sink, leaped overboard, but was rescued and taken into the boat.

The Remains of J. Wilkes Booth.

To dispose of certain absurd stories that have lately appeared in the public prints, the Baltimore Gazette says that President Andrew Johnson ordered the remains of J. Wilkes Booth to be delivered to his family, and that they sent John H. Weaver, a Baltimore undertaker, to Washington to receive them. A box was taken up from the arsenal building and delivered to him. It was found to contain a skeleton wrapped in an army blanket. On the right foot was an army shoe, cut open at the top its entire length, as if to accommodate a swollen foot. On the other was a large cavalry boot. A reporter of the Gazette examined the bones in and above the shoe, and found that the leg was broken just above the ankle. Still, the identity of the remains was not satisfactorily established, especially as there was no portion of the spinal vertebræ missing, and no mark of any bullet upon them. A brother of Booth's was sent for, who said that Wilkes had his tooth plugged with gold in a peculiar manner. He described the location of the tooth, and drew with a pencil the shape of the plug, which was of unusual size. The teeth were taken out, and the tooth was found plugged as described. The remains were buried in Greenmount cemetery, in the same lot with his grandfather, father and children of the family.

Roumanian Discretion.

The Roumanian soldiers look so well when they are on dress parade at Bucharest that some of the war correspondents have been beguiled into the notion that they can fight. An incident which a correspondent of the London News relates shows they would not have offered much resistance to the Turks if an attempt had been made from Rustchuk or Widin to forestall the advance of the Russians. There was a corps of observation stationed at Giurgevo to watch the Turks, and it occurred to the Minister of War that it would be a good thing to exercise these troops and accustom them to the sounds of war. So one night he ordered the alarm to be sounded. He has been heard to say that he bitterly repented having taken so bold a measure, for it took him a week to get the detachment together again.

Russian Soldiers.

Russian soldiers upon marches sing to while away tedium, and the solos, always in a minor key, and monotonous, are varied by very lively bursts in the chorus. The solo singer often improvises, and is usually accompanied by a man with a fiddle, a triangle, a clarionet, or by one who whistles. The ordinary uniform of the infantry consists of a kepi, a tunic, and pantaloons of dark green cloth, the latter garment being inserted in the boots. The gray overcoat is carried in a roll at the back, from the right shoulder to the left hip. Two cartridge boxes are attached to the leather belt in front. A canvas haversack hangs at the right behind the bayonet, and the knapsack occupies the back.

A WATER-WONDER.

A Baltimorean's Astonishing Invention—Propelling Boats Without Wheel or Screw.

(From the Baltimore Gazette.)

About three years ago an intelligent mechanic of Baltimore began to put into shape some ideas he had concerning water as a propelling power for vessels. He believed that by judicious manipulation a boat could be propelled without a wheel or screw. With an inventor's sublime faith in the correctness of his theory, he gave his spare moments to putting his ideas into practical form. He built a model and launched her in a trough. He "fired up" with kerosene and raised steam to work his pump. The experiment with the working model satisfied the inventor that he was on the right track. But between that model and the trim little Alpha, which ran down the bay on her trial yesterday, there was a wide gulf of hope, disappointment, hard work and expectation. The Alpha is a Baltimore-built boat, constructed on the tug-boat model, and as neat a thing of the kind as there is afloat. She is 43 feet in length, and has 10½ feet of beam. She is furnished with one 16-horse-power horizontal tubular boiler, and a No. 7 Knowles pump. From the pump to the stern are two lines of pipe, which strike the water about three feet beneath the surface. Two similar lines run to the bow. The pump drives through each pipe a 2½-inch stream, which enters the water through a ½-inch nozzle. With sixty pounds of steam the pump makes 180 strokes to the minute, each stroke driving a stream into the body of water. This is all there is about this wonderful device. And yet, under all the disadvantages of a trial trip, this was the device which yesterday enabled the Alpha to make ten knots an hour under sixty pounds' pressure. There was not a ripple astern, and no perceptible displacement of the water, except the little made by the cutting of the bow. She was backed and turned with perfect ease. To back the boat the stream is driven through the bow nozzles, and the craft obeys on the instant. If the boat were to spring aleak, the pump would simply draw its supply from the hold and go on with its work. It is claimed that a vessel provided with this appliance could not sink under ordinary leakage. For prudential reasons there were no experiments in this line yesterday. A remarkable feature of the Caldwell contrivance is that the power which propels will also steer. To accomplish this the nozzles are worked alternately from side to side, using the streams as levers, on the principle of the oar. There is yet another use to which this device can be applied. In case of fire on board or about the docks, a line of hose is attached to the pump, and in a second there is a floating steam engine which at least holds its own with anything on wheels. The inventor claims that his device can be profitably applied to any vessel, although it is mainly intended for canal service, where the demand is for a cheap propeller that will not wash the banks. Mr. Caldwell declares that both the first and after cost of his invention will be far less that that of anything now in use. The entire driving apparatus is below, and no part of it could be carried away by accident or design. The whole thing is so simple that there is not much to get out of order, and nothing that could not easily be repaired.

Our Civilized Indians.

The population of the Indian Territory is about 77,000. The wild Indians by blood, called "blanket" Indians, who do not cultivate the soil, are the Osages, Cheyennes, Arapahoes, Kiowas and Pawnees, and number 20,000. Those mixed with the whites and partly civilized are the Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws and Chickasaws. A white man marrying a squaw becomes "a white Indian," and a white woman marrying an Indian becomes "a white squaw." There are also a lot of "black Indians," who are negroes. Altogether these number 55,000. Beside these there are 6,500 "negro citizens of the United States," formerly slaves of the Chickasaws. They do not rank as Indians, while a "black Indian" does.

A Russian Dinner.

As a prelude to the more substantial dinner, the Russians partake of a lunch of caviare, anchovies, herring, smoked beef, sausages, cheese, kummel, cumin, and kindred beverages. The cookery is French, still a few national dishes, such as black bread; agourcis, a preparation of salted cucumbers; chtchi, a stew of mutton, vegetables, barley, and prunes; and iced soup, retain their place on the table. The choicest wines of Europe, with porter, ale, and kwas, a native beer, are drunk at dinner. Tea is sipped from tumblers instead of cups, and the favorite sort is bought at the annual fair at Nigni-Novgorod for about $20 per pound. It is yellow as amber, and includes the first picking of the tender leaves.

Peruvian Bark.

A lady was traveling with a troublesome barking dog in her lap. A gentleman, a fellow-passenger, complained of the annoyance. "Dear me, sir," exclaimed the lady, with an air of astonishment, "I wonder you complain of my dog—everybody admires it; it is a real Peruvian." "I don't complain of your Peruvian dog, ma'am," replied he, "but I wish he would give less of his Peruvian bark."

The 8,221 married women in the city of Providence, between 15 and 45, born in the United States, had 2,532 children in 1874-5, while the 5,919 married women of the same ages born abroad had 2,912 children; that is, the latter class, numbering 2,302 less than the former, had 380 more children. If the American women had in those years had the same percentage as the foreign born, there would have been 4,044 children of American parentage instead of 2,532.

A French machinist has discovered that, by keeping his turning-tools constantly wetted with petroleum, he was able to cut metal and alloys with them, although when the tools were used without the oil their edges were turned and culled. The hardest steel can be turned easily if the tools be thus wetted with a mixture of two parts of petroleum with one part of turpentine.

SCHAMYL.

The Circassians and Their "Prophet-Warrior."

(From the New York Tribune.)

The people of the Caucasus have long been known as a warlike, adventurous and semi-barbarous race. This region is about 700 miles long, and varies in width from 60 to 120 miles. No other country on the globe contains so many different nations or tribes. In Strabo's time seventy dialects were spoken. At present there are more than 100—Persian, Turkish, Finish and Teutonic words being among those that are found. The prevailing religion is the Mohammedan, but Christians are numbered among them. For a century and a half they were split up into an infinite number of clans or petty tribes, when the aggression of Peter the Great incensed them into organization, and in 1785 the encroachments of the Russians had become so great that the war cry was sounded, and it has seldom been silenced since. The Russians have, on the other hand, been greatly incensed at the barbarities shown toward the Christians of Georgia. In 1791 the Circassian leader was made a prisoner and put to death. War followed more bitter and desperate than ever. One of their chieftains, thirty or forty years ago, after years of hard fighting against the Russians, fell at Himri, with all his friends except one dead around him. This young survivor was Schamyl. He was 37 years of age, and said to have been a silent and earnest man, learned beyond his people, and believing himself inspired from Allah. They afterward called him "The Prophet-Warrior of the Caucasus."

His survival of the great conflict at Himri had so much of mystery in it for his people that he was regarded by them with reverence, and not long afterward he was again the sole survivor of a battle, and eventually established himself in full and complete authority over the people. He made his headquarters at a place built upon almost inaccessible rocks in the mountains, and fortified it with trenches, earthen parapets, and covered ways. So great did his power become against the Russians that in 1839 the Czar Nicholas, irritated by his boldness and defiance, sent a powerful army against him, with orders to capture Schamyl alive or dead. A great battle was fought, in which the Russians suffered enormous losses and Schamyl's force was annihilated, but Schamyl himself escaped. But it was a Pyrrhic victory. Every tribe in the Caucasus was enraged and in arms against the Czar, and helped to strengthen the cause of Schamyl. He adopted the guerrilla system of warfare, and in that the mountains and ravines gave him further aid. The Russians could not cope with him. He continually encouraged them to cross the boundary line, and when they had entangled themselves among the mountains of the ravines the Circassians would shoot them from the overhanging rocks above. On one occasion the Russians made a formidable attack, but were repulsed with a loss of 2,000 men. The Czar was greatly mortified, and sent another army and a new General. It was nearly annihilated, and the General Prince came very near being made a prisoner.

Schamyl then assumed the offensive, and in 1848, 1850 and 1853 more irruptions into Russian territory, at one time driving them back eight leagues. After the Crimean war Russia renewed operations in the Caucasus, and continued them until 1859. Her army seized the Circassian stronghold and drove Schamyl to a mountain fort near the Caspian sea. Here he made a last desperate struggle, but was captured and taken to St. Petersburg a prisoner, where he received considerate treatment. The country was conquered—at least Russia considered that the Georgian Christians would no longer be persecuted—and peace has since prevailed. In 1864 about 200,000 Circassians removed to Turkey, and made their home on the western and northwestern shores of the Black sea. English eulogists of those people have called them the handsomest, bravest and noblest of mankind; others have pictured them as semi-barbarous bands of outlaws, living entirely by plunder, given to polygamy, and selling their daughters in Turkish markets to the number, sometimes, of 1,000 a year.

Schamyl did not remain long in St. Petersburg. Russia assigned him a residence in Kaluga, 100 miles from Moscow, with a pension of about $8,000. In January, 1870, he went to Mecca, Arabia, and soon afterward to Medina, where he soon died in March, 1871.

Byron's Club Foot.

At a recent dinner given by Lord Houghton, of London, L. J. Jennings met "Baron Heath, who was Lord Byron's school-fellow at Harrow, and who, being his junior, acted as his 'fag.' He told me that Lord Byron wore a boot at that time on his withered foot, in which a plate of tin was inserted, in the hope that it would remedy the deformity, but that the foot ceased to grow at an early period of his life, and simply shrunk up. It was not a 'club foot,' as is commonly supposed. The boot was laced up in the middle. 'I remember it very well,' said Baron Heath, with a smile, 'and for a very good reason—I have often had to clean those same boots.'"

A Big Gun.

Artillery experiments were lately resumed at Shoeburyness, near London, with the eighty-ton cannon. It was loaded with a charge of 425 pounds; the projectile, a Palliser ball, weighed 1,700 pounds, and quitted the mouth of the gun at the rate of 1,600 feet in a second. The target was at a distance of 120 yards, and was composed of a sheet of iron two feet thick, traversed by oaken beams of fifteen inches. It cost about $30,000. The projectile buried itself seventeen inches in the iron, which was not thought satisfactory, but, owing to the heavy expense of each shot, a second trial was not made.

A German View of the Crisis.

Dr. Wirth, of Vienna, one of the most celebrated of German statisticians, argues that the crisis which has been ravaging the civilized world the last three or four years was caused by the excessive conversion, or rather perversion, of private wealth for public purposes. He has compiled a tabular statement of the amount of public securities emitted between 1867 and 1876, and of the payments made on them. The total emissions of public securities were $6,000,000,000, and of payments made on them $5,000,000,000. Of these emission s, $3,880,000,000 were made in the yea r s 1871-'72-'73-'74, in which the Franco-Prussian war was the principal source of expenditure.

The valuation of Boston is to be reduced this year $60,000,000, making a reduction of $100,000,000 within two years. It is claimed that the valuation for the purposes of taxation of real estate should be what it will bring at a forced sale, and that for some years past the land of Boston has been much above this.

The printers of Portsmouth, England, having under consideration a project to erect a monument to the late Charles Dickens in his native town, an application was made to the queen for her patronage. Her Majesty declined the request, stating that she has never assisted in the erection of a memorial to any person. The printers determined to abandon the scheme.

A Russian commissariat officer at Odessa was detected adulterating flour about to be sent to the army with lime and other substances. He was immediately tried, and shot within twenty-four hours after the discovery took place. The Russian Government trust that this summary execution will put a stop to these practices, which caused so much suffering to the Russian soldiers during the Crimean war.

M. T. Hatch, editor of the Newport (Vt.) Palladium published an article derogatory to one Miss Hadlock. A day or two afterward, as Hatch was passing along the street, Miss Hadlock threw a handful of red pepper in his eyes, completely blinding him, and then drew a large horsewhip and gave him a severe thrashing in the face and upon his head, and finally rotten-egged him. Both are respectably connected.

The negroes living with the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations were made free by the treaties of 1856, but the treaties did not stipulate that the negroes should become members of the tribe, so that they simply remain citizens of the United States, who are legally residents of the Indian Territory; that is, they cannot vote, cannot sue, cannot sit upon a jury, and have no interest in the schools and courts of the country in which they were born and bred.

SINGER AND POET.

"Make me a summer song, for music meet,
And ye shall hear it when you come again—
Let it be full of life
And sunshine and of flowers."
"It must be so," she laughing spoke, and then Struck the white keys and played a joyful tune.
'Twas winter, but I thought
The birds began to sing.
I waited till the frozen buds should bloom;
For then, I said, my song were better tuned—
Catching a sound of mirth
From the awakening world.
O friend—dear friend! The winter has gone by
But still thy poet's song will not be glad,
While the bright flowers of June
Blossom above thy grave.

Cancellation of Postage Stamps.

The Postoffice Department at Washington has for some months been constantly receiving letters from parties claiming to have discovered an indelible ink for canceling postage stamps. Impressed with the value of such an ink, which would effectually prevent the use of washed stamps, the Postoffice Department made arrangements for testing all inks presented, and agreed to adopt any proved satisfactory. A large number of inks were tested, but the result was so unsatisfactory that further tests have been discontinued.

AUBURN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Report of the School Year Beginning Dec. 11, 1876, and Ending June 1, 1877.

TO THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

GENTLEMEN:—The public schools of Auburn having reached the close of the school years specified above, I now have the honor of submitting to you the following report:

(1) Length of school year in days, 120.
(2) Whole number of boys admitted during the year, 231.
(3) Whole number of girls admitted during the year, 181.
(4) Whole number of pupils admitted, 412.
(5) Average daily attendance, 300.
(6) Percent of attendance, 895.
(7) Number of schools, 7.
(8) Number of teachers, 7.
(9) Number of pupils suspended, 7.
(10) High School.
(A) Enrollment for the year, 60.
(B) Average attendance for the year 35
(C) Percent of attendance, 88.
(D) Number of foriegn pupils, 11.
(E) Amount of foreign tuition.

REMARKS.—GRADING.

The system of grading adopted at the beginning of the year, has been found to work admirably thus far; and although I am satisfied that mistakes have been made in the grading of individual pupils, the general result is altogether satisfactory.

The plans by which your schools are now graded is identical with that employed in Indianapolis, Ft. Wayne, Evansville, and all the other leading cities of the state. By this plan all the pupils below those who are in the high school are divided into two general classes, Primaries and Intermediates. These two classes are then sub-divided, each class into four grades, called respective, A, B, C and D primary, and A, B, C and D intermediate. This system of grading will adapt itself perfectly to any possible increase in your school population; and all that now remains to be done, as the number of pupils increase, is to establish new schools, with grades parallel to those already existing. No more new grades need ever be established. The utmost vigilance will be necessary, however, in order to keep the work of each grade distinct and separate from that of all others.

THE HIGH SCHOOL.

Of the pupils who applied for admission to the high school last fall, so few were found complete to do the work, that it was necessary to admit to the high school room a large class of the older and more advanced pupils of the A intermediate grade. The greater part of those will be ready to begin high school work in the fall. It will probably be necessary to continue this arrangement unless an effort be made to secure the attention of foreign pupils.

INTERMEDIATE AND PRIMARY GRADES.

I had planned at the beginning of the year to place two grades of pupils under each of the intermediate and primary teachers; but finding that the C and D intermediate grades were too full for that, I was obliged to place three primary grades under one teacher, in one case, and one primary grade and half of the D intermediate under another. This arrangement was not satisfactory, but was the best we could make under the circumstances.

NEEDS OF THE SCHOOL.

1. Set of Encyclopedias, for high school.
2. Lippincott's Gazetter, for A and B intermediate.
3. Additional black-board in the ward building.
4. Repairs to black-board in high school room.
5. Matting on stairways of new building.

TEACHERS.

As to the professional merits of the corps of teachers with whom I was assisted during the year just ended, I need not speak here. I nevertheless take pleasure in calling your attention to the zeal with which they labored to accomplish the work assigned them; and I cannot speak to highly of their faithful co-operation with me in the arduous work of organizing the school.

Finally, I owe to you, gentlemen, an expression of my sincere appreciation of the courteous consideration and forbearance which you have accorded me throughout the year; and of the fact that no time during the year did anything occur to disturb the general harmony of our regulations.

A few Things that We Know.

We know that a disordered stomach or liver produces more suffering than any other cause. We know that very few physicians are successful in their treatment of these disorders. We know that DaCosta's Radical Cure will without the shadow of a doubt, almost immediately relieve and permanently cure all of these distressing symptoms. We know of thousands who are willing to testify that what we say is true to the letter. We know that if you will give it a fair trial, you will let us add your name to the "cloud of witnesses." Will you give it a trial, and do it now? Trial size only 25 cents. Sold by F. E. Davenport.

Prof. Parker's pleasant worm syrup is perfectly safe and extremely palatable. No physician required. Costs 25 cents. Try it.

Dr. Marshall's lung syrup speaks for itself. It seem everybody recommends it as the most reliable remedy for colds, coughs and pulmonary complaints. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

NO PEOPLE IN THE WORLD

suffer as much with Neuralgia or Rheumatic complaints as Americans, and no nation is so prolific in remedies to cure, yet we come in contact every day with scores who are suffering without having found the cure they have sought for. To those who have used

Lawson's Curative

we need only to say that it is compounded with the same scientific skill and care as heretofore, and maintains the deserved reputation which it has acquired by the wonderful cures it has performed. To those who have never tested the CURATIVE we urge a trial of its virtues for the diseases named below.

Eminent and Skillful Physicians use the CURATIVE largely in their practice, and prominent clergymen and editors recommend it from a knowledge of its effects.

Rheumatism,	Diphtheria,
Dyspepsia,	Sciatica,
Neuralgia,	Toothache,
Pleurisy,	Sore Throat,
Swollen Joints,	Chilblains,
Headache,	Sprains,
Lame Back,	Burns,
Erysipelas,	Scalds,

All yield to the magic influence of the CURATIVE, no matter of how long standing. It is only necessary to use it faithfully and perseveringly, according to the directions which accompany each bottle, and you will be cured.

Lawson's Curative

Is Healing and Cooling to Wounds, Sores, Burns and Scalds.

Try it and you will never be without it.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES

No dull times with us---Our trade continually on he increase.

No secret about it, simply purchasing our goods in large quantities of first hands and selling direct to our customers at a small profit, thereby saving them the profits of the middle men which adds 15 to 20 per cent.; even forty per cent on some goods. This saving we are bound to give to our customers.

Take tea for instance: The advance on that article from the time it arrives in New and is sold to the speculator, and from him to the jobber, and from the jobber to the wholesale grocer, and from the wholesale grocer to the retail dealer, is at least 30 per cent. As each of these dealers has to make his 5 to 10 per cent. on the sale, and then the retailer, he must have his profit, and by the time it reaches the consumer there is at least 50 per cent added to it. We cut all these off by ordering direct from the importer and selling direct to the consumer. When we first commenced our trade was two chests a month and now it is as many chests a day. So with all other goods, Sugars, Coffees, Tobaccoes, Fish, Spice or anything we deal in, we purchase at the first hands and resell direct to the consumer and save the profits of the middle dealers.

TEAS! TEAS! TEAS.

The reduction of 10 per cent has placed teas so low that now they are as cheap as before the w We have a good tea at 25 cents and the very best Gunpowder or Young Hyson at 90 and 90 cents.

There is not a more potent agent for removing or counteracting pain from whatever cause than "Lawson's Curative." For renewing and invigorating the shattered nerves, for headache, neuralgia, rheumatism and inflammation, it is the best known remedy. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

A staff correspondent of the New York Tribune finds no hope in the South 'for a speedy division of the Democratic party." "For the present," we are told, "political calculations may include plenty of Southern sympathy for the Presidents policy, but no votes for the President's party." This view of the situation has the merits of accuracy.

The offices in the Court House are undergoing repairs. The commissioners have decided to change the Auditor's office to the room now occupied by the Recorder. A door will be cut through the wall between the present Recorder's office, and the room in the south west corner, and the corner room will be used for the public sessions of the Board of Commissioners. This arrangement will certainly add much for the transaction of the public business.

Mrs. Getrost, living three miles east of town, met with a sudden death last Saturday. She had gone into the garden feeling apparently well and not returning for some time the family became alarmed and gave search for her. She way lying in the yard in an unconscious condition when found and expired in a few hours after she was taken into the house. The cause of her death was apoplexy.—[Hicksville Independent.

She was the mother of our fellow townsman, Mr. Getrost, of the firm of Miller & Getrost.

The fast train on the Air Line, does dot tarry long at stations in this county. Even Waterloo is given the go by, as it dashes by at lightning speed. Several passengers get off at Butler, where it stops a moment, declaring that it is too fast for fun. It runs at the rate of about a mile a minute. Old engineers dont care a cent about running the engine attached thereto, and younger but more ambitious ones are brought into service.

A Warning to Dead Beats.

Some professor of "Country Schools" wrote a column in the Waterloo Press trying in his child-like manner to injure Tom. C. Mays, editor of the COURIER. Whenever we see one of these "smart Alex's" write up an article against a man who has had editorial control of a paper for years we can put them down as "damphfools" every time. We'll wager our old hat that Mr. Argus has not paid his initiation fee to the club. —[Hicksville Independent.

Morton's famous letter on Hayes' southern policy don't just exactly please any portion of the radical leaders. In a nut shell it means that Morton is mad at the withdrawal of the troops in the south from the support of the carpet bag governments and their consequent overthrow, but if it secures protection to the negro and harmony to all classes, it means that Morton is greatly pleased with the Hayes programme. Morton may be considered as occupying an armed neutrality.—Goshen Democrat.

Commissioners court opend at Auburn last Monday. The principal business will be the granting of license to sell liquor.—Garrett News.

Look at our report of the commissioners' proceedings in to day's issue and see if their labors have been confined to that work above. It takes but a few moments to attend to petition for liquor license where the law has been complied with, while those for roads, bridges, ditches, &c., requires nearly their entire attention. To those who are trying to discharge their duties honestly, such a remark as the above is very unjust.

The county clerk issued the following marriage licenses during last month:

Benjamin F. Kline and Jennie Parks, James W. Grisier and Addie Wheelock, Samuel Stafford and Harriet Seeley, Curtis A. Washler and Christina S. The Re-Union at Warsaw.

There was an immense throng of people in attendance at the Soldiers Re-Union at Warsaw last Wednesday and Thursday. The weather could not have been more delightful, and the city looked beautiful, with its gay decoration of flags and banners. On our arrival Wednesday evening, we witnessed the display of fire works on the lake, and to say it was grand is to paint it but poorly. It was the most magnificent feature of the occasion, well concieved and most brilliantly executed. Out from the [illegible] spectators, a fleet of small boats passed to the center of the beautiful lake, and at given signal away went the hissing rockets, filling the air with streams of lurid light, while the ship on fire illuminated the entire surroundings. The boats were all decorated with chinese lanterns, hanging like wreaths over the heads of fair ladies and brave men. And the music from the bands stealing softly back to the shore where it fel upon the ear with a melody charmingly captivating. And the roar of artillery reveberating from shore to shore, adding its lightning flashes ever and anon to the grand picturesque scene. There was not a soul there that did not enjoy it, none who will ever forget its splendid success.

On Thursday the crowd was very large, estimated at fully 12,000. But we regret to say that this day, as a soldier's re-union, was not a success. Very few of the veterans participated at all, although there were quite a number present. One or two organized companies from abroad marched to the parade grounds to compete for the prize offered to the best drilled company, which resulted in a very thin affair, and that was all. We believe the managers did all they could to make it a success, but the hard times, the failure of parties abroad, and some little bickering at home, served to prevent an imposing display. We regret this, because we know that Warsaw is made up of good people, many who are liberal and enterprising, though it would surprise us to know that it did not contain a few like all other towns, who give nothing, and do nothing but discourage and resist all creditable attempts in every direction.

The banquet at the close was not patronized to the extent it should have been. The toasts and responses were in good taste, but the progamme was entirely too long. We would say in the interests of old soldiers, that a free dinner instead of a banquet would have been much more popular and satisfactory. A banquet is too expensive, especially these hard times. We have tried to state our impressions honestly, without wounding the feelings of anyone. We believe now had this re-union been held later, say September, by which time some relief from hard times is expected, it would have been a success.

We met our brother editors, Gen. Williams, Major Zimmerman and Corporal Hossler, and very pleasant gentlemen they are too. They have promised to be present at the meeting of editors here.

We met our old friend Capt. A. S. Wells, formerly of Auburn. Al. is one of those clever, genial spirits, whose face mirrors a good heart and a jolly nature. We met the "Boss Milwaukee" a capital fellow, whose name sounded awful funny to us at first, but you soon get to like it. Maj. Gilliaim is a pleasant gentleman, and the two may be distinguished as the right and left bower, with no joker in the field. Thanks gentleman, for all your kindness. We were very glad to meet our handsome friend, Col. Green, in possession of the Kirtley House. We don't know of a landlord that can get away with George in keeping a nice clean hotel. The house under his management has been thoroughly overhauled and it is now first-class.

The Wright House is still as popular as ever as is its gentlemanly proprietor, Father Wright. He is a handsome old gentleman, full of good humor and always obliging and attentive.

The Glee Club of Fort Wayne, filled a want greatly felt at the Re-Union. The march through Georgia was made under most favorable circumstances, and the guidance of Maj. "Corkings." Capt. Lewis, Lieut. Sullivan, Capt. Swan, Lieut. Stratton, Capt. Walter, Lieut. Fike and others composed this club, and delighted every body with excellent music. They are all good boys, true soldiers. The Club was reinforced by Gen. Devereaux, Col. Zollinger, D. Fisher, Sam. Thanhouser, and A. Purman, and then they did sing.

We are obliged to attorney Encell and so is the club, for courtesies, during our stay. He is an able, brilliant gentleman, a prince of good fellows.

Editorial Convention.

The regular annual convention of the Editorial Association of Northern Indiana, will be held at Auburn, DeKalb county, on Thursday and Friday, June 21st and 22d, 1877. It is the request of the Editors of DeKalb county that all members be in attendance on Thursday afternoon, as they have made arrangements for a moonlight excursion on Thursday evening. DeKalb county has had a representative at every meeting of the association, and it is the desire of the members from that county that each [illegible].

By order of J. H. STOLL, President.

HERBERT S. FASSETT,
Sec. Editorial Association Northern Ind.
South Bend, Ind., June 5th, 1877.

Quin Hossler, of the Warsaw Republican, is very reckless in his compliments. He said last week: One of the principal features of the Re union was the Fort Wayne Glee Club, led by the Hon. Thos. C. Mays, editor of the Auburn COURIER, who as a solo singer has but few equals. We were serenaded by the boys and must say that they acquitted themselves handsomely. Anyone who will look at array of talent composing the club will be satisfied that we could not say too much in their praise. The following is a list of the members: Scott Swan, Amos Walter, Thomas Sullivan, C. Fike, Hon. Bob Stratton, Capt. Lewis, and Gen. Devereaux, with Major Calkins, of Rochester, as musical director. The club was reinforced by Dave Fisher and A. A. Purman on Thursday at 3:30 P. M. Their "Marching Through Georgia" was indescribable.

Tom. Brown, the man who is sliding around Washington in Holman's slippers and gown, is not in favor of "Buck" Terrell as pension Agent at Indianapolis. Morton thinks this is flat burglary on the part of Brown, who is working ten hours a day for the insertion of one Watts—not he of Oregon, nor the sweet singer of Zion—into the office. Terrell "gags" some of the Republican leaders, but Morton swears by all the gods in the Hindoo calendar that Terrell shall stay in if he has to sit astride his back to keep him in, and threatens if Buck is ousted to step over the line into Michigan, seize the State of Indiana by the upper edge, and "up end" it into the Ohio River and dam it (the river). He thinks he has the power to do it. These unhappy differences among the Republicans make us feel very, very sad. We are enveloped in gloom, and filled with despair. We could weep if the tear ducts were in a proper state of repair. As it is, a feeling of melancholy steals over us like a Wabash fog over the clipper-built form of the ancient mariner of Vigo.

Dr. Harter's fever and ague specific has cured when all other remedies have failed. You can always depend upon it. For sale by F. E. Davenport.

The Editors' Convention.

It is not generally known yet that the editors of Northern Indiana will swoop down upon us next week, and remain in our city for a day or two. The regular meeting of the Northern Indiana Editorial Association will convene here on Thursday and Friday of next week. They are not a bad set of gentlemen, and more than ordinary police regulations will not be necessary. We would like to receive them cordially and in good taste. It is hoped that they will arrive here by Thursday noon so [illegible] es as per programme. It is contemplated to give an excursion to Pleasant Lake Thursday evening, going at six and returning a 11 o'clock. On their return it would be proper to have a lunch spread for their benefit. The Cornet band have promised their services, and Col. Simmons has tendered the use of his grounds at Pleasant Lake.

THE WAR CALDRON.

Double, double, toils and troubles!
Burns the fire, the caldron bubbles!
And the hell-broth boiling over,
We its elements discover,
From the bottom spring to light
Brain of wily Muscovite,
And his hand, its gauntlet hid
In the skin of peaceful kid,
And his tongue of treachery
Cancered with a chronic lie,
And a flintstone, shaped with art
To the semblance of a heart.
First stock, these, for broth of war
Cooked in kitchen of the Czar.
Double, double, toils and troubles!
Burns the fire, the caldron bubbles!
Hissed from out that seething pot,
Comes a whisper, "Trust him not!
Murd'rous is the Islamite!
Slav, ere smitten, rise and smite!"

After pause, the same voice, "Lo!
Islamite! the Christian foe
Plots thy death this very hour;
[illegible] crush the Giaour!"

Double, double, toils and troubles!
Burns the fire, the caldron bubbles!
Straightway from its lips of hate
Burst all sounds of mortal wail—
Shriek of woman, infant's cry,
Strong man's shout of agony.
[illegible], then, opes a flood
Mixed of lustful flame and blood,
Lo! the doomed, the dead, the dying;
Lo! the chaser and the flying;
Lo! the headsman's grisly knife;
Lo! the shreds of comely life;
Awful eyes in dying stare;
Hands lopped off in act of prayer;
Limbless trunk and trunkless head;
Beauty's flower dishonored—
All across the ghastly spate,
Whirled by murder, lust and hate,
Drunk with venom from the tongue
That o'er the land fear's poison flung.
Lo! the whisp'rer's handiwork,
Wrought on Christian and on Turk;
Lo! its ingredients, sleeping got,
By "Holy Russia" for the pot.

From its center casting up
Yankee cartridge, gun of Krupp;
Tons of Russian bounce and brag;
Half unfurled, the Prophet's flag;
Bulls and bears of every nation,
Goring, roaring, "Death! Damnation!"
Armies swarming 'cross the Pruth;
Not one little word of truth;
Then a lull, half hope, half fear,
And, with eyeballs red and blear,
Oozes forth sleek Ignatieff,
Whisp'ring, "War to us is grief;
But from oath there's no recoiling—
Czar has sworn—his blood is boiling—
His great name is compromised;
Then, our troops are mobilized;
We've borne the last that honor may,
In vain, my Lord. Oh, by the way,
Perhaps, if set in different key,
The beastly Turk might fail to see
The moral of that little song,
And take and sing it! Can't be wrong
To hoodwink him in such a cause;
Well, sing he must, or lose his claws;
For, as I said, we're compromised,
And, zounds! your Lordship, mobilized."

THE SEXTON'S GHOST.

Simon Grayberry, the old sexton of Bushport, was dying. Bushport was a respectable little fishing village perched on a saucy-looking bluff right over the ocean; at its foot was a snug little cove, running up in sandy beach to the very base of the rock, where the fishing craft lay cozily at anchor, when they were not scudding over the waves miles away, or rocking idly to the music of the fish-lines and the dancing of the porpoises.

Bushport had one church (Methodist) and one graveyard, where Simon Grayberry had, for years too many to remember, supervised the departure from earth of the sires and grandsires of the hardy young fishermen who were now growing up around him. Simon had grown gray in the service of the dead, among whom, ten years before, he had deposited the last remains of his faithful wife; and now the gathering shadows of the final summons told him that he, too, must prepare to join those silent ones in their last resting-place.

Three years before, Simon had parted with his only son, a hardy sailor, who had gone on a whaling voyage. Six months later news had come that the ship had sunk in the northern seas, and all on board had perished. All in the village mourned the stout-hearted Tom Grayberry, who had grown up, man and boy, among them; but chiefly had mourned a little fair-haired creature, just in her teens, to whom Tom had been more than to any other.

Alice Scott, so had grief matured her, had grown into womanhood in those thirty months, and she it was who, taking upon herself the duties of a daughter to him who had none, had devoted herself to him ever since; until the old man had learned to regard her as such, and to grieve for his lost son chiefly that his sad fate had prevented the possibility of her ever becoming so in very truth. She it was who now sat beside Simon's wasted form, held his hand, and watched the last spark of life as it flickered low before the final darkness.

Simon had been respected in his day and generation, and all the village waited sadly for news of his departure. A few of the older men, rough, hard-featured fishermen, stood at his bedside, while one or two of their wives, rough, too, but kindly disposed, ministered to his few remaining necessities. The doctor stood near him, and held his hand; the tallow candle on the table flickered, as a draught of wind burst in under the door and rattled the casement; storm gusts held high carnival outside; for it was in the last days of November, and the snow-clouds were sailing on heavily freighted. Suddenly the doctor raised his hand warningly. Alice rose and leaned over the bed, while the rest drew closer together, and then the head and shoulders raised painfully in the bed, the dull eyes lighted up, and, with one skinny forefinger pointing to the door, while his gray locks and matted beard trembled with a convulsive motion, the old sexton spoke:

"One, two, three, four, five! Five rings, one bracelet, two pins! Who shall have them? Tom shall have them! Who says it's robbery?"

The old man turned his head from one side to the other, and glanced at the startled and horrified faces gathered around him; and then he [illegible] in a whisper:

"I buried—them—under—the—"

The chin fell heavily on his breast and he sank down into the bed in a confused mass.

There was much talk the next day about the last words of old Simon, and though sundry wise heads were shaken, and some shrewd doubts were expressed, they were generally set down as the last, incoherent exclamations of a brain which had ceased to act lucidly, and were passed over.

The body was properly laid out; watchers came forward to sit up with it; and the next day following was appointed for the funeral services.

Old Simon's cottage was near the graveyard; his body lay on the bed where he had laid for forty years; and the little sitting-room next to it was occupied on the watch night by the two old crones who had volunteered for the purpose.

A bright fire blazed on the hearth; the table, with two lighted candles, stood beside it; the tea-kettle sang noisily on the hob; and these two, sitting comfortably in their Boston rockers, were inclined to take the night easily, and chatted over the merits and peculiarities of the dead, the strange occurrence of his last moments, and anything that turned up in the way of village gossip, as those will who accustom themselves to such duties. Meanwhile the snow-storm that had been promising a visit had all day been busy, and now was drifting into white masses through the street, and whirling in blinding clouds through the air, while not a single being in the whole village was out of doors, and in the houses warm fires and hot drinks did their best to make things cozy and comfortable. So the hours wore away, and, as the evening grew late, the two old crones, grown tired of gossip, had nodded their frowsy old heads at one another until both had gone off into a profound and noisy sleep.

Now, down the street, a short distance from Simon Grayberry's cottage, there was a tavern, and in the bar-room, where a huge wood fire was crackling and hissing up the wide-mouthed chimney, there were congregated, as usually congregated there in winter nights, a dozen or so of the inhabitants of the village, who met thus nightly to enjoy their punch and their pipes in social communion. This night, in particular, pipes and punch were in extraordinary demand. The season had been so open and free from storms that this was really the first occasion that had offered for such a gathering, and it had been taken advantage of by more than the usual quota of jolly, weatherbeaten tars, who sat and canvassed, sententiously, such subjects as came before them. Among them, naturally enough, the question of Sexton Grayberry's remarkable utterances at his off-going was brought prominently forward.

"Blarst my hyes!" said "English Bob," as he was called, a burly, good-natured-looking fellow, who leaned back against the mantel, and talked, in a husky voice, through a cloud of "the essence of old Virginia;" "I've a hidea the ole chap's been a priggin' summat as laid 'eavy on 'is conshuns."

"Nonsense!" answered the landlord, seeing no one else was likely to take it up; "old Simon was as honest as they make 'em; and, beside, where on earth could he find anything to 'prig' in this consumed poor place?"

This was unanswerable, and the vilifier of the dead was silenced for a moment.

Presently a long, lean, slab-sided, lantern-jawed Yankee peddler, who had come in belated and put up for the night, put in his word. He was dressed in a faded, seedy-looking suit of black, and presented anything but an inviting appearance. He had been silent thus far, had heard the story of the deathbed scene told and retold, and now, as he sat with his legs crossed and his chair tilted back, he drawled out:

"Waal, I'm a stranger here, and hain't got no call to meddle with things that don't consarn me, but if it was so as I hed any interest in these parts I should be kinder lookin' round after the family jewelry, and if the live people's plunder was all right, I should—well I should hev my suspicions!"

Everybody stared at that, and the landlord, who felt bound to support the credit of his deceased friend, had already opened his mouth to call the vituperative vender of small wares to order, when the door opened, and his wife called him, with such evident earnestness that he turned at once, abandoned his intention, and followed her out of the room.

Every effort was now made to bring the peddler to book, and induce him to explain his meaning; but nothing more could be got out of him than:

"Waal, I ain't a-goin' to consarn myself in what ain't none of my bus'ness, but I only say, if it was my case, I should be suspicious!"

Sundry growls and sour looks were beginning to show that his indefinite advice was not palatable, and might be resented; and matters, in fact, were beginning to assume a squally appearance, when the landlord re-entered.

"Boys," said he, "my wife and I ain't nowise satisfied about the Boston coach not coming in; she's more than three hours late, and, though it is a rough night, she ought to have been here before this; and, in my humble opinion, she's a darned sight more importance than that darned purveyor of pins and needles' suspicions about what he don't know nothing consarnin."

Here he jerked his thumb in the direction of the peddler, who shrugged his shoulders and said nothing.

Now the village of Bushport was situated just [illegible] miles north-and-by-east of the [illegible] city of Boston; from which place there came, three times a week, a coach bearing the mail, leaving Boston at [illegible] in the afternoon, and performing the journey in about four hours, if nothing interrupted of a nature calculated to prevent safe and moderately rapid driving.

This was the [illegible] day," and, punctually as [illegible], the vehicle, painted blue, and [illegible] named the "Bluebird," [illegible] started jauntily forth, out of the [illegible] narrow street in the suburbs [illegible], and, with three passengers [illegible] way-stations and one [illegible] for Bushport, took its [illegible] cross-roads, in a direction [illegible] leeward, through what was [illegible] respectable snow-storm, [illegible] the journey before the roads became so blocked up as to utterly preclude wheeling; for the snow-storm had come on suddenly, and the Bluebird's runners were at Bushport.

The first ten miles were made in two hours and a half, and there the last "inside" left the coach rejoicing.

Eleven miles to go, the snow drifting heavily, and a blinding wind driving in the faces of the driver and the one "outside," who said he was a sailor, and laughed to scorn the idea of "going below on account of a blasted little snow-squall."

Seven miles further on, the Bluebird stopped to change horses, and driver and "outside" went into the little tavern to get supper.

A fine, stalwart, sailor-looking fellow was the "outside;" tall and handsome, with chestnut curls all over his head and down on his white forehead; laughing blue eyes shining through the drops of wet that hung on his eyelashes; rosy cheeks, that glistened after the pelting they had received. Driver and "outside" were both urged to put up for the night; but the driver was plucky, and would not be bluffed off bringing his mail in, and the "outside" swore, with a very salt oath, that he would get to Bushport that night if he had to walk there.

So the supper was eaten, two hot toddies swallowed, and, with two lighted pipes in mouth, driver and "outside" mounted on the box, and the whip cracked, and away they went again into the driving wind, and through the drifting snow.

It was now past 9, and, though the coach [illegible], [illegible] but little headway, the smoking horses having desperate hard work to keep on at a fast walk.

Two of the four miles had been passed over when, as the coach made a sharp turn round a bend in the road, which the wind had blown dry, the off fore-wheel struck a tree, which an unlucky blast had blown across the road, and, with a jolt and a heave, over went the Bluebird, and away flew driver and "outside" into a drift, where they disappeared to crawl out again, shake themselves, and stare lugubriously at the downfallen vehicle. Fortunately, they were near a farm-house, and thither both betook themselves, and, obtaining assistance, the horses were soon housed in a comfortable barn. The driver then announced his intention of accepting the cordial invitation they both received to remain all night, but the "outside," game to the last, resisted every solicitation, and, after warming himself, outwardly by the fire, and inwardly with a glass of "summat hot," swung a bundle which he carried over his shoulder, and, with a stout stick in his hand, plunged resolutely into the snow again.

The farm-house door closed behind him, and, as he gained the road, marked only by the long white line between the fields and woods on either side, he almost felt inclined to give it up; but he was a courageous fellow, this sailor, and, stifling the momentary weakness, he trudged on. It was past 11 when the lights of the village appeared, and, with a sigh of relief, he stepped more lightly, thinking of the warm reception which was to repay him for this night's inconvenience, and many other nights' perils and adversity.

As he moved on, his thoughts took shape in two forms of expression:

"I wonder if the old man lives!" and "I wonder if she has forgotten me!"

The straggling houses of the village were passed; the old church loomed up in the darkness; a cottage near by was lighted up in one room, and he leaned for a moment on the railing of the graveyard, and hesitated.

Suddenly, as his eyes glanced over the well-remembered stones, he saw something move. A chill, more piercing than the cold blast he had been under for so many hours, almost froze his blood, for the sailor-mind is proverbially superstitious. But he stood still, gazed and waited.

It was a tall figure; white—of course everything was white—and it tottered weakly toward the gate near which he leaned. Presently it reached him, opened the gate, and, as he stood with his tongue clinging to the roof of his mouth, and his hair bristling with fear, he knew who it was—it was Simon Grayberry, the sexton of Bushport.

Springing forward, he caught the old man in his arms, shouting to him:

"Father! father! It is me! Don't you know me? It's Tom—your boy Tom!"

Then the old sexton stood erect, and, holding up his finger, whispered:

"Hush! don't speak so loud! I've got them, every one! I robbed them!" and he pointed to the graves. "But, Tom, I'm sorry! I'm sorry! And you won't tell any one!"

Tom put the little box which his father gave him carefully in his pocket; a dim idea of the truth possessed him, and, taking the emaciated form in his arms, he stepped with his burden to the door of the tavern, which was nearer than the cottage, and where he saw a light burning; and so, just as the landlord had made the remark concerning the lateness of the Boston coach, it happened that the tavern door opened, and a stout figure, in a sou'wester and covered with snow, staggered in, bearing in his arms the body of Sexton Grayberry.

"Bear a hand! Boys, it's me, Tom Grayberry, and this is my father. I found the old gentleman wandering in the graveyard in his night-clothes; he must have been out of his head."

Such a start as that crowd of fishermen got may be imagined. They retreated backward into a corner, and looked at Tom and the prostrate form at his feet as though both were ghosts. Finally the landlord clapped Tom on his shoulder, and said:

"You're Tom Grayberry, that I'll go bail; but the old man's dead, and we left two women a-watching of him up to the cottage; he died last night."

Tom had risen up, and stood looking at him for a moment; then he stooped down, tore open the long gown that wrapped the old man, and placed his hand over his heart. It had stopped beating.

"He is dead now," said Tom. "Come with me, some of you;" and, raising the body tenderly in his arms, he strode through the door, over the way, and straight on to the cottage.

The landlord ran ahead and opened the door, while the crowd followed at a respectful distance. As they entered the sitting-room, the two women rose, screaming, out of their sleep, frightened at their sudden inroad. But nothing recked Tom, as he carried the body straight past them into the bedroom, and laid it on the empty bed!

The whole matter was plain now; the window was open, and through it the old sexton, awaked from his swoon, had taken his fearful course. Tom said nothing about the box of jewelry, and two days after the old sexton was quietly buried in the little churchyard.

Tom stayed in Bushport many months; and when the spring opened he and sweet Alice Scott were married in the old church. And the good people of Bushport never knew anything more definite than the Yankee peddler's "suspicious" and their own imaginings about Simon Grayberry's deathbed speech, or the true story of "The Sexton's Ghost."

BLOWN TO ATOMS.

Particulars of the Destruction of a Turkish Gunboat on the Danube—Desperate Bravery of the Turks.

The New York Herald correspondent with the Russian headquarters at Ploejesti, in Roumania, telegraphs the following interesting account of an attack on the Turkish iron-clad fleet in the Danube and the destruction of one of the large monitors by torpedo boats. The details of the action are taken from the official report made by the gallant leader of the attack, Lieut. Denbasoff, to the Russian headquarters:

At midnight on the 25th of May four Russian gunboats left Ibrail under the command of Lieut. Denbasoff with the object of attacking and, if possible, destroying the fleet of Turkish iron-clads which lay farther up the Danube in the direction of Matchin. This expedition was organized with great secrecy, and only the higher officers at headquarters knew of its destination, though it had been expected for some time that an effort would be made to render the stay of the Turkish monitors in the Danube as uncomfortable as possible. About two hours' steaming brought the Russian gunboats to Matchin, where three Turkish iron-clads lay anchored in the stream, and without delay the signal to attack was given.

Lieut. Denbasoff made an admirable disposition of his gunboats, and in the conduct of the action displayed great courage and sound judgment. Taking the lead in the advance, he ran his own gunboat, the Czarovitch, in between the Turkish iron-clads without paying any heed to the heavy fire which the monitors opened on the approaching gunboats. Selecting the largest of the monitors, Lieut. Denbasoff ran his boat alongside and succeeded in exploding a torpedo under her side, causing a bad leak but not damaging her sufficiently to disable her. This partial failure was, however, soon remedied by the gunboat Xenia, which had closely followed the Czarovitch, and, approaching the Turkish monitor, succeeded in exploding under her a second torpedo.

The effect of this second explosion was terrific; the monitor began rapidly to settle down, and before ten minutes had elapsed she sunk, the Turkish cannoneers on the doomed monitor continuing with heroic bravery to fire until their vessel disappeared beneath the waves of the river. Not a soul of those on board was saved. The remaining monitors opened a heavy but ill-directed fire on the attacking gunboats, which, having accomplished their object, withdrew out of range without suffering any damage.

This brilliant action did not occupy more than twenty minutes from the moment of giving the signal to attack to the withdrawal of the Russian gunboats. During the action the Turks kept up a constant fire on the assailants, but the aim of the artillerists was so bad that not a single Russian was struck. The effect of this torpedo attack is likely to prove very demoralizing to the Turkish fleet in the Danube. It definitely settles the question of the value of the Turkish fleet in preventing the passage of the Danube, and will probably induce the Turkish iron-clads to remove from the too dangerous neighborhood of the Russian gunboats. Torpedoes are evidently going to prove their superiority over armor plates and heavy guns in this war.

What the Parisians Eat.

The cost of the daily dinner of the Parisians has been calculated by one of the French papers as follows: Bread, about 275,000 francs; wine, 250,000 francs; beer and cider, 15,000 francs; water for cooking and drinking purposes, 6,500 francs; sausages, pigs feet, etc., 8,000 francs; pates and crabs, 5,000 francs; oysters, 4,500 francs; eggs, 17,500 francs; butter, 11,000 francs; beef, 230,000 francs; veal, 20,000 francs; mutton, 35,000 francs; pork, 33,000 francs; poultry, 24,000 francs; fresh water fish, 2,000 francs; sea fish, 16,000 francs; vegetables, 200,000 francs; entrements, fine and ordinary pastry, 50,000 francs; cheese, 4,000 francs; fruits and preserves, 12,000 francs; brandy, liquors, etc., 50,000 francs. This gives a total of 1,268,500 francs, or about $225,000, with the addition of 5,000 francs, estimated cost of tooth picks, making altogether an average of 25 cents per head as the daily cost of the nourishment imbibed by the Parisians.

Strength of the Russian Army.

The most careful and trustworthy estimate of the strength of the Russian army in Roumania which has yet been made appears in the war correspondence of the London News. The army of occupation, under the command of the Grand Duke Nicholas, comprises 4 corps, 144,000 men, 32,800 horses, and 432 guns. The army of Odessa, under the command of Gen. Temecko, comprises 2 corps, 72,000 men, 16,400 horses, and 248 guns. The effective strength of the six corps is 216,000 men, 49,200 horses, and 648 cannon. In addition to this great force, three more corps are fully mobilized, and are now concentrating north of the Pruth. These three corps number about 108,000 men, so that the Russian army which will be ultimately available for operations in Roumania reaches a total strength of 324,000 men.

"May it please the court," said a Yankee lawyer before a Dutch Judge, in New York State, "this is a case of the greatest importance; while the American eagle, whose sleepless eye watches the welfare of this mighty republic, and whose wings extend from the Alleghanies to the Rocky chain of the West, rejoicing in his pride of place—" "Shtop dare! shtop I say. Vat has dis suit to do mit eagles. It has noting to do mit the wild bird; it ish von sheep!" "That is true your Honor, but my client has rights—" "Your gliont has no right to de eagle." "Of course not; but the laws of language—" "Vot care I for de laws of language, eh? I understand de laws of de State, and dat is enough for me. Talk to de case." "Well, then, my client, the defendant, is charged with stealing a sheep, and—" "Dat vill do! Your gliont is charged mit stealing a sheep. Dat is shust 9 shillins. Do court vill adjourn."

All of the New York city papers, with the exception of the Herald, are warmly advocating the removal of the State capital to that city, and some of the country papers are agitating for a division of the State.

THE HOME OF MY HEART.

Not here in the populous town,
In the play-house or mart;
Not here in the ways gray and brown,
But afar on the green-swelling down,
Is the home of my heart.

There the hillside slopes down to a dell
Whence a streamlet has start;
There are woods and sweet grass on the swell,
And the south winds and [illegible]
[illegible] the home of my heart.

There's a cottage o'ershadowed by leaves
Growing fairer than art,
Where under the low sloping eaves
No false hand the swallow bereaves;
'Tis the home of my heart.

And there as you gaze down the lea,
Where the trees stand apart,
Over grassland and woodland maybe
You will catch the faint gleam of the sea
From the home of my heart.

And there in the rapturous spring,
When the morning rays dart
O'er the plain, and the morning birds sing,
[illegible]
In the home of my heart.

For there at the casement above,
Where the rosebushes part,
Will blush the fair face of my love;
Ah, yes! it is this that will prove
'Tis the home of my heart.

A pretty young Americaness, whose Christian name is Anna, on receiving a cigar from a young gentleman who had not pluck enough to say he wished to marry her, twirled it playfully beneath his nose, and, looking archly at him, popped the question thus, "Have Anna?"

"Mary, I do not approve of your entertaining your sweetheart in the kitchen," said a lady to her servant. "Well, ma'am, it's very kind of you to mention it, but he's from the country, you see, ma'am, and I'm afraid he's too shy and orkard in his manners, ma'am, for you to like him to come up into the parlor," replied Mary.

They were husband and wife, and as they stood before a monument she asked, "What's the figure on the top?" "That is a goddess," he answered. "And what's a goddess?" "A woman who holds her tongue," he replied. She looked at him sideways, and began planning how to make a peach pie with the stones in it for the benefit of his sore tooth.

The telegraph informs us that the General Assembly of Virginia has laid a tax upon the sale of liquor by the glass, and proposes to facilitate its collection by obliging each bar to supply itself with a self-registering bell-punch, something like those used on the horse-cars. Every drink that is sold must be tallied by the punch. The tax to be collected is half a cent on beer and two and a half cents on alcoholic liquors. This will give the boys a chance.

A Centenarian's Numerous Descendants.

Mrs. Milly Page, of Burksville, is 102 years old. Mrs. Page married at an early age, and moved to this county in the year 1806, and has resided here ever since. She had eleven children, and raised them all to man and womanhood. She has in this State forty-seven grandchildren, 110 great-grandchildren, and twenty-two great-great-grandchildren. As four of her children, with their descendants, live in other States, the total number of her descendants cannot be accurately ascertained. A number of her grandsons, ranging from 35 to 60 years, are residents of this county.—Burksville (Ky.) Courier.

A Point on Which the Doctors Agree.

Physicians who have tested Hostetter's Stomach Bitters concur in representing it to be an eminently safe stimulant, far preferable to the ordinary liquors of commerce, not only because it is medicated, but because it is infinitely pure. Its alcoholic basis is the finest old rye, and this is tempered and rendered medicinal by the curative ingredients of botanic origin which it holds in solution. It has often been imitated, but never rivaled, and is to-day the leading tonic, diuretic and aperient of America. Malarial fevers are prevented and remedied by it, and it is a thoroughly reliable medicine in cases of dyspepsia, constipation, liver complaint, rheumatism, gout, nervousness, urinary and uterine affections. It improves the appetite, increases the bodily stamina, checks premature decay, and as a sustaining and comforting cordial for the aged and infirm is unequaled.

Titans and Men.

"Blessed are the meek," proclaims the voice of inspiration, but can a man be meek with the consciousness that a dreadful malady is consuming him? We are not all of Titans. A Prometheus might stand chained to the torturing rock with a vulture perpetually gnawing his liver, and his face ever wear an expression of heroic and even meek endurance. But Prometheus has [illegible], [illegible] vultures (disease) consuming his liver, the modern man finds himself [illegible], [illegible] miserable. Fretful, gloomy, hypochondriacal, he sees the world and life all on the wrong side—the dark side—and whoever dares to assert that there is a sunny side he regards as an enemy, or at best a mocker of his imaginary woes. Unlike the mythical Titan, the victim of disease is not succorless. There is an arm to rescue—a balm to cleanse and heal. As remedies for this most depressing of all diseases—"Liver Complaints"—none are more efficient or popular than Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Pleasant Purgative Pellets. The Pellets effectually remove the effete and poisonous matter, while the Medical Discovery imparts strength and health to the entire system. They are sold by druggists.

THE soot from the chimneys should be saved. A pint of soot to a pailful of water will make a liquid manure of great value for flower beds and plants of all kinds.

IF a hen be not sitting so that her nest and eggs absorb a little moisture from the earth, sprinkle her nest and eggs every few days with water when she is off to feed.

FOR a fall or winter cabbage none of the new discovered varieties are equal to the old flat Dutch. And it will do yet to sow the seeds for plants, for June transplanting.

DO NOT put flowers in straight rows anywhere. Do not crowd your flowers, and especially not crowd a large number in the front yard. A very few and very choice is the best taste.

WORMS IN HORSES.—The Chicago Inter-Ocean gives the following as a sure, safe, and reliable cure for worms in horses: Arsenic, 1 drachm; sulphate iron, 2 ounces: mix, and divide into sixteen papers—one powder to be given every night and morning mixed in the food.

AN English exchange says paraffine oil will destroy "crops of insects" when two ounces of oil are mixed with six gallons of water and poured—sprinkled—over them. It is effectual, too, when sprinkled over the seed before sown, and the subsequent growth is said to be wonderful.

IN grape culture it seems that the finer varieties, which grow weak and liable to disease, can be grafted on Concord and Clinton roots, and then grow as well and as strong as these popular varieties. The French have found this out, and are importing largely of these American kinds for grafting their own kinds for their vineyards.

HOW TO RAISE EARLY POTATOES.—The process is called the Fellier plan, and comes to us from France, and consists in being able to have new potatoes in January and February, equal to those ordinarily produced in May and June. Having selected a light, friable soil at least twelve inches in depth, make a hole ten inches deep, place a little manure, then fill in the soil. The holes ought to be two feet apart. The seed potatoes should be preserved in charcoal dust till the 1st of August, the moment for planting, and be steeped for one hour beforehand in a solution of half a pound of salt and one quart of water, about the middle of September mold, and at the same period in October weed, and earth up irrespective of the faded stems; then cover with a little straw; the tubers will increase under ground, independent of all exterior vegetation, and may be gathered in the early part of January, although they will not be fully ripe till the close of the month of February.

About the House.

MOCK APPLE PIE.—Take one and one-half cups of bread crumbs, pour over them four cups of boiling water, add one cup of sugar, one grated nutmeg, one teaspoonful of tartaric acid, and a small lump of butter; when cool add one egg well beaten.

FRUIT CAKE.—One cup of butter, two of sugar, half a cup of molasses, two-thirds of a cup of warm water, three cups of flour, five eggs, one teaspoonful each of soda, nutmeg, cinnamon, clove, salt; one pound of chopped raisins, two-thirds of a cup of currants, and slices of citron.

TO MAKE ROPES DURABLE.—To prolong the duration of ropes and retard their decay, steep them in a solution of sulphate of copper, an ounce to a quart of water, and then either tar them or immerse them in soapsuds, four ounces of soap per quart of water. In the latter case there is no smell.

WASHING CAMBRICS.—A table-spoonful of black pepper will prevent gray or buff linen from spotting, if stirred into the first water in which they are washed. It will also prevent the colors running, when washing black or colored cambrics or muslins, and the water is not injured by it, but is just as soft as before the pepper was put in.

CRACKERS AND APPLE SAUCE.—Mix the best Graham flour with cool soft water, making the dough as soft as it can be molded. Roll out a half inch in thickness and cut into cakes with a cookie cutter; lay on a baking-pan and bake in a quick oven. Stew the dried apples slowly until tender, in a porcelain kettle, and sweeten with sugar when cooked.

CORN BREAD.—Take one pint of sifted corn meal and stir into it one teaspoonful dry saleratus and half teaspoonful salt, then add two well-beaten eggs, one pint sour milk, and three table-spoonfuls sour cream; beat about five minutes, and put it about half an inch deep in the pan to bake; if you have no cream use about a table-spoonful butter or lard; bake thirty-five minutes.

POTATO CAKES.—Prepare a sufficient quantity of thick mashed potatoes, lightly buttered, and passed through a colander; add the yelks of four eggs; mingle well, and cook three minutes longer; put the whole in a dish and let cool; when wanted, roll them down on a floured table, give them the size and shape of codfish balls, dip them in beaten eggs, then in yellow meal flour; fry them in hot lard; see that they are of a clear yellow cover, and serve them on a folded napkin.

TO OBTAIN GOOD DRINKING WATER.—A serviceable filter may be readily made as follows: Take a common earthenware flower-pot, about nine inches in diameter and ten inches in depth. The drainage hole is stopped loosely with a piece of clean sponge. A layer of about two inches of animal charcoal is first placed in the pot, then a layer of clean sand, upon which a layer of three inches of clean coarse gravel is placed. The pot can be set over an earthen jar, into which an abundance of pure water will filter for all drinking purposes.

An Excited Warrior.

Taking five newspaper war-maps under one arm and a copy of the London Times under the other, Mr. White left the office and proceeded directly homeward, feeling more patriotic every moment.

"Oh! we're going to lay 'em right out, Nancy!" he said, as he dropped his hat in the hall.

"Did you order the flour?" she asked in a careless tone.

"Flour! What do I care about flour? The Russians have got Kars and half of the Turkish army!"

"Have, eh? Well, I hope that paper-hanger will be here in the morning. You didn't think to see about—"

"Right here is Kars, and right here is where the Turks got mauled!" he exclaimed, as he knelt on the floor and traced one of the maps.

"Did, eh! Say, John, can't you rake off the lawn this morning, and do you see about the whitewashing?"

"Will you talk about whitewashing when all Europe is convulsed with war?" he fiercely demanded as he shook the other four maps at her.

"I—I'd like those onion-beds marked out to-day," she replied.

"Onion-beds marked out, when this very copy of the London Times editorially predicts that 1,000,000 armed men will be rushing at each other's throats in less than sixty days!" There was a dead silence until his finger rested on the city of Erzeroum, when he shouted:

"Here she is! Right around here is where they are making the Turks howl for sugar!"

"By the way, John," she softly remarked, as she looked up, "don't you think that summer-kitchen will have to be re-shingled this spring?"

The girl who does general housework says he tore the five war-maps into 500 pieces, and banged the London Times against the wall with an awful thump as he jumped out-doors; but girls are sometimes prejudiced. Mr. White was in the corner grocery at half-past 11, saying to the proprietor:

"Don't it make your blood jump as you read of the European situation?"

And the proprietor raked the cheese-knife on the edge of the counter to clean it, and replied:

"Seems like I shall haf to kill dose poys who cut soap mit dis knife."

Slaying Rattlesnakes.

Arthur and William McCarty, of the Shohola Falls Hotel, near Lackawaxen station, Pa., went trouting in the Taylortown creek. A short distance below Taylortown they were stopped by the shrill whistle of a rattlesnake. Seizing clubs, they started in the direction of the sound, and, walking a few rods, mounted a small ledge of rocks. The noise of the rattlesnakes was heard in the brush beneath them. Arthur McCarthy leaned over the ledge and saw two monster snakes coiled upon stones, and their tails wriggling fiercely. Taking a roundabout way, the men approached them. As they neared them a fierce buzzing broke upon them, and, peering through the thicket upon a stony mound, their eyes beheld a terrible picture. The spot was like a black moving mass, so thick were the snakes. Though at first startled, the courage of the fishermen did not fail them. Walking cautiously toward the den the battle began. The encounter lasted several minutes, and seventy-two of the reptiles were killed. The remainder, estimated at 200, escaped. Those killed measured from three and a half to four and a half feet in length, and several had twenty-three rattles. The fishermen wore high leather fishing boots, and were several times struck by the reptiles. This den is about two miles from the celebrated Bald Hill den, at which two New York gentlemen, who were passing through the woods a few years ago, had a desperate encounter and killed nearly 300 snakes.—Cor. New York Sun.

Granite Railways.

A French engineer has proposed to establish tramways with granite tracks in lieu of rails in Finisterre. He is of opinion that this system is far preferable to the ordinary railroads. There already exists a vast network of what are in truth tramways with granite rails, worked by horse traction, in Northern Italy. In the streets of the principal towns and sometimes on the roads tracks of granite are laid in the highways. The surface of these tracks being flat and perfectly smooth, the wheels of the vehicle glide over them with the least possible friction. The conductor of each vehicle takes care so to guide it that the wheels always remain on the granite. The author of the project maintains that there is nothing to prevent the granite lines from being used by carriages driven by steam power in like manner as though drawn by horses.

WHILE bartenders are closing up their drinking saloons in the East, they are encouraging tipplers to further activity in the West. A Santa Barbara, Cal., saloon keeper offers to every one who takes a drink a numbered ticket. Every time a drink is taken a new number is given. At the end of the month the numbers are put in a lottery wheel, and the lucky number draws $25. Of course the toper who has the largest number of tickets is supposed to have the best chance for the $25.

HOW TWO WOMEN DIED.

Confession of a Terrible Deed Committed in Arkansas.

[From the Little Rock Gazette.]

The town of Benton, Saline county, is in a state of high excitement in consequence of the confession of crime made by Tom Staner, confined in the Saline county jail on a charge of having killed his aunt, Mrs. Harriet Staner, and Mrs. Taylor, of that county, on the 24th of last January. Thomas Staner said: "Some time last July I had a dream that I had killed two or three people and secured a large sum of money. This dream followed me continually, and I could not get rid of it. I knew my Uncle Mack had considerable in his house, and, on the January following, when he was gone to Little Rock, I went to his house for the purpose of killing Aunt Harriet and getting the money; I was working at Mrs. Gentry's, not far from Uncle Mack's, and I went through the woods rather quickly; found Aunt Harriet at the wood-pile; Mrs. Taylor, a neighbor, who lived about 200 yards distant, was also in the yard, either boiling clothes or rendering out lard. My aunt told me to go in, which I did, and sat down by the fire; aunt came in, went to the table and commenced cleaning some pig's feet and hogs' heads to make souse (hog's-head cheese); Mrs. Taylor came in and sat down; she was knitting; the two women asked me if I was going to marry the Widow Gentry, where I was working, and asked me other questions pertaining to farm and neighborhood matters; Mrs. Taylor got up, went to the table and commenced to help Aunt Harriet; I thought I would murder them as they stood, and, picking up the poker for that purpose, walked toward them, holding the weapon behind me. My heart failed me, however, and I sat down again without their observing my actions or suspecting my intentions. Aunt Harriet then went out to the crib to get some shucks to pack the souse in. When she came back Mrs. Taylor observed a calf out down at her house, and went down to put it up. When she was gone I took the poker, and, without saying a word, walked up behind Aunt Harriet and struck her with all my power; she fell, and I repeated the blow; I thought she was dead or I would have struck again; she only made a gurgling noise; I took the keys from her pocket, secured the money and then stepped on the gallery to look for Mrs. Taylor, when just then she came in at the south door, and, seeing Aunt Harriet on the floor, walked up to her and said, 'La, me, Tom, what is the matter with Mrs. Staner?' I answered I did not know, and, walking up in front of her, struck her on the head with the poker, hitting her again after she fell. I felt very bad when I saw them both lying in their blood dead, and would have given anything in the world to have brought them to life; this was about 11 o'clock; I was at the house maybe half an hour; I hid the money where it was found; I took out $25 which I gave my lawyer, Major Latta; I had intended to destroy the jewelry and keep the money."

Mountain Majesty.

Of Colorado's majestic creations the wonderful granite foliation in Estes Park call forth exclamations betokening rare pleasure from those possessing in their heart of hearts a whit of the artistic and sublime. Bare, brown granite masses rise high above the timber line, with now and then a few batches of snow to break the monotony, or contrast with the desolate, somber hue of the granite debris. Deep furrows extend down the sides of the mountains, the channel for untold ages of ice, snow and water, the agents which have broken down these rocky masses, and sculptured the forms which now excite so much admiration. We see also the smoothly-worn sides of the mountain, covered with a sort of enamel-like crust, as a mark of the glacial power. On the sides of the peak, at different elevations, are numerous small green lakes, reservoirs of the melting snows, with sometimes a visible outlet, and frequently without. The pines are often dead from the autumnal fires that have run through, adding to the desolation of the scene; these falling down in every direction render traveling almost impossible. Sometimes no vegetation at all takes the place of the pines, after the fires have passed through them, but not infrequently the quaking-asp poplar, with its bright green leaves in summer, and yellow in autumn, grow very densely, contrasting most charmingly with the dusky green of the living pines, and the somber brown or gray of the dead.—Rocky Mountain Tourist.

A Proposition to Divide Up Utah.

The best solution of the Mormon problem yet proposed is that of dividing up Utah among the adjoining States and Territories. Two contiguous States, Nevada and Colorado, do not to-day contain a sufficient population to justify their admission. Nevada has not 60,000 people within its borders, and Colorado has less than 100,000. Territorially there is no reason why the eastern portion of Utah should not be annexed to Colorado, and the western to Nevada. In creating the original Territory of Nevada, a large slice was cut off from Utah, and another portion might now be added with advantage. Such an addition might prove advantageous in improving the politics of that State, by introducing therein another element. And there is no doubt that the people of Nevada would take due care to punish polygamy within their borders. Colorado would be benefited by the annexation of a portion of Eastern Utah, and the Territories of Idaho, Montana and Arizona could with advantage absorb the northern and southern portions.—San Francisco Bulletin.

The Jews in Constantinople.

Gen. Tevjik, one of the Turkish officers stationed in Providence to watch over the manufacture of arms for the Turkish Government, has written a letter to the Providence Journal in regard to his countrymen. He says that the Jews are not restricted to any special quarter of Constantinople, as the term "Jewish quarter" would imply. The Jews choose to live by themselves, but their shops and stores are in all parts of the city, and they are subject to no disabilities of a social or industrial nature. The Jews of Constantinople are descendants of Jews driven by persecution from Spain, Portugal, and other European countries, and given an asylum by the Turks.

TARRANT'S SELTZER APERIENT. Murder in the First Degree is generally brought to light, but thousands of quiet murders, of which the world never hears, are committed by the administration of wrong medicines. The dyspeptic, the bilious, the fever-ridden, the rheumatic, are too often poisoned with deadly drugs, when the persistent use of Tarrant's Effervescent Seltzer Aperient with proper precautions as to diet and regimen, would inevitably have worked a speedy and thorough cure in kidney diseases, bowel complaints, fevers, nervous paroxysms, and all other ailments that reduce the strength and vital power of the system, sustain, refresh, purify, cleanse and regulate it with this invaluable saline remedy. Sold by all druggists.

USED IN HEALTH PREVENTS DISEASE.

TERRY'S SALICYLIC SOAP

(PATENT APPLIED FOR)

A Perfect Anti-Septic and Disinfectant Bath and Toilet Soap.

Takes the Place of all other Soaps for Daily use in the Family.

Manufactured from the purest vegetable Oils with the addition of that greatest known Anti-Septic and disinfectant

SALICYLIC ACID,

Making the most healthful, the most perfect, and the most economical Bath and Toilet Soap ever offered to the public.

Indorsed by the the medical profession and attested by thousands.

AS THE GREAT PREVENTIVE

In all cases of blood poisoning whether arising from malarial or miasmatic exhalations, defective sewerage, or any other causes.

Its constant use prevents the contracting of contagous diseases, typhoid, scarlet and all malarial fevers. It is invaluable, and should be used in all districts where fever and ague prevails as it is the greatest known preventive to that disease. It is of immense value in the cure of all skin disease; a trial proves it, and its use prevents contracting them. It is a special boon to school children who are constantly exposed. It is the most healthful bath soap for infants, worth its weight in gold in the nursery. It is no more expensive than other toilet soaps of good quality It goes further and its great superiority is bringing it into universal use. It has no disagreeable odor and is absolutely pure.

Extensively used in hospitals and sick rooms by order of physicians.

For sale by all druggists and grocers. Sample box containing three cakes sent post paid on receipt of 75 cents. Liberal terms to the trade.
